OBITUARY.

Death of Dr. Schliemann.

The recent death of Dr. Heinrich Schliemann recalls his years of labor in archaeological research.

Schliemann was born at Ankershausen in Mecklenburg in 1822. His father, a Lutheran clergyman, made the discoveries of Pompeii and Herculaneum frequent subjects of conversation, and almost daily recited verses from Voss' German translation of "Homer," inspiring young Schliemann with enthusiasm for the exploits of Hector, Achilles, Agamemnon and other heroes of the divine tragedy. At 10 he wrote for his father in bad Latin a description of the Trojan war, and was sent to a school at Neustrelitz, but at 14 his studious aspirations were cruelly crushed, his father having lost his parish.

In 1858 Schliemann visited Sweden, Denmark, Germany, Italy, Egypt, ascended the Nile to the second cataract, studied Arabic en route, and rode through the desert on horseback. From Jerusalem he journeyed through Arabia Petraea to Petra, saw Syria and Smyrna; and in the summer of 1859 beheld Athens for the first time. Foreseeing the financial crisis which would result from the American civil war, he secured his capital, speculated most successfully in cotton and tea, and in 1863 retired completely from business, possessed of a fortune such as his youth had never dreamed of. Schliemann regarded it as a means to an end—that end being the excavation of Troy, Ithaca and Mykenae. He studied Greek, and devoted much time to the study of archaeology, and spent some time in the pursuit of universal history. During November, 1864, he began a journey round the world, via China, India, Japan, California, New York, Niagara Falls, Canada, Havana, Paris, London, St. Petersburg, Moscow, the Crimea and the Danube.

Toward the end of 1868 Schliemann visited New York, most of his investments being American. In March, 1870, he made some small excavations. On Mt. Hissarlik he sank shafts, and found an accumulation of debris six feet deep. Forced to desist on account of the refusal of the proprietor to sell the land, he once more betook himself to Paris. Not being able to secure the land at any price he applied to Saveri Pachia Turkish, minister of public instruction, who appropriated the land and gave him a firman. Thus fortified he worked on a large scale in 1871, and became possessed of the idea that one half of Mt. Hissarlik—102 feet high—is artificial soil. Fever breaking out in 1872, Schliemann was obliged to desist for fear of the miasma, but in 1873 he was able to proceed more satisfactorily, and in 1874 published "Troy and its Remains," wherein he summed up the result of his labors. Obtaining permission from the Greek government in February, 1874, to excavate the Mykenae, Schliemann sank 34 shafts in the Acropolis to study its underground topography.

He made fruitless investigations in many places. He began digging in Mykenae on July 31, 1873. What was accomplished all know. Schliemann began simultaneous excavations wherever he thought he would find the five tombs, first in the citadel, secondly at the Lion Gate, and thirdly, in the adjacent treasury. This last was superintended by Mrs. Schliemann during four months. The treasures of gold and silver brought to light denote great artistic perfection, and demonstrate the existence of a school of domestic artists entirely independent of Oriental influence. Schliemann maintains that these works prove Homer to have been an Achelian, and his poems no myths. Compiling his researches in December, 1876, Schliemann at once began his book on Mykenae, which was written in English at Athens, and also prepared 300 photographs. This work occupied three months, during which time he turned one half of it into German, which appeared in 1877.

Gen. Francis E. Spinner, ex-treasurer of the United States, passed away at Jacksonville, Florida, on Wednesday evening. He was born at German Flats, Jan. 21, 1809. His father was a highly educated German clergyman. He was educated in the common schools but while he labored at his trade, he spent much time in study. He was for several years executive officer of the Mohawk Valley bank and at various times held all the various commissions under the Governor of New York, from Lieutenant to Major General of the artillery. He was County Sheriff and served his term in various important capacities. He was elected to the 36th Congress and served as Chairman of Committee on Accounts. In 1861, he was appointed United States Treasurer by President Lincoln, and confirmed after examination of witnesses and three days debate in Secret Session by the Senate, and held that position until July, 1875. His peculiar signature was subject of much comment and was probably better known than that of any man in the country.

He was a candidate in 1875 for comptroller of the State of New York but was defeated by his democratic rival. He was one of the pioneers in the cause of woman's rights, and took the initiative in introducing female labor into the departmental offices.

LOCAL LINES.

Don't forget to write 1891.

The West Peabody Farmer's Club held a meeting at the school house last evening.

The Murray Association enjoyed an old fashioned dance New Years eve, at town hall.

A crow bar lost from hose 1 on the night of the Crehore fire, has never been returned.

Mrs. Frank A. Newhall presented her husband with twins on Sunday. They are boys.

Joseph G. Porter returned from his purchasing trip to Europe on Tuesday on the Umbria, from Liverpool.

Mrs. B. A. Howard of South Peabody, was badly burned one day this week by falling upon a hot stove.

We extend thanks to our Lowell contemporary—the Vox Populi—for a neat and tasty calendar for 1891.

Mrs. Charles Benjamin, who had a shock of paralysis a few weeks since, has been removed to the Lynn hospital.

Last Sunday Mrs. William Distin fell on the ice, and sustained severe injuries. She is now under the doctor's care.

Installation of officers will take place at the George Peabody Lodge A. O. U. W., on Monday evening.

The Y. W. C. T. U. will conduct the service at the almshouse next Sunday. The barge leaves the square at 2 P. M.

The funeral of Leonard Pratt last Sunday was attended by members of Jordan Lodge of Masons, and Essex Lodge of Odd Fellows, of Salem.

Several of our townspeople have had their steeds out on the trotting grounds of Lynn the past week. Some of them compare well with the best steppers.

Rev. Thomas Jackson, a catholic missionary, gave an interesting lecture at St. John's church on Thursday evening, on the missionary work on Borneo.

The St. Paul Episcopal society held its Christmas tree Monday evening, and the church was filled with adults; all the children were pleasantly remembered.

A new striking gear has been placed on Torrent hose house. The time of the old apparatus was so slow that it was almost an impossibility to count an alarm.

Peabody can congratulate herself on being represented in both branches of the next legislature by Republicans. They will commence their terms on Tuesday.

The insurance upon the stock of J. S. Crehore has been adjusted. The amount paid is $11,992.37 which is about 90 per cent of the total insurance thereon.

Prof. E. S. Morse of Salem gave an interesting lecture to an audience of 400 or 500 in the Institute on Thursday evening. Doubtless the bad weather kept many away.

Before fitting up a business office for the coming year, send to Paine's Furniture Co., 48 Canal street, Boston, for an Illustrated Catalogue of Office Furniture. Their prices are very low.

For the next thirty days you can get at Distin's, the tailor's, a first-class overcoat for $28, other firms asking $35 for the same goods. Remember the place, Distin, tailor, 18 Main street.

The fine sleighing the past week has been improved by young and old, and every evening the mellow (?) horn has been heard in our streets. But alas! the rain of yesterday came and sleighing is no more.

Holton Lodge, 104, I. O. of O. F., elected the following officers Tuesday evening: N. G., Willard G. Cook; V. G., William F. Munroe; secretary, Henry Baerje; P. S., Geo. H. Manning; treasurer, George F. Sanger.

I have tried Salvation Oil in my own case for neuralgia and experienced much benefit from its use. It's very penetrating and always gives relief.

T. Davis Bros. to house ice with their sleds on Friday. The ice is about three feet thick, but a steel plane takes one and one-half inches of snow from each block as it passed the Spring pond is the scene of operation.

Atkinson & Cook's Minstrel Company gave a good entertainment to a very small audience in Town Hall on Monday evening. The manager believes what was told him in New York—that Peabody is the worst place in the country for shows.

Chief Peasley's report for December is as follows: Whole number of arrests, 22, of which 14 were for drunkenness, 3 for assault, 2 for breaking and entering, 1 for non-support, 1 for larceny, and 1 for disturbance of the peace; lodgers, 76.

The directors of the Firemen's Relief association held a meeting Tuesday night, and voted benefits to John H. Moreland who was injured at the Crehore fire, and to Harry G. Robbins who was severely burned on one hand in the deplorable accident in his home last Sunday.

There were several reports of sleighs being upset Monday. Jonathan King was driving home and he met a car coming down Lowell street. The sleigh got caught in the tracks and he was capsized. The horse car men set him to rights, and he went on his way, uninjured.

The storm of last week demoralized traffic on the street railways. Naumkeag cars have been run on any kind of time they could make this week, and it has frequently happened cars have met on the same track. That road did well, however, to get their electric cars running so quickly.

There is considerable complaint against the practice of the street railway companies of putting salt all along their tracks. It makes sad havoc with the sleighing, but it is an undeniable advantage to those who are obliged to ride in the cars, and it is debatable whether the practice should be stopped.

Owing to the derailment of the freight train on the Eastern division of the Boston & Maine railroad on Thursday, the through Portland and Bangor trains were sent round by way of Haverhill and passed through town. The sight of a Pullman train is rather unusual in this town, but our citizens have had an opportunity to gaze upon them on two prior occasions, under similar circumstances to those of Thursday.

A mention of the fact that a very valuable picture representing George Washington presiding over Alexandria Lodge of Masons in Newburyport, reminds us that John L. Colcord of West Peabody owns a picture representing the same subject—probably a duplicate. Mr. Colcord was at one time the proud owner of a pair of gloves and masonic apron worn at the funeral of Washington.

On Tuesday morning the sufferings of little Harry Robbins were terminated by death. The poor little fellow had suffered much agony from the burns received by the falling of a hanging lamp which scattered burning kerosene over him, on Sunday. The little one was sixteen months old, and remarkably bright and interesting. The parents have the general sympathy of the community in their distress and bereavement.

The first entertainment in the Unity club's course was given in the Unitarian church Wednesday evening, before a good sized audience, and a pleasing musical programme was presented, interspersed with readings by Miss Annie Coffin, who displayed exceptional ability in the rendition of the several selections which she gave. Mrs. Clara M. Fernald was the soloist of the evening, and was never heard to better advantage by her friends. She was in good voice and sang splendidly, winning well-deserved applause. The other numbers on the programme were given by Miss Olive Mead, violinist, who acquitted herself creditably and Miss Ida Mead, cello, who also favorably impressed her audience. Mrs. E. M. Mead was pianist, and Miss Georgia D. Learned accompanied Mrs. Fernald. Leslie H. Goldthwaite played the organ in the selections from Herodiade, sung by Mrs. Fernald. The next in the course will be given Jan. 28 by the St. Cecilia quartet.

The head of the president bent affirmatively before this impetuous voice; he dropped his eyes and touched the bell for the tipstaff.

"Accompany Anne Bede," said he, "to the house of the inspector of prisons."

The man bowed, the child turned obediently, but her little rose red lips opened and shook tremulously, as if words were on them that she could not speak.

"Perhaps, my child," said the president, noticing her distress, "perhaps you have still something to say to us."

"Only—that I am Lizette, Lizette Bede, M. le President: Anne Bede was my sister, and we buried her, poor girl! a week ago."

"Twas not you, then, that was condemned and sentenced?" cried the president, surprised.

"Ah! bon Dieu, no! Why should I have been condemned who have never done harm to a fly?"

"Then why are you here, mad child that you are?"

"Because, if you please, it is because Anne died while this business was before the royal table" (the lower court of Hungary). "It was when she was lying in her coffin all cold and white that this order concerning the six months arrived, certifying that she must submit. Oh! how she had waited and prayed for it, and tried so hard to live to receive it! She had never dreamed of this, M. le President, and when they had taken her away with closed eyes, mute and deaf for ever, my mother and I told ourselves that we must repair the wrong she had done because of her fiancé, Gabriel Karloney. It was for him, and without knowing it, that she sinned, and we thought—"

"What, my child?"

"That to let her rest peacefully in her mortal ashes, and that no one should say she owed them anything, that we must do as I said—repair the wrong done by her. My mother has paid the amende for the goods, and I have come, M. le President, to serve in her place the six months in the county prison."

To serve in her sister's place! What innocence, what simplicity! The jurors smiled broadly; the face of the president was no longer cold or ceremonious, nor was it precisely his brow from which he mopped the moisture with a large yellow handkerchief.

"It is well," said he; "you were right, my child, but—but, now that I think of it—"

He stopped, frowned, and seemed to reflect intently—"now that I think of it," continued he, "there was an error in this affair. We have, my dear child, sent you the wrong document."

"The wrong document, M. le President?" faltered Lizette, raising her great, sorrowful eyes to his face with a gaze of heartbreaking reproach, "the wrong document?"

She could say no more, and the president himself was no less moved.

"The wrong document, my child, yes," said he, firmly, rising from his seat to tenderly pass his hand across the shining hair, "beyond there"—pointing to the heaven above them through the mist veiled window—"Justice has given another verdict."

"Go now to thy mother and tell her from me that thy sister was not a criminal—that Anne was innocent."

"Before God, at least," added he, in a tone only audible to his own great heart, "before God, at least!"—Translated for Short Stories from the Hungarian of Mikszath by E. C. Waggener.

New Mode of Engraving.
A French scientist has lately introduced a process for the engraving of designs on wood, leather or similar materials by means of a pencil or tool, the point of which is constantly at red heat.

After a series of experiments with hot irons and platinum wire heated by electricity, a special tool was finally devised by the inventor of this process, which renders the operation extremely simple.

The tool in question is another application of the cautery instrument used by surgeons. The pencil has a wooden handle upon which is mounted a small platinum tube with a fine point. Two separate receptacles communicate with the tool by means of a rubber tube; one of these contains a hydro-carbon, such as alcohol, benzine or wood spirit, and the other contains compressed air.

A constant flow of the hydro-carbon vapor is maintained at the point of the tool, which is thereby kept in a state of intense heat. Both receptacles are provided with regulating apparatus, by which the supply of ink can be adjusted or cut off, as desired. The operation of tracing designs on wood work and leather is thus simplified to the utmost possible extent.

A tracing of the design is made on the article to be ornamented, and any degree of relief is instantly effected, very little skill on the part of the operator being required. The new process will be of the greatest service to bookbinders, carpenters and others, as well as affording a ready means of labeling cases, barrels, etc.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

The Mason and Dixon Line.
The Mason and Dixon line runs along the parallel of latitude 39 degs. 43 min., 26 degs. 3 min., separating Pennsylvania from Maryland. It was drawn by two distinguished English surveyors, Charles Mason and Jeremiah Dixon, who began their work in 1763 and finished it in 1767. The line is marked by stones set at intervals of five miles, each having the arms of Lord Baltimore engraved upon one side and those of the Penn family upon the other.

Besides these large stones set to mark each fifth mile, smaller stones were set at the end of each mile, these having a large P engraved upon one side and the letter M on the other—these intended as initial letters of Pennsylvania and Maryland.

All of these stones were engraved in England. The Mason and Dixon line was not the line separating the free and the slave States. The line settled on in the compromise of 1820 was 36 degs. 30 min. The Mason and Dixon line, as shown above, runs along the parallel of 39 degs. 43 min.—St. Louis Republic.

The Abuse of a Letter.
The way the letter "a" is being distorted and abused nowadays is shameful. Judging from the pronunciation affected by actors and anglomaniacs the poor little letter has only one sound, and that the mushy la de da Italian variety, designated in Webster's Dictionary by two little dots over the vowel. I went to a theatre the other night, and heard a girl sing a song in which she had something to say about a mash—she called it "mash"—and a hat, which she pronounced as we do the adjective applied to the business end of a poker in active use. In the course of her ditty she had occasion to use the words man, grand, fashion, habit, and answer, dash and mantel, all of which she pronounced in the same manner. I would like to know where this thing is going to end.—Interview in St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

His Idea of What a Proprietor Is.

They ushered him into the editor's sanctum. He was a tall negro, with an oily skin as black as your coat, flat nose, thick lips, and the shiniest of shiny eyes and teeth. "Is dis de editor?" he inquired as he twirled his hat in his hand. He was informed that it was.

"Well, boss, I wants to get a job," he said.

"What is your business?"

The old negro drew himself up to his full height and answered: "Ise been de proprietor ob de New leans Piccyune fo' twenty years."

"Oh, you have been proprietor of The New Orleans Picayune for twenty years, have you?"

"Yes, sah."

"Well, I suppose you wrote the editorials then."

"Oh, no, sah; we had de editors for to do dat."

"Yes? Perhaps, then, you gathered the news?"

"No, sah, de reporters did dat."

"You read the proof, then, very likely."

"Oh, no, no, no, sah, we had de proof-readers for to do dat."

The editor became amused at the old darky, and determined to see in what position his boasted proprietorship would land him, so he questioned him in regard to the various positions right down the list, and still his function remained undiscovered.

"Well," he was finally asked, "what was your position?"

He hesitated a moment and then answered in the most impressive voice he could command:

"I'll tell you what, boss, if you wants to get some one to oil de joints ob you engine down stairs, I ken do it better dan any man in town."—New York Tribune.

George W. Childs on Vocations.
My rule has been to follow faithfully that line of business for which I felt the consciousness of being adapted. In this view I selected the newspaper, and to it I devote my time and talents. I follow out the one line of business pursuit rather than engage in many. A few days ago certain gentlemen came to me to ask me to engage with them in the line of banking. "I am not a banker," said I. "I am a newspaper man."

"But," they persisted, "we do not ask for your time, but only your name, and the use of your name to us will be worth $100,000 a year to you." I did not, however, accede to their request. I had no inclination to engage with them in the pursuit of banking, because it was outside of my line, and having more than enough money to meet my modest necessities, and without a child in the world, I did not feel like taking $100,000 each year for doing nothing to earn it.

The great trouble with mankind is to stick to that pursuit of which they have knowledge. Some men get strangely mixed up. I happen to know a banker in this town, with good general information, but with no aptitude for banking. Yet he plods along in his line, acquiring nothing, you may say, and at times the necessities of his business have compelled him to raise money on the family plate. Now, he is out of his line, and will fail, probably, until he finds that which is his real bent and gravitates to it.—Interview in Cincinnati Enquirer.

Books Made of Clay.
Far away beyond the plains of Mesopotamia, on the banks of the river Tigris, lies the ruins of the ancient city of Nineveh. Not long since huge mounds of earth and stone marked the place where the palaces and walls of the proud capital of the great Assyrian empire stood. The spade and scraper, first of the French and then of the English, have cleared all the earth away and laid bare all that remains of the old streets and palaces where the proud princes of Assyria walked and lived. The gods they worshipped and the books they read have all been revealed to the sight of a wondering world.

The most curious of all the curious things preserved in this wonderful manner are the clay books of Nineveh. The chief library of the city was contained in the palace of Kanyunjik. The clay books which composed its contents were sets of tablets composed with very small letters. The tablets are all oblong in shape, and when several of them are used for one book the first line of the tablet following was written at the end of the one preceding it. The writing was done when the clay of the tablet was soft; it was then baked to harden it. Each tablet was numbered just as librarians of today number the books of which they have charge.—St. Louis Republic.

A BIT OF WALL PAPER.

SENTIMENTAL REMINISCENCES OF AN OLD GENTLEMAN.

He Was from Troy, but He Started Life in the Metropolis—Remembrances of His Early Married Life—Struggling for a Memento—The Hard Hearted Boss.

A middle aged man who was gazing absently out of a window of an elevated car the other day started suddenly and craned his neck to look at a big hole in the wall of brick and brown stone front by which the train was passing. Two or three houses had been torn down to make room for improvements, and the hole was all that was left of them, save a litter of broken bricks in the cellar and an acre or so of wall paper in many designs upon the sides of the adjoining building. The middle aged man got out at the next station and walked back to the hole. He stood on the sidewalk a moment, looking first up into the air and then at the half dozen workmen who were removing the last traces of the wreck. Presently he appeared to pluck up resolution, for he gravely descended the rough plank gangway that led from the street to the bottom of the hole and approached the boss of the gang.

"Been tearing down these houses, I see," remarked the middle aged man by way of introduction.

The boss stared.

"We ain't been puttin' up any," he responded.

SEEKING A SOUVENIR.
"That's what I meant," said the middle aged man imperturbably. "Would you mind lending me a ladder for a minute or two?"

"What in thunder do you want to do with it?" exclaimed the boss.

"I want to climb up to that piece of paper," responded the middle aged man, pointing to a section of the wall that was covered with a greenery yallery design. "You see," he continued, "I used to live there."

There was a suspicion of moisture in the middle aged man's eyes and a faint smile on his lips as he said this, and he looked up at the soiled patch of paper as a traveler might view the receding lights of his native town. The boss was puzzled and suspicious, but after a moment of silence, while he pretended to be watching his men, he said:

"You can take that one in the corner if you'll move it yourself and put it back again."

The middle aged man bowed without a word, took off his overcoat and laid it gently upon a pile of bricks, laid down his cane, and proceeded, at the expense of no little exertion, to place the ladder. As he began to climb up the boss ran over and said threateningly:

"See here, now; no shenanagin! You'll only get a broken bone or two if you fall from that ladder."

The middle aged man laughed quietly. "Do not fear," he answered. "I'm not going to commit suicide. I'll be down all right in a few minutes."

Nevertheless the boss detailed two of his men to stand under the ladder to break the fall of the stranger should he try to tempt death from the ladder top.

THE STORY.
The middle aged man climbed up, and when he was at the top he could just reach the lower edge of the greenery yallery wall paper. He looked at it earnestly, and then drew out a pocket knife and cut off a small section that contained the principal elements of the design. He put the scrap into his pocket, descended, lugged the ladder back to its proper position, put on his overcoat and stepped once more before the boss.

"I am much obliged to you," he said.

"You see, when I was first married we went to housekeeping here. We had two unfurnished, unfinished rooms up two flights. We were desperately poor, wife and I; just enough to get on with, you know. The other people in the flat were also poor. They couldn't afford to paper their vacant rooms, and the landlord wouldn't spent a cent. So we papered them ourselves. We got the paper—best we could find of the cheap grades—and wife made a paste out of flour and water. We fixed up a brush out of a towel. Then with chairs and a table for a stepladder we papered our—our apartments. I saw the same old paper as I was riding by, and I thought a piece of it would be a nice souvenir."

The boss' heart was touched.

"And the wife," he said hesitatingly, "is—er—"

"Oh, no!" exclaimed the middle aged man, smiling cheerfully. "She's alive and hearty, thank you. We live in Troy now, and we've got three strapping children. Circumstances are better now, if you please. Whenever I come to town I make it a point to look at our first home, and today I saw that it was only empty air. The wall paper was there, though, and I thought I'd get a piece to take home to my wife as a remembrance of our first housekeeping. I am very much obliged to you."

The middle aged man walked up the gangplank with quiet dignity, and the boss, still disturbed by the episode, remarked:

"What a queer chap it is, by thunder!"—New York Sun.

A Man's Opinion.
It was a wise man who said on the subject of woman's dress: "I have found invariably that those women who really understand the art of dress, who know what to wear and when to wear it, have taste and intelligence of a more refined order than those who regard costumes in the light of mere clothes, and who not only reveal no appreciation of a woman's obligations to look her best at all times, but affect to treat dress altogether as a subject only for the attention of frivolous minds."

A Small Matter.
Mrs. Forundrid—Horror! Half a dozen words in your note to Mrs. Society are misspelled.

Miss Forundrid—Oh, that don't matter. She can see by the coat of arms on our stationery that we're all right.—New York Weekly.

Suit has been brought in the circuit court for the State of New York to test the validity of the McKinley bill by Hermann, Sternbach & Co. The validity of the law is impugned for the alleged reason that the bill never passed Congress in the form it was approved by the President, and as unconstitutional in consequence of the bounty offered upon sugar, by one of its clauses. The outcome of the suit will be awaited with interest by merchants and manufacturers generally.

A YEAR ago the Boston Advertiser announced a cut in subscription rates from $12.00 to $9.00. This year the paper announces another cut to $6.00.
This brings the paper down to the level of other Boston papers. The Transcript is the only remaining four-cent daily, published in Boston, but the character of that paper is such that it is doubtful if any gain would ensue from a reduction in price, which was the experience of all other dailies;
indeed it has been suggested that a reduction of the price of the Transcript, owing to the class of taste it caters to would result in a positive loss to the publishers.

AT THE special town meeting the voters will decide whether the Australian system shall be used in town meeting. The same question will be discussed and settled in many of the towns of the Commonwealth within the next few weeks. Much extra labor, and some additional expense will be entailed by the new system and doubtless many mistakes will be made by voters, and considerable many changes will be wrought; but on the whole more satisfactory results will be obtained even though many "slates will be smashed."

THE SURRENDER of the troublesome Indians which practically terminates the fighting and alarm is a matter upon which the country is to be congratulated.
Serious charges of official corruption are preferred by "Bright Eyes" which are substantiated by many other red skins, and doubtless they are not without foundation. Such abuses of power as are charged have a strong tendency to engender hostile feelings among the Indians and cause endless trouble to the government as well as to the white settlers of the frontier. Little is to be feared from the outbreaks save temporary inconvenience, for a long succession of Indian wars have in-sulted in defeat or extermination of the hostile tribes. The charges of cold blooded murder of Sitting Bull will be investigated by the Department of the Interior, but it is probable that a white washing report will be submitted to the Commissioner.

The order of the Board of Aldermen of Salem passed last Monday evening granting the Essex Electric street railway the right to lay a track to the Willows, was a wise and public spirited act, and highly satisfactory to all who ever go to that popular resort, always, of course, excepting the Naumkeag street railway co., its beneficiaries and the very few who subscribe to its absurd claim of exclusive right by priority. We do not make the charge of such a claim without warrant. The president of the Naumkeag Co. openly declared in this town, that he claimed such a right for his road, and he has publicly said that he would parallel every foot of the other road. Now, without making a special plea for the Essex Co. it cannot be denied that its construction has proved a public benefit. It is within the memory of every reader that the Naumkeag Railway Co., until within one year, extended to its patrons no they "stand and wait continually" on the Square. Now they are sufficiently warned and kept clean. Rowdies and drunkards are not thrust in upon ladies and gentlemen, and any complaint to the officers of the road would doubtless now be listened to in a spirit the antipode of that of the ante Essex period. And, now, that competition is also coming on the Willows line the people of Peabody may expect to reach that pleasant breathing place without the aggravating scramble of a change of cars and the additional imposition of a double fare.

As we have said, this prospect is very pleasant to all, with a very few exceptions, and the chosen mouth piece of this disgruntled few seems to be the Salem Gazette. Its editor appears weekly in the role of prophet of the doctrine of the Naumkeag monopoly.
This week he tells us that that Road has built up an income out of the travel to the Willows. That's just it.
The Willows has built the up Naumkeag Road much more than the Naumkeag has built up the Willows, as is so often claimed. If our memory is not at fault, the Willows was largely patronized by means of barges and private teams, for some years before the Naumkeag Railway Co. saw fit to lay its tracks to that point and, as we remember, the principal outlay there was made by the City of Salem, and by private enterprise. (Out side) its road bed and the forlorn Roller Coaster that encumbers the city land, what property has the Naumkeag Road there today?
Should it not be satisfied with having had a monopoly of the Willows travel within seeking to make us all pay it tribute in the shape of extra fares for all coming time. So there is no call for the extreme solicitude evinced in the recent lengthy and atrabilious diatribes of the Gazette against fair and open competition for public travel. A solicitude which sees a trick even in an offer to contribute a large sum for the purpose of affording better facilities for track for the public outside of railway transportation, the first offer of the kind by any railway corporation in Massachusetts.

In conclusion we must say there is no shadow of excuse for the libellous intimations of the Gazette in regard to the action of certain aldermen in this matter, intimations that are as malicious (and as actionable) as open libel, and which lack the courage of a direct charge. We sincerely hope that the conspicuous editorial ability of the Gazette may henceforth find some worthier field of exhibition.

LYMPH USED IN BOSTON FOR THE FIRST TIME.

Dr. Koch's Lymph was used New Years morning for its first time in Boston upon eight patients by Drs. H. A.
H. Beach of Boston and H. C. Ernst of the Harvard Medical School. None of the patients are considered critical cases. Dr. Ernst is the only person on this side of the Atlantic, who has had the advantage of personal experience in the use of lymph under the personal direction of Dr. Koch, and he feels much gratified that he was compelled to visit Europe, as the drug is powerful and dangerous, needing great care in handling and application.

MODERN GAMBLING.

The growing practice of voting contests for prizes seems to be almost as pernicious as the other forms of prize winning for which it was at first substituted. It is no possible test of popularity of the person "voted" for, as he or his friends are always free to accumulate as many votes as they will spend money upon. There is a strong similarity to the old fashioned method of prize drawings, when men bought and raffled for tickets without number —to such extent that he who expended the most money in procuring tickets was likely to hold so many as to make the possibility of his being passed by, almost out of the question, and yet his drawing in many cases was of less value than the money he had expended in acquiring tickets. The recent Globe contest in which a lady received 1,000,000 votes for the $3500 house is a glaring instance of the point suggested that "votes" are no adequate test of popularity. Nobody supposes for a minute that this woman had one per cent of the friends represented by these votes. That large number of votes meant many dollars expended by this woman and her few immediate friends they could ill afford to lose and yet which were ventured upon a game of chance. No doubt many of the contestants felt sure of winning the prize but where one drew a blank numbers drew blanks.

Public opinion should

Installation of Grand Masonic Officers.

The officers of the Grand Lodge of Masons were installed at the temple in Boston, Wednesday, after which the feast of St. John was celebrated.
Among the appointments as district deputies was that of Wor. Bro. J. Albert Blake of Haverhill for the eighth district, which includes Salem, Peabody, Danvers, Marblehead, Beverly and Gloucester.

J. Albert Blake of Haverhill is reappointed Deputy for the 8th Masonic District. This is the district to which Jordan lodge belongs.

C. Fred Page, a purchasing agent at the L. A. May Co.'s establishment, Lynn, confesses to forging the name of W. A. Baker as endorser of a note for $32, but Page disclaims any criminal intent in writing the name.

Mr. E. O. Foster, the Salem representative of the Boston Globe, gave an interesting talk on newspapers on Monday evening, before the Beach Bluff Famers' Club.

Among the patents granted to Essex County people this week, are the following: Wm. Fahney, Lynn, heel making machine; Preble, Lynn, Mass., machine for cutting soles for boots and shoes; F. F. Stanley, and others, Swampscott, trustees, burning crude petroleum; E. S. Thayer and E. S.
Buffum, Salem, re-covering vessels, etc; James Ingram, Lawrence, buffer for picker staffs of looms; Geo. A.
Stiles, Brookline, assignor to J. W.
French, Lynn, sewing machine.

On Tuesday, about three minutes before the 9 11 Gloucester train arrived in the Beverly depot, a man was observed walking on the railroad track.
Two railroad men saw the body of a man lying on the cow catcher of the incoming engine. Then the body rolled off, and the wheels of the train passed over the head of the unfortunate victim. Medical examiner Haddock was summoned to view the remains. The face was crushed beyond recognition, blood covered the clothes, and trickled along the floor.
The examination of the victim's clothes revealed nothing but two empty purses and a T. D. pipe. No marks were on the person. The man was apparently 45 years old, hair slightly streaked with gray, moustache brown, attired in light frock coat, black trousers with light stripe, and strong, heavy boots. Lee & Creesy took charge of the remains.

The True Universities.

The great schools of the world are no longer those in which the dead languages are taught. They are the mechanical workshops, in which young men learn to build Corliss engines, Waltham watches, dynamos, and the long list of other marvelous machines that herald the approach of greater marvels. The professors of the new philosophy are not those who despise industry; they are the chieftains of industry. "This is the stone which was set at naught of you builders, which is become the head of the corner."

These are the schools—the true
"universities"—that a nation needs.
The instruction which they impart has all the accuracy of mathematics, all the grace of rhetoric, all the rhythm of poetry. The implements of thought are not words, but the tools of labor.
The process of analysis and synthesis are taught by real, not mimic, object lessons. The constructive faculty is exercised where it should be exercised —in construction. The imagination has free play in the realm of invention and experiment. The reasoning powers are disciplined to an extent unknown to the logicians. In the making of the argument men may err without detection; in the making of a watch or a window sash they can not do so.—American Economist.

The clergyman was ill at his home at Campello. It was Saturday morning, and he was in momentary expectation of hearing the ring of the reporter who was sure to call on that morning to get his subject for Sunday's sermon. Not being able to answer the bell in person, as was his wont, he said to his son, as the bell rang in the hallway, "Run down to the door, Freddie, and say to the reporter, 'The End of the Earth,' and he will understand it."
So down stairs flew the boy, and pulling open the door just as a voice asked, "What is it this morning?"
shouted "The End of the Earth!" and immediately closed the door in the face of—not the reporter, but the astounded family butcher.

BOSTON THEATRES.

The "Soudan" must close at the Boston Theatre on Saturday next. Those who have not seen this magnificent drama can do so any evening next week, or upon Wednesday or Saturday afternoons. Seats should be secured in advance, as the demand is unlimited.

Tomorrow evening, at the Boston Theatre the Boston Philharmonic Orchestra comprising sixty pieces will furnish the attraction.

At the Park Theatre, "My Aunt Bridget" has furnished fun for the audience the past week.

On Monday "Around the World in Eighty Days" will be put upon the stage.

At the Museum, the attraction for the present is "The Solicitor," preceded by "Betty's Finish" and the house has been well filled by appreciative audiences every evening as well as the matinees.

The Globe stage is occupied by Robert Mantell and his excellent company, under the management of Augustus Piton.

Hon. Wm. C. P. Breckenridge, M. C., lectures at Tremont Temple, Monday evening, upon "Southern Problems."

At the Hollis, one week, commencing Monday of William Gillette's Comedy Hit, "All the Comforts of Home," will be enjoyed by lovers of comedy.

Next week is the last of Nat C. Goodwin's engagement at the Tremont Theatre, in the "Nominee."

Last Monday evening Mrs. Mary A.
Livermore lectured at the Universalist church for the benefit of the Murray club of Milford, Mass., on "Wendell Phillips and his Times." This is said to be her best lecture and should be heard by all, young especially.

WHEN I WAS SICK.

My room looked like a drug store, I had so many bottles in it. The more I dosed, the worse off I was. Finally, I paid my doctor and told him he needn't come any more. I was troubled with Chronic Rheumatism, and couldn't get out of bed alone. Six bottles of Sulphur Bitters cured me.—*Benj. Fitch, Adams

The Northwestern Masonic Aid Association, whose headquarters are at Chicago, has in force in Canada over $20,000,000 of insurance. It has been doing a purely Masonic business in Canada, but it is coming to the knowledge of the Dominion government that the association was accepting non-Masons as risks in the United States.
It was notified to quit business in Canada or to put up the statutory $5,000,000 deposit at Ottawa. The latter it would not do, so it has been peremptorily ordered to withdraw from Canada. It is said that after the withdrawal from Canada the association can snap its fingers at the Canadian patrons, who have paid in many thousands of dollars in assessments.

The report does not appear to alarm the officials of that organization in Chicago.

Dr. Greene's Free Lectures.

The name of Dr. Greene, 34 Temple place, Boston, has become a familiar one to the sick and well throughout the United States, and many, whose vitality was swiftly and surely leaving them, now testify to the value of Dr. Greene's Nervura and other wonderful remedies.
We have the pleasure of announcing that Dr. Greene will give a series of free lectures every evening next week, except Saturday, in Peabody Institute.
The lectures will be finely illustrated by the stereopticon, and always draw drowned audiences. Admission is entirely free.

Beverly Division.

The Selectmen of Beverly have appointed an anti-division committee consisting of forty-one representative citizens to look after the legislative fight this season.

While we wish them "God Speed," we predict they will have plenty of hard work before the legislature adjourns.

Agent—I want to sell you a pair of my patent shoe strings. They tie themselves. Citizen—They won't do. I want to get a pair that will untie themselves.

COUNSEL.

A journey round the world began
By taking but one pace:
Be not too eager, little man,
In entering the race.

The mites increase, be not disturbed;
Plan wisely, delve and dig;
The oak your arms no longer gird
Grew from a slender twig.

Toil bravely on; in patience wait.
And by the moment live;
Choose rather to be good than great,
And gain that you may give.

—George Bancroft. Grillich in Frank Leslie's Illustrated.

FIRST TIME UNDER FIRE.

The memory of the soldier's first battle will never be forgotten by him. The impressions were burned so deeply into the brain and spirit that a century of peace would not efface or even dim them.
Twenty-nine years have passed since I went through the first "baptism of fire," and yet the scenes and events are as fresh and as vivid in the soul vision as is the storm of yesterday eve.

I want to tell you something about it.
I shall not name the time nor the place
—the living who were with me will remember the facts—for the record I give is historic, is real, not ideal or fanciful, and I wish to have the recital so worded that any man in the world can read it without a feeling of bitterness in any known direction. The picture I give is not for the man who wore this or that uniform. I want a cameo that will outlast the passion that produced the bloody struggle.

I do not pretend to give a history of an entire battle; no one man can do this unless he draws upon the experience and observation of others, for each actor in any great battle sees the struggle differ-ently from what it appears to others. I shall relate my own individual experience and observation—what I personally saw and heard of one fiercely fought battle—one memorable in the history of the war—my first passing into and through its flame of fire.

A soldier's first battle in war does not always come at the appointed looked for hour. Many of the volunteers went to the front, expecting to whip out the fight the next morning after arrival—either before or after breakfast—then to return home crowned with immortal honors. But with thousands many weary months elapsed before the opportunity of meeting the foe came in real earnest, and when it did come countless thousands were not expecting it. After my enlistment as a soldier I had not long to wait the coming of the fight.

Night had enveloped the camp, and I was dreaming of sunny fields, of smiling meadows, of a happy home—of mother, and all that was near and dear to a human heart. But the destroying angel came, and all vanished into the realm of sweetened shadow.

For a comrade stood beside me with his hand on my bosom. As he leaned over toward my ear I heard him say tremulously—the man's heart in a flutter of emotion:

"Wake up! They are advancing!"
Was there the hue on his lips that made me think instantaneously of the line:
Whispering with white lips, "The foe—they come!"
they come!"

The first beams of the full morning were penciling the orient sky, and the rays fell upon a group of half a dozen anxious faces gathered around the ad-jutant's tent. Two horses were there—one with drooping head and limb at rest; another was panting heavily and reeking with smoke as the courier still sat on him. The commanding officer was reading a note, hastily scratched in pencil, under starlight alone.

The officer was on dishabille. Yet I heard him speak hurriedly and anxiously to the bugler just called up:

"Sound reveille at once, and boots and saddles immediately afterward." Turning around he added, addressing his servant, "Saddle my horse at once, William."

Strange it is what a magnetic influence, as it were, that will pervade a mass of men in the hour of danger and duty.
Three minutes had not elapsed after the sounds of the last bugle blow had thrilled the camp till the squadrons were forming.

"Move the column down the road, captain," said the commanding officer.
"I will gallop on and ascertain the real situation."

We passed another and another courier, and then we came to a body of men holding horses behind a clump of trees.

Just then there seemed to be an awful stillness in the morning air, suddenly broken by a noise that sounded strange to me.

"What is that?" I asked.
"It is the rumbling of their artillery," said Gen. S. Then he turned around, looking us all squarely in the face, and added in a confident tone, "Yes, they are advancing, and in force."

There was no mistaking the sound that next greeted the ears, there was a clear, ringing report that punctuated the stillness, then there was another and another and the rifle cracks died away.
They were the prelude of the battle soon to begin in earnest.

The clattering of horses' hoofs signaled another courier who dashed up, exclaiming in tones of feeling:

"General, our dismounted men are skirmishing with them." We had heard the rifle shots half a mile away.

"Captain, gallop back, and hurry up the infantry. Tell Capt. Hart we need the artillery at once. He, too, is coming."

Then there was another and another ring of the clear voiced rifle, then a terrific volley and a double shot or two, and then the guns were hushed for a moment. Men were seen hurrying from the direction of the sound. They were the dismounted skirmishers who were being driven back by the strong advance in front. The men rallied with our column.

"Fall in, men," cried a sergeant near me. "Fall in, men! Fall in promptly.
Fall in here!"

Oh, this terrible "bugle of war!"
Fall in here! Fall in! This is the most awful appeal that greets the soldier's ears. Fall in. It is a tocsin that dies away only with the funeral knell of many—for to them it says:

"Fall in—fall in—to the arms of death!"

A second staff officer had been sent back to "hurry up the infantry." The noble fellows were coming. You could hear the deep, muffled hum of their footsteps as the double quickening hurried them onward. As they came up I heard the short, quick command: "Move out by the right flank! Into line! Steady, men; steady! I expect every man to do his duty now!"

Move out, and move on, my dear comrades! Alas! many moved on into that column which passed on, never to return. Their first battle was their last.

There was a lull in the firing in front,
but out to the leftward volley after volley poured, out upon the morning air—the sun just rising over the hills to our right. I had followed at the gallop the general, who was hurrying to the front.
He was more silent than I had ever known him. Suddenly he halted and turned to see who were about him.

"What troops are those?" I asked him doubtfully, as I saw a long line of infantry men double quickening behind a high rail fence distant not 150 yards away. I could not distinguish the uniform, and I was not aware of the direction from which all our rifle men were to enter the battle.

"My God!" said the general, "that is the enemy!"

We were upon them before we were aware of their close proximity. They discovered us, too, at once, and were preparing for the greeting.

"Get out of the road!" shouted the general. There was a clump of trees on either side of the highway upon which he had thus far advanced.

"Get out of the road! Don't you see they are bringing the battery to bear upon us from the hill yonder?"

I looked, and a white puff of smoke greeted my vision, and the same instant—whizz—whurr—r—r—chee—chee—went a shell right between the general and his staff, and it bounded down the road, exploding in our rear.

The general addressed me again:

"Get out of the road, and gallop back and have the cavalry moved on the flank of that line yonder in the field."

Another shell came in the mean time, and made the air resonant with the flying fragments.

Then there was a volley of rifles and a faint cheer near to our flanks—for our infantry were now moving out of the skirt of the woods and opening the battle in earnest.

Capt. Hart, too, had come, and he unlimbered his guns on the battery on the hill in our front, though he soon turned his aim to the infantry line that was nearer, and I heard the shots rattling upon the rails behind which the enemy had fallen.

"Thank God, the infantry are here," said one. They are the men whose shoulders move the wheels on to victory.
I heard the commanding general shout as the long line came hurrying on just as the men emerged from the skirt of woods, "Move on that line behind you fence!"

A red and white and blue line of fire answered from the enemy.

"Fall down and fire!" I heard an officer shout.

Alas! many had already fallen—fallen to rise no more.

Half a hundred men of a regiment stood up, and their irregular fire rattled mockingly along the fence.

It was the work of but a moment, for a whole brigade in our front answered the fire of the little band. The battery rained grape and canister and shrapnel against the brigade, and now the battle had joined in a vif earnestness all along the line.

Battery replied to battery, hostile brigade replied to hostile brigade, with sheets of iron and leaden fire. There were in the terrific din the hurdling shot, the screaming, screeching shell, and whistling whirr of the deadly mine.

Amid the roar were the shouts of command, the wailing shriek of the wounded and the moans of the dying. The hours were passing, the musketry was roaring with an unbroken note, the batteries were bellowing at each other, when suddenly there was a deep, dull thud—a mighty force which at once shook the whole battlefield. Two heavily laden caissons were blown up simultaneously.

Then there was another sound which could not be mistaken. There was a lull in the firing on our right, and the whole earth seemed to be laboring and groaning. Thousands stood listening amid the horrid hell!

Oh, it was the charge of the cavalry!
"Charge! charge!" shouted the throats of a dozen officers, and the bugle blasts, ringing out faintly in the din, mingled and died away in the fierce shouting of the squadrons.

Boom! boom! boom! went the artillery
basses!

Clang! clang! clang! rang out the glittering sabers as they leaped from the scabbard.

It was, however, but an instant of awful chorus when the wailing cry of Waterloo, sauve qui peut!—"save himself who can!"—went up before the onrushing squadron of furious horsemen, who broke out in the wild shout of victory that deadened the guns along the whole line —and troops on the right—troops on the left—troops in the center—all caught the notes, and there was one long and terrific thunder note of victory! The cheers of infantry men greeted the shouts of cavalry men—while the little squad about the artillery—brave fellows, with bands of red upon their uniforms, cried out, as the defeated were seen flying in stricken masses in front:

"Hurra for our battery!" And well might the living victors shout!

Double Quick Elopement on Foot.

At the village of Newberry, Ind., a highly sensational and exciting elopement was witnessed a day or so ago.
The fleeing lovers were from Plainville,
Davies county, and had eloped at dark, taking passage in a hack. The vehicle broke down, and they hired a farmer to take them to the railroad station, but when he learned who they were and that they were elopers, he knew the girl's father, and refused to take them any further, leaving them in the middle of the highway in the dead of night. They pursued their way to Newberry on foot, arriving about daylight, and bought tickets to Terre Haute. Their names were Dukes and Stalpin. While lounging about the depot waiting for the train and amusing the spectators by their loving conduct the "old man" rode rapidly up, and seeing them dart around the depot jumped from his horse and asked a man standing near by to hold it until he killed a man.

By this time the fleeing lovers were going over the bridge across the river,
the young man considerably in the lead, calling back, "Come on, Mary," while the enraged father brought up the rear, revolver in hand; but Mary shaded her lover from the old man's pop by keeping between them. Noticing that her father was gaining on her she took off her shoes, and thus inspired with new energy she fairly flew, soon overtaking her lover and distancing the old man, who soon gave up the chase, amid the laughter and jeers of the crowd who had witnessed the ridiculous proceedings. The old man then offered $25 reward for the arrest of the pair, but no one cared to undertake the job, and the old man returned home.—St. Louis Republic.

The Union Jack.

In reference to the order of the secretary of the navy that hereafter, until July 4, 1891, the Union Jack shall contain forty-three stars, The New York Times says: The Union Jack is a flag peculiar to vessels only. It is a square blue piece of bunting, studded with white stars, representing the different states of the Union. On board a man-of-war it is flown from a jackstaff mounted close to the cap of the bowsprit.
Where a vessel has no bowsprit it is either mounted in the extreme forward part of the bow or run up on a hoist passing over a small block secured to the foremast. It is not usual for men-of-war to display their Jacks except when lying at anchor and all is snug.

In home waters the Jack is rarely seen other than on Sundays or during general inspections and on state occasions.
While in foreign ports the Jack is deemed as essential as the national ensign and is always to be seen. To the man-of-war's man the Jack appeals perhaps more strongly than the national ensign. The blue jacket recognizes that the defence and honor of the Union Jack are con-

What Free Coinage Is.

While several gentlemen were talking at the Markham one of them asked concerning the meaning of the term "free coinage" as it is so often heard nowadays. An experienced mining man explained as follows: "Free coinage means that the government should coin silver as it coins gold, free of charge. There are now four coinage mints in the United States. They are located at San Francisco, New Orleans, Carson City and Philadelphia. Any man who will take gold to any of those mints may receive the gold in the shape of coin. Silver is not recognized on the same basis, and this is what the silver men demand."

"There are two facts I can learn when I look at a twenty dollar gold piece," continued the gentleman, "and those are the mint where the coin was turned out and the initials of the man who made the die. If you don't know where to look for the marks it is a hopeless task, but the person who penetrates the secret must have a new coin and a good pair of eyes."—Denver News.

Singular Effect of Hammer Vibration.

A somewhat singular circumstance is reported from the Chatham, England, dockyard, where a large clock is used to regulate the duties of the whole department. For some time the clock has been working irregularly, and it is now found that its erratic movements are owing to the proximity of the iron vessels which are under construction. The perpetual hammering caused such a degree of vibration that the works of the clock were affected, and it was ultimately found necessary to remove the clock to another part of the dockyard.—

Novel Fishing.

A few days ago four young men were skating on Harriman pond, in Sebec.
The ice being transparent they caught sight of pickerel under the surface swimming about. Procuring an ax they began operations by striking the ice above the fish, thus stunning them and taking them out. This process was continued until thirty-six handsome pickerel were secured and taken away as trophies.—

Oregon Poems for the World's Fair.

A book of poems by Oregon authors is to be brought out in time for the World's fair in Chicago. The plan is a feasible one, and many of the poems already published by Oregon authors are literary gems that are destined to live and through coming ages. Applegate's
"to the Pioneers" and Simpson's
"Willamette" are foremost in the number.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Are You Married?

A Husband should make it his business to see that his home is comfortably furnished. His wife will think more of him for it, knowing that he has her welfare at heart while he is away.

Perhaps even now, the house needs another chair or two,
or a new lounge, or a carpet, or maybe a few pictures to brighten it up and make it more cheerful. Look around and see, and remember that we are the people to furnish you wish it that way.

A Wife need never be without that little piece of furniture which she wants, if she would call her husband's attention to the fact, and get him to learn OUR price for it; and if money is a little tight with him, why, remind him of our easy payment plan by which he can enjoy the benefits of its use while paying for it. Look through the house, and send us a list of what you would like to have. We'll quote you prices that will surprise you.

N.B.—The fact that we are the largest house-furnishing establishment in the world is a pretty good recommendation.

The "Elevation" of Men.

The attempt to elevate women, as it is facetiously called, is no longer an experiment; but how is it about the attempt to elevate men by this roundabout process? Are the men of the day improving? Are the politicians, for instance, any better; do they read more; do they try to fit themselves by study for legislative and executive positions; are they any better informed on economic questions; are they more sensitive to a reputation for honorable dealing; are they more jealous for the good name of the country in such a matter, say, as the international copyright? And the young men in offices, in shops, in business, are they being raised intellectually, or do they share proportionally in the great movement for the elevation of the other sex?

Every one can answer this question for himself by a little observation of the ways in which young men spend their leisure time. And as to the outward refinements of life, manners, and dress? Even in the industrial walks of life, does the young man dress with the neatness and becomingness that characterized the industrial young men of the period? Are these trifles?
Is by the observation of the men in

LOCAL LINES.

The alarm of fire rung in at 12.30 on Thursday, was caused by the burning of an old, isolated tan shed owned by R. G. Nelson & Son, rear of Foster street. The fire had been smouldering for some time before it broke out.

Abbott Council, A. O. U. M., elected the following officers for ensuing term: councillor, John G. Burbeck; recording secretary, William Donnell; assistant recording secretary, George A. Griffin; financial secretary, Chas. M. Poor; treasurer, James Rodie; Ind. Francis A. Lane; Ex., George P. Nevins; In. Pro., T. W. Walton; Out. Pro., H. F. Wilkinson; trustee for 18 months, Frank B. Warner. This Council have been granted a dispensation to initiate new members for seven dollars for a short time.

The Farmers institute was held in Town Hall, yesterday, in the forenoon some discussion took place, which was participated in by John M. Danforth Esq. of Lynnfield, and others. The afternoon session was given up to a lecture on the South, by President Ware. The next meeting will be held at West Newbury, on Friday the 16th instant, when President Ware will continue his subject, touching upon Look-out Mountain, Bridge of Virginia and other places of interest visited by him.

The ice men are working like bees at Brown and Spring ponds, scraping the ice and preparing to cut and house today. The Davis Brothers have erected an endless chain elevator, operated by steam power and will house 10,000 tons. The work when carried on in that way is very interesting to watch, the ice is moved so swiftly and systematically, and doubtless throngs of people will visit Spring pond to witness the busy sight. It is the first time such a method of harvesting has ever been used in Peabody.

Theophilus Wall got drunk yesterday afternoon and went home in that condition, and in a paroxysm, threw a lighted kerosene lamp at the cook stove which set fire to the house, and hence the alarm from box 7 last evening. He was arrested, and before Justice Merrill this morning was given two months in the house of correction, but on account of his family, Officer Crowley consented to answer for his appearance, one week from to-day, when some arrangement may be made by which he will be put on further probation.

The warrant has been posted for the special town meeting to be held on the 7th day of January, 1891, at 7 o'clock, P. M., for the following purposes, namely: 1st. To choose a Moderator. 2nd. To see if the town will authorize the Selectmen to confer with the authorities of the City of Salem relative to an apportionment of the expense of constructing that part of a proposed highway leading from Walnut Street, Peabody, to Grove Street, in Salem, lying within the limits of the City of Salem, or act anything relative thereto. 3rd. To see if the Town will choose a Committee, to apply to the Legislature for an Act authorizing the inhabitants of Peabody to raise and appropriate money for the construction of a part of said proposed highway, lying within the limits of the City of Salem, or act anything relative thereto. 4th. To see if the town will accept the provisions of Chapter 386 of the Acts of 1890, entitled, "an Act to authorize the printing and distribution of ballots for town elections, at the public expense;" Also, to determine what officers shall be elected by ballot, and the number and term of such officers, as petitioned by Wm. H. Brown and others.

Death of Annie P. Smith.

The old friends of Miss Annie P. Smith, formerly of this town, but late of Danvers, will learn with sorrow of her untimely death from consumption. She was formerly identified with the Universalist church here and had a large circle of warm friends in that parish. Her age was 24 years. She leaves a widowed mother for whom a warm sympathy is felt by all.

The Somerset Club.

An organization composed of young men of this Town and Salem will hold a grand ball at Town Hall Monday eve Jan. 12.

The music will be furnished by Brig-hams Band of Marlboro. This band has never been in this town but has been heard by many of our young people and they all say it is second to none. The club was fortunate in getting them as nearly every date during the season is taken up. SAD ACCIDENT.

James P. King Meets With a Painful Accident.

James P. King Esq. of this town drove to Danvers Thursday evening, to attend the supper of the Danvers Historical Society and when he arrived at the hotel stable no one was on hand to attend to his horse. The yard was dark and slippery, and as he groped his way round to find an attendant, he slipped upon the ice and fell heavily, fracturing his right hip. He attempted to crawl to his sleigh which was but a few rods off but was unable to do so. He made outcries for help, which were heard by several persons who passed but, not knowing the source and presuming it was some benighted inebriate, they made no effort to discover the cause of the cries or render assistance. It was sometime before assistance was finally rendered by Ranson F. McCrillis, who helped him into his sleigh, with great difficulty, and drove him to his residence, when the services of Drs. C. C. Pike and Worcester were called who relieved his sufferings as much as possible. Mr. King's age, he being 73 years old, is an adverse factor in his recovering. His numerous friends throughout the state will be pained to learn of his misfortune.

The Moustache Index.

There is a great deal of character in the moustache. As the form of the upper lip and the regions about it have largely to do with the feelings, pride, self-reliance, manliness, vanity, and other qualities that give self-control, the moustache is more particularly connected with the expression of those qualities or the reverse.

When the moustache is ragged, and, as it were, flying hither and thither, there is a lack of proper self-control. When it is straight and orderly, the reverse is the case, other things, of course, taken into account.

If there is a tendency to curl at the outer ends of the moustache, there is a tendency to ambition, vanity or display. When the curl turns upward there is a genialty, combined with a love of approbation; when the inclination is downward, there is a more sedate turn of mind not accompanied with gloom.

It is worthy of remark that good natured men will, in playing with the moustache invariably give it an upward inclination, whereas cross-grained or morose men will pull it obliquely downward.—Woburn Journal.

We extend thanks to the Haverhill Gazette for a beautiful souvenir. The device testifies alike to the enterprise and fine taste of our esteemed contemporary.

A Corsican doctor, M. de Susini, has made a sulphuric ether engine of twenty-horse power, which is expected to realize a saving of sixty-five per cent in fuel. The mines of the world, says the Economiste Francaise, in the year 1888 produced of metals of all kinds, of coal, salt and petroleum, a grand total of 508,939,000 tons, with a value of $1,776,000,000. To this vast sum coals contributed almost $700,000,000, or about 40 per cent., while the entire value of the gold and silver products was $260,000,000.

In some religious nominations there is greater liberty of speech than in others. A tory was taking part in a prayer meeting, and in his intercessions, he expressed anxiety for the union of tories and unionists. Lord, said he, may they all hang together. Amen! interrupted another. Not, Lord, said the first speaker, in the sense which our brother means, but let them hang together in accord and concord. FROM THE JAPANESE.

"So young, he cannot know the way,"
Thus I heard a mother say
At the close of a summer day;
But he knew the road, it seems,
Into the shadow land of dreams.
And she wept above his clay.
Since, though young, he knew the way

Gone, where summer moths resort,
Or small boats that leave the port,
Sailing over the stormy brine,
As, with this slow sleep of mine,
Under the gloom of alien skies,
I dry my weeping eyes

If I could be where the willow whirled,
In a lacquered skiff, with a paddle of pearls,
Young no more, but old and gray,
You may be sure I'd know the way.

AN IDYL OF THE HT.

It is sunset at the HT ranch. Four or five cowboys sit gloomily about, outside the ranch house, awaiting supper. The Mexican cook has just begun his fragrant task, so a half hour must elapse before these Arabs are fed. Their ponies are turned into the wire pasture, their big Colorado saddles repose astride the low pale fence which surrounds the house, and it is evident that their riding is over for the day.

Why are they gloomy? Not a boy of them can tell. One is from Prin-paneros and "worked" the HT cattle together for months, and nothing ever came in misunderstanding or cloud. The ranch house is their home, and theirs has been the unity of brothers.

A week ago a pretty girl, the daughter of one of the owners, came to the ranch from the east. She was protected in this venture by an old and grizzled aunt, watchful as a ferret, sour as a lime. Not that the pretty girl needs watching; she is indeed in every move propriety's climax. No soft or dainty reason woos her to the west; she comes on no love errand. She is elegantly and profoundly tired of the east, that is all, and longs for western air and western sights. She has been at the HT ranch a week, and the boys have met her, every one. The meeting or meetings were marked by awkwardness as to the boys, utter indifference as to the pretty girl. She met them as she met the ponies, cows, horned toads and other animals, domestic and indigenous to eastern New Mexico. While every cowboy was blushing and serenely guiltless of giving him a thought.

Before this pretty girl came the boys were friends, and the calm tenor of their relations with each other had never a ripple. She was not there a day before each drew himself insensibly from the others, and a vague hostility shone dimly in their eyes. It was the instinct of the fighting male animal aroused by the presence of the pretty girl. She, however, proceeded on her daily way, sweetly unconscious of the sentiments she had awakened.

Men are mere animals; women are, too, for that matter, but they are very different animals from men. The effort the race makes to be the other, better or different than beasts fails. It always fails; it will always fail. Civilization—culture—is the varietal veneer and famously thin. A year on the plains cracks this veneer—this shell—and leaves the animal exposed. This is by the expanding growth of all that is animalish in a man; these attributes of the physical being fed and pampered by a plains existence.

The dark, vague, impalpable differences which cut off each of these creatures from his fellows and inspired him with an unreasoning and unmeasurable hate had grown with the brief week of their existence. A philosopher would look for trouble soon on the HT.

"What did you go and take my saddle for yesterday, Bill?" said Jack Moore to a boy by the name of Bill Watkins.

"Cause I allows I'll ride it some," says Watkins. "I thought it might like to carry a high grade cowpuncher once."

"Well, don't take it no more," said Moore, moodily, ignoring the gay insolence in the reply. "Leastwise, don't come a-takin' of it an' sayin' nothin'. You can palaver Americano, can't you? When you aims to ride my saddle agin, ask for it; if you can't talk make signs, and if you can't make signs, shake a bush, but don't go Injunin' off no saddle of mine no more."

"Whatever do you allow is liable to happen if I take it agin to-morrow?" inquired Bill in high scorn.

Bill was of a more vivacious temper than the gloomy Moore.

"You takes it agin an' I mingles with you a whole lot, mighty prompt," replied Moore in a tone of obstinate injury.

These boys were brothers in affection before that pretty girl came, and either would have gone afoot all day to lend his saddle to the other. Going afoot, too, is the last thing, let me assure you, a cowboy will do.

"Well, don't you fail to mingle none," said Bill, with cheerful ferocity, "on account of its being me. I crossed the trail of the shorthorn like you, over on the Panhandle once, an' puts him in the fire an' has plenty of fun with him."

"Stop the play now, right yere," said Tom Rawlins, the HT ranch boss, who was sitting close at hand. "You all spring trouble 'round yere an' I'll be in it. Whatever's the matter with all you people anyway? You're like a passel of sore 'head' dogs for more'n a week now. You're shorly too many for me to sabel, an' I c'lar gives you up."

The boys started some grumbling reply, but the cook called them to supper just then, and one animalism becoming overshadowed by another, they forgot their rancor and vague animosities in thoughts of supplying their hunger. Toward the last of the repast Rawlins arose and going to another room began over-looking some entries in the ranch books.

The pretty girl did not eat at the ranch table. She had little banquets in her own room. Just then she was in her own room and began singing in a low tenor some tender little love song that seemed born of a sigh and a tear. The boys at supper heard her, and their resentment of each other's existence began again to flame in their breasts and burn deeply in their eyes. None of these savages was in the least degree in love with the pretty girl either. They might have become so, all or any of them.

The singing went on in a cooling, soft way that did not bring you the words—only the music.

"What I says about my saddle a while back, I means," said Moore, finally, turning dark looks on Watkins.

"See yere," said Watkins, in an exasperated tone—he was as vicious as Moore—"if you're p'intin' out for a war jig with me, don't fool 'round none for reasons, but jest let 'er roll. Come a-runnin', an' don't bother none with ceremony."

"A man don't need to have no reasons for crawlin' you none," said Moore. "You're fair game, you are. Anyone's licensed to chase you 'round jest for fun an' exercise."

"You can gamble," said Watkins confidently, "any man as chases me 'round much will regard it as a thrillin' pastime. He won't get fat at it—none whatever."

"As you all seem to feel that away," said Moore, "I'll step out and shoot with you right now."

"Well, I'll shore go you," said Watkins.

They arose and stepped out at the door.

It was gathering dark, but it was light enough to shoot by.

The other cowboys followed in silence.

Not one said a word in comment or interference. They were grave and serious, but passive. It is not good form to interfere with other people's duels in the southwest. The pretty girl was still singing, and the strains fell softly on the ears of the cowboys. Every one, whether onlooker or principal, felt inspired with a lurking, pleased anticipation of the blood to be soon set flowing. Nothing was said of distance. They separated to about forty paces and turned to face each other. Each wore his "Colt's 45," the loosely buckled belt letting it rest low down on the right hip. Each threw down his big hat and stood at apparent ease, with his thumbs caught in the pistol belt.

"Shall you give the word, or me?" said Moore.

"You give it," said Watkins. "It'll be a funny passage in American history if you get your artillery to the front any sooner than I do, then."

"Be you ready?" asked Jack.

"Shore."

"Then—go!"

"Bang! Bang! Bang! Bang!" went both pistols together, and with a rapidity not to be counted. Moore got a crease in his left shoulder—a mere wound to the flesh—and Watkins fell with a bullet in his side. Rawlins, the range boss, came running out. He understood all at a look. Hastily examining Moore he discovered that his hurt was nothing serious. The others carried Watkins into the house.

"Take my pony, saddled at the fence, Jack," said Rawlins, "and pull your freight. This yere man's goin' to die."

"Which I shorely hopes he does," said Jack, bitterly. "I'll go, though; I ain't got no use for none of these yere heshorthorns around the HT."

So he took Rawlins' pony, and when he stopped riding in the morning it was no marvel that the poor pony hung his head dejectedly, while his flanks steamed and quivered. He was almost 100 miles from his last corn, and cooled his nervous muzzle as he took his morning drink in the Rio Pecos, a stream far to the west of the HT.

"Some shooting scrape about their saddles, miss; that's all." So reported Rawlins to the pretty girl.

"Isn't it horrible!" shuddered the pretty girl, in reply.

The next morning the pretty girl and her grizzled and twisted aunt paid the injured Watkins a visit. This sight so affected the other three cowboys that they at once saddled and rode away to the northwest to work some cattle on the Ocate Mesa. They intended to be gone three months. They looked black and forbidding as they galloped away.

"It's a pity Jack Moore ain't no better pistol shot," said one, as the picture of the pretty girl visiting the wounded Watkins arose in his mind.

"That's whatever," assented the others.

The pretty girl was full of sympathy for the stricken Watkins. It occurred to her, too, that his profile was clear and handsome. He was certainly very pale, and this stirred the depths of her feminine nature. She and her aunt came to see the invalid every day. Once the pretty girl said she would bring him a book to read and while away the hours which seemed shod with lead.

"I can't read," said Watkins, in a tone of deepest shame. "I never learned. I should like to read, too, but there's no one to teach me. So that settles that," and the rascal expressed a deep sigh.

Watkins lied. It was he who was the Princeton man. He said afterward that this lie was the only real good work he ever did in his life.

So the pretty girl came every day and gave Watkins a reading lesson, while the grizzled aunt read a book and watched them through the open door.

"By the way," said Watkins one day, "where's Moore?"

"Why?" asked the range boss, to whom the question was put.

"You tell him," said Watkins, his eyes beginning to gather rage, "that when I get out I'll be lookin' for him with something besides a field glass."

"Oh, no!" said the pretty girl, rising and coming toward his couch. Her tone showed disturbance and fear at the thought.

As he gazed at her the look changed in his eyes. Hate for Moore gave place to something else.

"No," he said at last. "Tell him it's all right, Rawlins."

The pretty girl thought him very noble.

Watkins was out in five weeks and could go about the ranch. One night Rawlins thought he heard a pony in the yard and arose to remedy the matter. As he stepped out a couple passed him in the moonlight. It was Watkins and the pretty girl. The catfist's arm was round her.—Dan Quin in Kansas City Times.

Bruin's Poker Bluff.

George Cole, of Fairhaven, Wash., who has had charge of a Port Townsend southern party of engineers for some time past, was in the city the other day, and talked freely of the experiences the "boys" had had with big game in that wild region. One of the stories which he relates is as follows:

"During the summer we had a pet bear—one that we caught when it was only a few weeks old, and kept until it got to be a nuisance. We had trained it down to a fine point. You have heard of the educated hog that could read? Well, Ruby couldn't do that exactly, but he could play cards, and when it came to a bluff at poker he simply couldn't be beaten. He was sublime."

"I've seen him when there was a pot of fifty or more lumps of sugar—we always played for sugar when Ruby was in it—bluff the entire gang and rake in the stakes when it proved he had nothing better than a pair of twos. No, he couldn't talk; but he'd wag his head if he wanted to pass, and his eye stood him in good stead when it came to anything else. Wonderful eye had Ruby, and I don't suppose we would have killed him if we hadn't caught him one day, after he had won nearly all the sugar in the outfit, scratching his ear and pulling out an extra ear from one of the big wrinkles in his neck. Alas, poor Ruby! He was a thoroughbred, but too smart for this country, and we had part of him for dinner that day."—Forest and Stream.

England's Fruits in the Middle Ages.

It is a curious fact that in the Middle Ages England was horticulturally much behind the continent of Europe. In Chaucer's time the English harbar was very meagerly supplied with vegetables, and but indifferently with fruits. Onions, leeks, nettles, peas and mustard were the only articles that then figured in the short catalogue of English vegetable supplies. There is no trace of the existence of cabbage in England at this period. In the contemporary accounts of orchards there is no allusion to plums, only once to damsons. The pears were poor, but the apples were good. It is questionable whether cherries, raspberries and strawberries had crossed the Channel.

The cherry gardens of Kent were first planted by a servant of Henry VIII. Before the close of the Sixteenth century, the turnip had reached England; so had the cauliflower and the guinea, for both are mentioned by Gerard in his "Herbar." Carrots, when Gerard wrote, were still a foreign vegetable, though their naturalization in England was not far off. In 1612 we hear of the peach, the almond and the filbert among the products of an English orchard, and in 1620 the apricot was transplanted from Morocco.—New York Ledger.

The persons who place any reliance in the prophetic qualities of dreams, an argument in support of their theory may be deduced from an incident that occurred some time before the escape of two prisoners from the Riverside penitentiary.

The best known man of the pair, Paddy McGraw, has a married sister living in the hill district. About two weeks before McGraw made the perilous descent to liberty over the prison walls she dreamed one night that her brother had made his escape much in the same way that it actually occurred.

She told several neighbors about it the next day, who can vouch for the accuracy of these statements. While she had the sympathy of a sister for a brother, when she awoke to the reality she had to content herself with the knowledge that Paddy's checkered career was at an end for the time being, and that while they knew where he was, they also knew he was away from the reach of all evil.

When the news of the escape became generally known the above circumstance was freely recalled, and dozens of people are now familiar with the story in the locality mentioned.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Birds' Eggs.

The old, wrinkled, dusky aunties of southern plantations will tell children, "Do not eat the bluebirds' eggs; they make you love to wander." They believe that the pale blue eggs of that beautiful creature, "that violet of the air," that bird with "sky tinge on his back, earth tinge on his breast," will make the greedy nest robber restless as long as he lives. No place, however enticing, can hold the being who has once tasted a bluebird's egg.

He who eats a mocking bird's egg will be compelled to "tell all he knows." The one who robs a killdeer's nest and eats its eggs will surely break an arm.

He who eats a dove's egg will be followed by bad luck, while the egg of any bird of yellow plumage will be sure to cause a fever, and he who eats an owl's egg will be always shrieking. The eater of a crow's egg will always, as old aunties say, "be gwine on foolish like a crow does go on, Ha! Ha! Ha! But a partridge's eggs," they declare, "du des make you thrive an' grow fast; dey is de onlies sort er birds' eggs dat you kin eat widout findin' 'em dangerous."—Youth's Companion.

He Waited.

Allen O'Myers was lecturing in an up country town. He had been speaking ten minutes, when a man in the front row arose and started to walk out. The lecturer was not taken aback by this expression of disapproval, but said, "Hold on, my friend, I'll join you outside in a couple of minutes." The audience laughed, and the man returned to his seat without a clove.—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

Let Him Alone.

A box of hardware weighing 600 pounds fell overboard from a vessel at Vancouver, and an octopus, who thought he had struck a soft thing, drew it along the sandy bottom of the harbor for a distance of 400 feet before becoming discouraged. Among the "don'ts" to be observed is don't fool with an octopus.—Detroit Free Press.

TROUBLE.

There is sorrow that causes the world to repine;
There is grief in the world, little man,
It will not grow too happy in your time or mine
If we make some one glad when we can.

There are tears—far more plenty than spring's early flowers—
We may find them wherever we go;
Let us heed that no look, word or action of ours
Will cause even one more to flow.

There is trouble enough in the world, little maid,
There is trouble enough and to spare;
Let's keep ours to ourselves, we need not be
That the others will not have a share.

Hints for a Bachelor.

An infant may be as old as Methusalem or as young as a baby ephemeron for all you can tell. Now, you need just one suggestion to help you out. It is this: If the baby is in long clothes call it a year old. It won't be, but that's part of the diplomacy. If it's in short clothes and can't talk call it 5 years. It won't be that, but that's more diplomacy. If it can talk call it anywhere from 6 to 8 years old.

This is the course which things may then be confidently expected to take: The mother proudly exhibits her offspring. Bearing in mind the rules here laid down you say of a long skirted youngster, "What a remarkably developed child for one a year old!"

"But it's really only six months, you know," answers the mother, indulgently unmindful of your mistake because of the flattery it implies.

In the case of a short skirted, non-locomotive youngster you will be safe in saying, "Isn't this a wonderfully fine baby for one four or five years old?" You may be years out of physical reckoning again, but the mother will soon see that it is the precocity of the infant that has misled you, and as before she will pardon much.

Remember this as you would the Ten Commandments: Always add to the age of a baby and subtract from the age of its mother. No matter how far astray you may go it will never be treasured up against you.—New York Evening Sun.

No Need of "Beauty Sleep."

It is all nonsense about "beauty sleep" coming in the hours before midnight, and that the rosy cheek on the country lass is the reward for retiring at the time when the proverbially pale faced city girl's evening commences. The late hours of fashionable life would not necessarily scatter the roses from the cheek if the late hour for retiring could be the same every night without variation. It is irregular hours and meals that cause pale and haggard faces. The handsome couple I ever saw retired regularly at 11:30, and always indulged in a light lunch just before retiring. They were both pictures of health.

The lady did not look over 25, though she never hesitated to say that she was 38 years old, and the husband looked at least ten years younger than he really was. They were both devotees to the laws of health. For years they had allowed nothing to interfere with the regularity of sleeping and eating hours. Almost the midnight hour was chosen for retiring, because it allowed them evenings at the theatre and an hour or so at even the most fashionable receptions. When alone in their home they never indulged in an earlier hour.—Chicago Herald.

Advice for Speakers.

One of the common mistakes made by the tyro in public speaking is that of exhausting his subject and his audience at the same time. By too great discursiveness the pith of the subject is lost, and what might have been a victory is turned into signal defeat. To save such a disaster one should think carefully upon any subject before attempting to talk upon it, and in the thinking keep strictly to the salient points and the simplest possible form of giving them expression.

Only the born orator, the genius, may safely venture into the flower garden of speech and indulge in glowing and highly colored perorations. To the ordinary speaker close attention to facts and simple statement in well chosen and convincing language are the safest and surest means of winning good opinions for self and success for one's cause at the same time.—Jenness-Miller Magazine.

Twenty years ago no photograph was more often seen than that of President Lincoln sitting with a big book on his knee, and his little son Tad leaning against him and looking at it with him. The book was then thought to be a Bible, but it wasn't. It was Photographer Brady's picture album, which the president was examining with his son while some ladies stood by. The artist begged the president to remain quiet, and the picture was taken.

Sailors are a bowlegged class. An old salt always walks as if he were on the deck of a ship, and he never takes great strides like a landsman. He is used to having to walk great distances, in his imagination, on the quarter deck, and he can't get rid of the habit of making the most of his promenade.

Senator Morrill, in spite of his 80 years, is devoted heart and soul to the improvement of the Capitol building at Washington. It is to him that is to be given the credit for the beautiful terraces which add so much of elegance and beauty to the Capitol building.

Banker Isidor Wormser, of New York, probably spends as much money for cigars during a day as any other man in the city. He smokes from fifteen to twenty cigars a day. The perfect is his favorite brand and they cost him twenty cents apiece.

FRISCO'S FREE BATHS.

The First Day's Bathing in the Tubs Provided by Millionaire Lick.

It was very evident that the public was not unaware of the hour at which the Lick free baths were to be opened, as at 1 o'clock that day large crowds were before the entrance of the building on Tenth street, near Howard. From this time on until the baths were closed at 7 o'clock the attendant's hands were quite full in caring for the patrons and visitors. Men, women, boys and girls were all there, and the respectability of the class of people who benefited by the generosity of the great philanthropist was particularly noticeable.

In less than half an hour after the opening of the baths the men's department was completely filled, and the large waiting room had from thirty to forty in it awaiting their turn, while the corridor leading from this room to the bath rooms was filled as well. The department for the opposite sex was not so well patronized at the start, but was fully filled, and those who did accept of the advantages offered were of the better walks of life. Women came by twos, mothers with their children, nurses with their charges, and many others flocked in to obtain visitors' cards with the evident intention of taking their bearings and coming again.

In the department for males there are forty rooms. These are large and light, with walls of corrugated iron, about 8 feet high and open at the top, for the free circulation of air. The whole interior is painted white, and a more scrupulously clean apartment could not be found. Each room contains a large tub, in which you can have either a hot or cold bath. Each is furnished with a neat table and chair, a mirror, beside which is suspended brush and comb, and at the end of the tub there is a flesh brush and a neat wire crate full of soap. Half an hour is allowed each bather. If a bather comes with his own towel there is no charge for the bath, and a blue ticket of admission is issued to him: if he requires a towel a deposit of five cents is asked, and he is provided with a yellow ticket, while if he must have two towels he is required to deposit ten cents, and a red ticket of admission is given.

The major portion of those patronizing the baths asked for the yellow ticket, which must be returned with the towel. In the men's quarter is an excellent shower bath, but in the women's department there is none. There are just half as many rooms in these as in the men's quarter, and from the attendance this seems to be a wise provision, as the proportion of patronage must have been three or four to one in favor of the males. A great many visitors' tickets were issued, and among those who applied for these were many prominent business men and many ladies who are interested in the welfare of the masses. The baths are open from 1 to 7 p. m. on every day except Saturday and Sunday. On Saturday they open at 1 and close at 8, while on Sunday they are open in the morning from 7 to 10.

Greasing Trolley Wires.

A somewhat singular outcome of the necessities of certain conditions of electric traction has just made its appearance. In frosty weather the firm contact between the trolley wheel and the wire of an electric railroad is interfered with seriously by the formation of a coat of ice on the wire, and the weight of the wire is thus so increased as to militate against the safety of the overhead work.

To overcome this difficulty an apparatus has been designed for greasing the wire, and thus preventing the adhesion of any considerable amount of moisture. A frame is made to support a pan. Inside the receptacle is a wheel or roller for taking up the grease and spreading it on the conductor. This grooved wheel is made of wood or hard rubber, and is covered with thick felt, so as to be perfectly adapted to carry up and smear upon the wire the contents of the pan. Where a semi-liquid substance is used for coating the conductor an endless belt or chain may be passed over the wheel for the purpose of carrying the grease.—Philadelphia Record.

The Dudish Parson.

A sick man sent for the nearest spiritual adviser. It so happened that the minister was a new fledgling just emerging from the seminary. He was dudish in the extreme. His coat was cut in true clerical style, and his face bore the expression of affected literary culture. Going to the poor man's house he sat on the edge of a chair, toying with his hat and stroking his downy mustache. Said he to the dying man, after a long spell of silence painful to all:

"What induced you to send for me?"
"You will have to speak louder," faintly replied the sufferer: "I'm dull of hearing."

"What induced you to send for me?" reiterated the clergyman.
"No use, can't hear. What does he say, Mary?" turning to his wife.

And then in a loud, shrill and stentorian voice the woman replied:

"He says what in the deuce did you send for him for."—Insurance Journal.

Millions Spent for Chewing Gum.

Drop a penny in the slot, and out comes a tiny bit of chewing gum neatly wrapped in colored paper. Are you hungry or thirsty? Then treat yourself to this one cent lunch or drink and be happy.

A penny for a stick of gum is a small item, but the 20,000,000 pennies spent every month make a pretty big item. Think of $2,500,000 for chewing gum! That is what Americans pay every year. Think of one city using 5,000 boxes a day, each box containing 100 sticks. That is what New Yorkers consume every twenty-four hours. It is no exaggeration to place the output of chewing gum in the United States at 3,500,000 pounds per annum, representing a total value of $2,500,000.—Pittsburg Bulletin.

AN ELEPHANT HUNT IN SIAM.

A Country Where Nearly 300 of the Big Animals Are Captured at a Time.

One scorching morning in April, 1870, a small party of Europeans left the city of Bangkok, the present capital of the kingdom of Siam, for Ayuthia, the old seat of government, sixty miles northward up the River Menam. A hunt had been appointed by the king, and the elephants were to be brought in through the country bordering the ancient ruins.

On the second day we arrived at Ayuthia, and set up our screens and hung our mosquito bars in a sala, or rest house, by the river side.

The following morning the elephants arrived. Just outside the city, and overlooking a plain extending to the horizon, was a high platform, mounted by stone steps and covered with a tiled roof supported by pillars. On this, screened from the sun, and with a broad outlook over the rice fields that had lately been shorn of their crop, sat a high official, his aids, a few native nobles and the foreign guests.

The other spectators perched in trees or found standing room wherever the view was most attractive. Immediately before the platform was the stockade, made by setting deep into the ground teak logs two yards in girth and twenty feet in length. These logs were so arranged as to leave interspaces of about one foot in width. They inclosed a half acre of level ground, and extended out, at the side opposite the platform, into a funnel shaped entrance only wide enough, where it joined the stockade, for the passing of a single elephant.

Gazing far across the stubble plain we saw the troop of elephants, encompassed by the many hunters who had been sent months before into the wilderness to entice the wild animals toward a rendezvous. The families, scattered in the jungles, foraging among the luxuriant herbage, had been separately enticed by tame decoy elephants, under the direction of wily hunters, and one had followed another into captivity. Two hundred and eighty elephants had thus been brought together. The sound of their roaring was like that of distant thunder, and as they approached the earth seemed to shake under their tread.

By a skillful combination of leading and driving they were slowly urged along toward the stockade. Foremost were the decoys, trained to their work, which they do with complacent discretion. They were ridden by experts in elephant training, and followed by the wild herds in which were elephants of all ages. Hemming in the assemblage on the sides and in the rear, many other tamed elephants directed by their riders urged on the lagglers with their long tusks and shouldered the stragglers into place.

Occasionally a huge fellow, becoming conscious of being directed by a will not his own, would rear, trumpet a protest, bolt through the arched sentinels and gallop toward the distant woods. But these fugitives were quickly chased by three or four trained beasts, and were soon brought back to the ranks. Only one, a majestic creature with enormous snowy tusks, distanced his pursuers and regained freedom in the bush.—St. Nicholas.

Sermons That Are Remembered.

I have listened to many eloquent, many striking, many admirable sermons. I have forgotten, I suppose, some five or six thousand sermons—forgotten all about them so completely that they have not left a trace in the memory, though at the time they may have had their infinitesimal influence for good on the life of every day. But of the remainder there were some which left deeper and indeed lifelong impressions. Of one of them, heard when I was a boy of 14, I remember nothing but the manner in which for all time it imprints the text itself upon my recollection.

The text was, "As the grass grows upon the house-tops, which withereth afore it be plucked up, whereof the mower filleth not his hand, neither that bindeth up the sheaves his bundle." Perhaps a sermon can produce no better effect than to burn into the brain the force or the imagery of a particular text. I remember how much I longed, after hearing that sermon, that my life might never be represented by such an image of utter uselessness—the rank, coarse grass upon the thatch, which the mower and reaper alike despise.—Canon Farrar in Forum.

Composition of an Average Man.

Huxley's table of the weights of the different parts of the average human body, often referred to as a most interesting compilation, has now been largely superseded by a table prepared by French chemist, which gives the pounds, ounces and grains of the different elements in the human body of the average of 154 pounds. It is as follows:

FROM THE JAPANESE.

"So young, he cannot know the way,"
 "Thus I heard a mother say
 At the close of a summer day;
 But he knew the road, it seems,
 Into the shadow land of dreams.
 And she wept above his clay.
 Since, though young, he knew the way

Gone, where summer moths resort,
 Or small boats that leave the port,
 Sailing over the stormy brine,
 As, with this long sleep of mine,
 Under the gloom of alien skies,
 I dry my weeping eyes

If I could be where the willow whirled,
 In a lacquered skiff, with a paddle of pearls,
 Young no more, but old and gray,
 You may be sure I'd know the way."

AN IDYL OF THE HT.

It is sunset at the HT ranch. Four or five cowboys sit gloomily about, outside the ranch house, awaiting supper. The Mexican cook has just begun his fragrant task, so a half hour must elapse before these Arabs are fed. Their ponies are turned into the wire pasture, their big Colorado saddles repose astride the low pale fence which surrounds the house, and it is evident that their riding is over for the day.

Why are they gloomy? Not a boy of them can tell. One is from Princeton. They have been partners and paneros and "worked" the HT cattle together for months, and nothing ever came in misunderstanding or cloud. The ranch house is their home, and theirs has been the unity of brothers.

A week ago a pretty girl, the daughter of one of the owners, came to the ranch from the east. She was protected in this venture by an old and grizzled aunt, watchful as a ferret, sour as a lime. Not that the pretty girl needs watching; she is indeed in every move propriety's climax. No soft or dainty reason woos her to the west; she comes on no love errand. She is elegantly and profoundly tired of the east, that is all, and longs for western air and western sights. She has been at the HT ranch a week, and the boys have met her, every one. The meeting or meetings were marked by awkwardness as to the boys, utter indifference as to the pretty girl. She met them as she met the ponies, cows, horned toads and other animals, domestic and indigenous to eastern New Mexico. While every cowboy was blushing and serenely guiltless of giving him a thought.

Before this pretty girl came the boys were friends, and the calm tenor of their relations with each other had never a ripple. She was not there a day before each drew himself insensibly from the others, and a vague hostility shone dimly in their eyes. It was the instinct of the fighting male animal aroused by the presence of the pretty girl. She, however, proceeded on her daily way, sweetly unconscious of the sentiments she had awakened.

Men are mere animals; women are, too, for that matter, but they are very different animals from men. The effort the race makes to be the other, better or different than beasts fails. It always fails; it will always fail. Civilization—culture—is the varietal veneer and famously thin. A year on the plains cracks this veneer—this shell—and leaves the animal exposed. This is by the expanding growth of all that is animalish in a man; these attributes of the physical being fed and pampered by a plains existence.

The dark, vague, impalpable differences which cut off each of these creatures from his fellows and inspired him with an unreasoning and unmeasurable hate had grown with the brief week of their existence. A philosopher would look for trouble soon on the HT.

"What did you go and take my saddle for yesterday, Bill?" said Jack Moore to a boy by the name of Bill Watkins.

"Cause I allows I'll ride it some," says Watkins. "I thought it might like to carry a high grade cowpuncher once."

"Well, don't take it no more," said Moore, moodily, ignoring the gay insolence in the reply. "Leastwise, don't come a-takin' of it an' sayin' nothin'. You can palaver Americano, can't you? When you aims to ride my saddle agin, ask for it; if you can't talk make signs, and if you can't make signs, shake a bush, but don't go Injunin' off no saddle of mine no more."

"Whatever do you allow is liable to happen if I take it agin to-morrow?" inquired Bill in high scorn.

Bill was of a more vivacious temper than the gloomy Moore.

"You takes it agin an' I mingles with you a whole lot, mighty prompt," replied Moore in a tone of obstinate injury.

These boys were brothers in affection before that pretty girl came, and either would have gone afoot all day to lend his saddle to the other. Going afoot, too, is the last thing, let me assure you, a cowboy will do.

"Well, don't you fail to mingle none," said Bill, with cheerful ferocity, "on account of its being me. I crossed the trail of the shorthorn like you, over on the Panhandle once, an' puts him in the fire an' has plenty of fun with him."

"Stop the play now, right yere," said Tom Rawlins, the HT ranch boss, who was sitting close at hand. "You all spring trouble 'round yere an' I'll be in it. Whatever's the matter with all you people anyway? You're like a passel of sore 'head' dogs for more'n a week now. You're shorly too many for me to sabe, an' I c'lar gives you up."

The boys started some grumbling reply, but the cook called them to supper just then, and one animalism becoming overshadowed by another, they forgot their rancor and vague animosities in thoughts of supplying their hunger. Toward the last of the repast Rawlins arose and going to another room began overlooking some entries in the ranch books.

The pretty girl did not eat at the ranch table. She had little banquets in her own room. Just then she was in her own room and began singing in a low tenor some tender little love song that seemed born of a sigh and a tear. The boys at supper heard her, and their resentment of each other's existence began again to flame in their breasts and burn deeply in their eyes. None of these savages was in the least degree in love with the pretty girl either. They might have become so, all or any of them.

The singing went on in a cooling, soft way that did not bring you the words—only the music.

"What I says about my saddle a while back, I means," said Moore, finally, turning dark looks on Watkins.

"See yere," said Watkins, in an exasperated tone—he was as vicious as Moore—"if you're p'intin' out for a war jig with me, don't fool 'round none for reasons, but jest let 'er roll. Come a-runnin', an' don't bother none with ceremony."

"A man don't need to have no reasons for crawlin' you none," said Moore. "You're fair game, you are. Anyone's licensed to chase you 'round jest for fun an' exercise."

"You can gamble," said Watkins confidently, "any man as chases me 'round much will regard it as a thrillin' pastime. He won't get fat at it—none whatever."

"As you all seem to feel that away," said Moore, "I'll step out and shoot with you right now."

"Well, I'll shore go you," said Watkins.

They arose and stepped out at the door.

It was gathering dark, but it was light enough to shoot by.

The other cowboys followed in silence.

Not one said a word in comment or interference. They were grave and serious, but passive. It is not good form to interfere with other people's duels in the southwest. The pretty girl was still singing, and the strains fell softly on the ears of the cowboys. Every one, whether onlooker or principal, felt inspired with a lurking, pleased anticipation of the blood to be soon set flowing. Nothing was said of distance. They separated to about forty paces and turned to face each other. Each wore his "Colt's 45," the loosely buckled belt letting it rest low down on the right hip. Each threw down his big hat and stood at apparent ease, with his thumbs caught in the pistol belt.

"Shall you give the word, or me?" said Moore.

"You give it," said Watkins. "It'll be a funny passage in American history if you get your artillery to the front any sooner than I do, then."

"Be you ready?" asked Jack.

"Shore."

"Then—go!"

"Bang! Bang! Bang! Bang!" went both pistols together, and with a rapidity not to be counted, Moore got a crease in his left shoulder—a mere wound to the flesh—and Watkins fell with a bullet in his side. Rawlins, the range boss, came running out. He understood all at a look. Hastily examining Moore he discovered that his hurt was nothing serious. The others carried Watkins into the house.

"Take my pony, saddled at the fence, Jack," said Rawlins, "and pull your freight. This yere man's goin' to die."

"Which I shorely hopes he does," said Jack, bitterly. "I'll go, though; I ain't got no use for none of these yere heshornthorns around the HT."

So he took Rawlins' pony, and when he stopped riding in the morning it was no marvel that the poor pony hung his head dejectedly, while his flanks steamed and quivered. He was almost 100 miles from his last corn, and cooled his nervous muzzle as he took his morning drink in the Rio Pecos, a stream far to the west of the HT.

"Some shooting scrape about their saddles, miss; that's all." So reported Rawlins to the pretty girl.

"Isn't it horrible!" shuddered the pretty girl, in reply.

The next morning the pretty girl and her grizzled and twisted aunt paid the injured Watkins a visit. This sight so affected the other three cowboys that they at once saddled and rode away to the northwest to work some cattle on the Ocate Mesa. They intended to be gone three months. They looked black and forbidding as they galloped away.

"It's a pity Jack Moore ain't no better pistol shot," said one, as the picture of the pretty girl visiting the wounded Watkins arose in his mind.

"That's whatever," assented the others.

The pretty girl was full of sympathy for the stricken Watkins. It occurred to her, too, that his profile was clear and handsome. He was certainly very pale, and this stirred the depths of her feminine nature. She and her aunt came to see the invalid every day. Once the pretty girl said she would bring him a book to read and while away the hours which seemed shod with lead.

"I can't read," said Watkins, in a tone of deepest shame. "I never learned. I should like to read, too, but there's no one to teach me. So that settles that," and the rascal expressed a deep sigh.

Watkins lied. It was he who was the Princeton man. He said afterward that this lie was the only real good work he ever did in his life.

So the pretty girl came every day and gave Watkins a reading lesson, while the grizzled aunt read a book and watched them through the open door.

"By the way," said Watkins one day, "where's Moore?"

"Why?" asked the range boss, to whom the question was put.

"You tell him," said Watkins, his eyes beginning to gather rage, "that when I get out I'll be lookin' for him with something besides a field glass."

"Oh, no!" said the pretty girl, rising and coming toward his couch. Her tone showed disturbance and fear at the thought.

As he gazed at her the look changed in his eyes. Hate for Moore gave place to something else.

"No," he said at last. "Tell him it's all right, Rawlins."

The pretty girl thought him very noble.

Watkins was out in five weeks and could go about the ranch. One night Rawlins thought he heard a pony in the yard and arose to remedy the matter. As he stepped out a couple passed him in the moonlight. It was Watkins and the pretty girl. The catfist's arm was round her.—Dan Quin in Kansas City Times.

Bruin's Poker Bluff.

George Cole, of Fairhaven, Wash., who has had charge of a Port Townsend southern party of engineers for some time past, was in the city the other day, and talked freely of the experiences the "boys" had had with big game in that wild region. One of the stories which he relates is as follows:

"During the summer we had a pet bear—one that we caught when it was only a few weeks old, and kept until it got to be a nuisance. We had trained it down to a fine point. You have heard of the educated hog that could read? Well, Ruby couldn't do that exactly, but he could play cards, and when it came to a bluff at poker he simply couldn't be beaten. He was sublime."

"I've seen him when there was a pot of fifty or more lumps of sugar—we always played for sugar when Ruby was in it—bluff the entire gang and rake in the stakes when it proved he had nothing better than a pair of twos. No, he couldn't talk; but he'd wag his head if he wanted to pass, and his eye stood him in good stead when it came to anything else. Wonderful eye had Ruby, and I don't suppose we would have killed him if we hadn't caught him one day, after he had won nearly all the sugar in the outfit, scratching his ear and pulling out an extra ace from one of the big wrinkles in his neck. Alas, poor Ruby! He was a thoroughbred, but too smart for this country, and we had part of him for dinner that day."—Forest and Stream.

England's Fruits in the Middle Ages.

It is a curious fact that in the Middle Ages England was horticulturally much behind the continent of Europe. In Chaucer's time the English harder was very meagerly supplied with vegetables, and but indifferently with fruits. Onions, leeks, nettles, peas and mustard were the only articles that then figured in the short catalogue of English vegetable supplies. There is no trace of the existence of cabbage in England at this period. In the contemporary accounts of orchards there is no allusion to plums, only once to damsons. The pears were poor, but the apples were good. It is questionable whether cherries, raspberries and strawberries had crossed the Channel.

The cherry gardens of Kent were first planted by a servant of Henry VIII. Before the close of the Sixteenth century, the turnip had reached England; so had the cauliflower and the guinea, for both are mentioned by Gerard in his "Herbal." Carrots, when Gerard wrote, were still a foreign vegetable, though their naturalization in England was not far off. In 1612 we hear of the peach, the almond and the filbert among the products of an English orchard, and in 1620 the apricot was transplanted from Morocco.—New York Ledger.

The persons who place any reliance in the prophetic qualities of dreams, an argument in support of their theory may be deduced from an incident that occurred some time before the escape of two prisoners from the Riverside penitentiary.

The best known man of the pair, Paddy McGraw, has a married sister living in the hill district. About two weeks before McGraw made the perilous descent to liberty over the prison walls she dreamed one night that her brother had made his escape much in the same way that it actually occurred.

She told several neighbors about it the next day, who can vouch for the accuracy of these statements. While she had the sympathy of a sister for a brother, when she awoke to the reality she had to content herself with the knowledge that Paddy's checkered career was at an end for the time being, and that while they knew where he was, they also knew he was away from the reach of all evil.

When the news of the escape became generally known the above circumstance was freely recalled, and dozens of people are now familiar with the story in the locality mentioned.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Birds' Eggs.

The old, wrinkled, dusky aunties of southern plantations will tell children, "Do not eat the bluebirds' eggs; they make you love to wander." They believe that the pale blue eggs of that beautiful creature, "that violet of the air," that bird with "sky tinge on his back," that bird on his breast," will make the greedy nest robber restless as long as he lives. No place, however enticing, can hold the being who has once tasted a bluebird's egg.

He who eats a mockingbird's egg will be compelled to "tell all he knows." The one who robs a killdeer's nest and eats its eggs will surely break an arm.

He who eats a dove's egg will be followed by bad luck, while the egg of any bird of yellow plumage will be sure to cause a fever, and he who eats an owl's egg will be always shrieking. The eater of a crow's egg will always, as old aunties say, "be gwine on foolish like a crow does go on, Ha! Ha! Ha! But a partridge's eggs," they declare, "do des make you thrive an' grow fas; dey is de onlies sort er birds' eggs dat you kin eat widout findin' 'em dangerous."—Youth's Companion.

He Waited.

Allen O'Myers was lecturing in an up country town. He had been speaking ten minutes, when a man in the front row arose and started to walk out. The lecturer was not taken aback by this expression of disapproval, but said, "Hold on, my friend, I'll join you outside in a couple of minutes." The audience laughed, and the man returned to his seat without a clove.—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

Let Him Alone.

A box of hardware weighing 600 pounds fell overboard from a vessel at Vancouver, and an octopus, who thought he had struck a soft thing, drew it along the sandy bottom of the harbor for a distance of 400 feet before becoming discouraged. Among the "dents" to be observed is don't fool with an octopus.—Detroit Free Press.

TROUBLE.

There is sorrow that causes the world to repine;
 There is grief in the world, little man,
 It will not grow too happy in your time or mine
 If we make some one glad when we can

There are tears—far more plenty than spring's
 early flowers—
 We may find them wherever we go;
 Let us heed that no look, word or action of ours
 Will cause even one more to flow

There is trouble enough in the world, little
 maid,
 There is trouble enough and to spare;
 Let's keep ours to ourselves, we need not be afraid

That the others will not have a share.

Hints for a Bachelor.

An infant may be as old as Methuselah or as young as a baby ephemeron for all you can tell. Now, you need just one suggestion to help you out. It is this: If the baby is in long clothes call it a year old. It won't be, but that's part of the diplomacy. If it's in short clothes and can't talk call it 5 years. It won't be that, but that's more diplomacy. If it can talk call it anywhere from 6 to 8 years old.

This is the course which things may then be confidently expected to take: The mother proudly exhibits her offspring. Bearing in mind the rules here laid down you say of a long skirted youngster, "What a remarkably developed child for one a year old!"

"But it's really only six months, you know," answers the mother, indulgently unmindful of your mistake because of the flattery it implies.

In the case of a short skirted, non-locomotive youngster you will be safe in saying, "Isn't this a wonderfully fine baby for one four or five years old?" You may be years out of physical reckoning again, but the mother will soon see that it is the precocity of the infant that has misled you, and as before she will pardon much.

Remember this as you would the Ten Commandments: Always add to the age of a baby and subtract from the age of its mother. No matter how far astray you may go it will never be treasured up against you.—New York Evening Sun.

It is all nonsense about "beauty sleep" coming in the hours before midnight, and that the rosy cheek on the country lass is the reward for retiring at the time when the proverbially pale faced city girl's evening commences. The late hours of fashionable life would not necessarily scatter the roses from the cheek if the late hour for retiring could be the same every night without variation. It is irregular hours and meals that cause pale and haggard faces. The handsome couple I ever saw retired regularly at 11:30, and always indulged in a light lunch just before retiring. They were both pictures of health.

The lady did not look over 25, though she never hesitated to say that she was 38 years old, and the husband looked at least ten years younger than he really was. They were both devotees to the laws of health. For years they had allowed nothing to interfere with the regularity of sleeping and eating hours. Almost the midnight hour was chosen for retiring, because it allowed them evenings at the theatre and an hour or so at even the most fashionable receptions. When alone in their home they never indulged in an earlier hour.—Chicago Herald.

Advice for Speakers.

One of the common mistakes made by the tyro in public speaking is that of exhausting his subject and his audience at the same time. By too great discursiveness the pith of the subject is lost, and what might have been a victory is turned into signal defeat. To save such a disaster one should think carefully upon any subject before attempting to talk upon it, and in the thinking keep strictly to the salient points and the simplest possible form of giving them expression.

Only the born orator, the genius, may safely venture into the flower garden of speech and indulge in glowing and highly colored perorations. To the ordinary speaker close attention to facts and simple statement in well chosen and convincing language are the safest and surest means of winning good opinions for self and success for one's cause at the same time.—Jenness-Miller Magazine.

Twenty years ago no photograph was more often seen than that of President Lincoln sitting with a big book on his knee, and his little son Tad leaning against him and looking at it with him. The book was then thought to be a Bible, but it wasn't. It was Photographer Brady's picture album, which the president was examining with his son while some ladies stood by. The artist begged the president to remain quiet, and the picture was taken.

Sailors are a bowlegged class. An old salt always walks as if he were on the deck of a ship, and he never takes great strides like a landsman. He is used to having to walk great distances, in his imagination, on the quarter deck, and he can't get rid of the habit of making the most of his promenade.

A new leather dressing is a stuffing or filling compound in which are employed neatsfoot oil, beeswax, extract of logwood, borax, castile soap and other ingredients, in specified proportions, in order to soften and polish as well as preserve leather.

Senator Morrill, in spite of his 80 years, is devoted heart and soul to the improvement of the Capitol building at Washington. It is to him that is to be given the credit for the beautiful terraces which add so much of elegance and beauty to the Capitol building.

Banker Isidor Wormser, of New York, probably spends as much money for cigars during a day as any other man in the city. He smokes from fifteen to twenty cigars a day. The perfect is his favorite brand and they cost him twenty cents apiece.

FRISCO'S FREE BATHS.

The First Day's Bathing in the Tubs Provided by Millionaire Lick.

It was very evident that the public was not unaware of the hour at which the Lick free baths were to be opened, as at 1 o'clock that day large crowds were before the entrance of the building on Tenth street, near Howard. From this time on until the baths were closed at 7 o'clock the attendants had their hands quite full in caring for the patrons and visitors. Men, women, boys and girls were all there, and the respectability of the class of people who benefited by the generosity of the great philanthropist was particularly noticeable.

In less than half an hour after the opening of the baths the men's department was completely filled, and the large waiting room had from thirty to forty in it awaiting their turn, while the corridor leading from this room to the bath rooms was filled as well. The department for the opposite sex was not so well patronized at the start, but was fully filled, and those who did accept of the advantages offered were of the better walks of life. Women came by twos, mothers with their children, nurses with their charges, and many others flocked in to obtain visitors' cards with the evident intention of taking their bearings and coming again.

In the department for males there are forty rooms. These are large and light, with walls of corrugated iron, about 8 feet high and open at the top, for the free circulation of air. The whole interior is painted white, and a more scrupulously clean apartment could not be found. Each room contains a large tub, in which you can have either a hot or cold bath. Each is furnished with a neat table and chair, a mirror, beside which is suspended brush and comb, and at the end of the tub there is a flesh brush and a neat wire crate full of soap. Half an hour is allowed each bather. If a bather comes with his own towel there is no charge for the bath, and a blue ticket of admission is issued to him; if he requires a towel a deposit of five cents is asked, and he is provided with a yellow ticket, while if he must have two towels he is required to deposit ten cents, and a red ticket of admission is given.

The major portion of those patronizing the baths asked for the yellow ticket, which must be returned with the towel. In the men's quarter is an excellent shower bath, but in the women's department there is none. There are just half as many rooms in these as in the men's quarter, and from the attendance this seems to be a wise provision, as the proportion of patronage must have been three or four to one in favor of the males. A great many visitors' tickets were issued, and among those who applied for these were many prominent business men and many ladies who are interested in the welfare of the masses. The baths are open from 1 to 7 p. m. on every day except Saturday and Sunday. On Saturday they open at 1 and close at 8, while on Sunday they are open in the morning from 7 to 10.

Greasing Trolley Wires.

A somewhat singular outcome of the necessities of certain conditions of electric traction has just made its appearance. In frosty weather the firm contact between the trolley wheel and the wire of an electric railroad is interfered with seriously by the formation of a coat of ice on the wire, and the weight of the wire is thus so increased as to militate against the safety of the overhead work.

To overcome this difficulty an apparatus has been designed for greasing the wire, and thus preventing the adhesion of any considerable amount of moisture. A frame is made to support a pan. Inside the receptacle is a wheel or roller for taking up the grease and spreading it on the conductor. This grooved wheel is made of wood or hard rubber, and is covered with thick felt, so as to be perfectly adapted to carry up and smear upon the wire the contents of the pan. Where a semi-liquid substance is used for coating the conductor an endless belt or chain may be passed over the wheel for the purpose of carrying the grease.—Philadelphia Record.

The Dudish Parson.

A sick man sent for the nearest spiritual adviser. It so happened that the minister was a new fledgling just emerging from the seminary. He was dudish in the extreme. His coat was cut in true clerical style, and his face bore the expression of affected literary culture. Going to the poor man's house he sat on the edge of a chair, toying with his hat and stroking his downy mustache. Said he to the dying man, after a long spell of silence painful to all:

"What induced you to send for me?" "You will have to speak louder," faintly replied the sufferer: "I'm dull of hearing."

"What induced you to send for me?" reiterated the clergyman.

"No use, can't hear. What does he say, Mary?" turning to his wife.

And then in a loud, shrill and stentorian voice the woman replied:

"He says what in the deuce did you send for him for."—Insurance Journal.

Millions Spent for Chewing Gum.

Drop a penny in the slot, and out comes a tiny bit of chewing gum neatly wrapped in colored paper. Are you hungry or thirsty? Then treat yourself to this one cent lunch or drink and be happy.

A penny for a stick of gum is a small item, but the 20,000,000 pennies spent every month make a pretty big item. Think of $2,500,000 for chewing gum! That is what Americans pay every year. Think of one city using 5,000 boxes a day, each box containing 100 sticks. That is what New Yorkers consume every twenty-four hours. It is no exaggeration to place the output of chewing gum in the United States at 3,500,000 pounds per annum, representing a total value of $2,500,000.—Pittsburg Bulletin.

AN ELEPHANT HUNT IN SIAM.

A Country Where Nearly 300 of the Big Animals Are Captured at a Time.

One scorching morning in April, 1870, a small party of Europeans left the city of Bangkok, the present capital of the kingdom of Siam, for Ayuthia, the old seat of government, sixty miles northward up the River Menam. A hunt had been appointed by the king, and the elephants were to be brought in through the country bordering the ancient ruins.

On the second day we arrived at Ayuthia, and set up our screens and hung our mosquito bars in a sala, or rest house, by the river side.

The following morning the elephants arrived. Just outside the city, and overlooking a plain extending to the horizon, was a high platform, mounted by some steps and covered with a tiled roof supported by pillars. On this, screened from the sun, and with a broad outlook over the rice fields that had lately been sown of their crop, sat a high official, his aids, a few native nobles and the foreign guests.

The other spectators perched in trees or found standing room wherever the view was most attractive. Immediately before the platform was the stockade, made by setting deep into the ground teak logs two yards in girth and twenty feet in length. These logs were so arranged as to leave interspaces of about one foot in width. They inclosed a half acre of level ground, and extended out, at the side opposite the platform, into a funnel shaped entrance only wide enough, where it joined the stockade, for the passing of a single elephant.

Gazing far across the stubbly plain we saw the troop of elephants, encompassed by the many hunters who had been sent months before into the wilderness to entice the wild animals toward a rendezvous. The families, scattered in the jungles, foraging among the luxuriant herbage, had been separately enticed by tame decoy elephants, under the direction of wily hunters, and one had followed another into captivity. Two hundred and eighty elephants had thus been brought together. The sound of their roaring was like that of distant thunder, and as they approached the earth seemed to shake under their tread.

By a skillful combination of leading and driving they were slowly urged along toward the stockade. Foremost were the decoys, trained to their work, which they do with complacent discretion. They were ridden by experts in elephant training, and followed by the wild herds in which were elephants of all ages. Hemming in the assemblage on the sides and in the rear, many other tamed elephants directed by their riders urged on the laggards with their long tusks and shouldered the stragglers into place.

Occasionally a huge fellow, becoming conscious of being directed by a will not his own, would rear, trumpet a protest, bolt through the portion of sentinels and gallop toward the distant woods. But these fugitives were quickly chased by three or four trained beasts, and were soon brought back to the ranks. Only one, a majestic creature with enormous snowy tusks, distanced his pursuers and regained freedom in the bush.—St. Nicholas.

Sermons That Are Remembered.

I have listened to many eloquent, many striking, many admirable sermons. I have forgotten, I suppose, some five or six thousand sermons—forgotten all about them so completely that they have not left a trace in the memory, though at the time they may have had their infinitesimal influence for good on the life of every day. But of the remainder there were some which left deeper and indeed lifelong impressions. Of one of them, heard when I was a boy of 14, I remember nothing but the manner in which for all time it imprints the text itself upon my recollection.

The text was, "As the grass grows upon the house-tops, which wither before it be plucked up, whereof the mower filleth not his hand, neither that bindeth up the sheaves his bundle." Perhaps a sermon can produce no better effect than to burn into the brain the force or the imagery of a particular text. I remember how much I longed, after hearing that sermon, that my life might never be represented by such an image of utter uselessness—the rank, coarse grass upon the thatch, which the mower and reaper alike despise.—Canon Farrar in Forum.

Composition of an Average Man.

Huxley's table of the weights of the different parts of the average human body, often referred to as a most interesting compilation, has now been largely superseded by a table prepared by French chemist, which gives the pounds ounces and grains of the different elements in the human body of the average of 154 pounds. It is as follows:

SALEM, January 3, 1891.

To-day begins our greatest of all great efforts in the ladies' cotton underwear business.

Enormous as have been our previous sales, economic as we have made all prices, always, and spite of efforts of manufacturers to increase the prices, we never had a stock a third so big, nor near so cheap.

CHANGE OF HEART.

Before Thanksgiving Day I thought Her lovely, pure and sweet.

I'll think of her no more henceforth, Since I have seen her eat.

BUSINESS AS SHE IS CONDUCTED. At Home—Morning.

Mrs. Noggs—"My dear, can you do an errand for me at Jordan, White, & Norwell's to-day?"

Mr. Noggs—"Sorry, my dear, but I can't possibly. I shall be rushed with business all the afternoon."

At The Office—Afternoon.

Mrs. Noggs—"Mr. Noggs is out, I see. Do you know when he will return?"

Capable Office Boy—He has gone out on very important business, ma'am. He said he would be back right after the foot-ball game.

CHANCE FOR A FORTUNE.

Seedy Gentleman—"Will you help me to win a wager, sir?"

Bank President—"What do you mean?"

Seedy Gentleman—"Why me and my friend here have made a wager. He bets me $1,000,000 against thirty cents that I can't eat thirty quails in thirty days. I've got the thirty cents. What I want to know is, if you'll help me to a fortune by providing the quails?"

THE WEAKER, THE LOUDER, AS USUAL.

Brown—"Is n't Jones a man of very strong opinions?"

Gray—"You wouldn't think so if you should hear how violently he expresses them."

HARD TIMES.

Mrs. Jimson—"Does n't it make you feel more religious when you are well-dressed than you feel at other times?"

Mrs. Gadzoos—"Mrs. Jimson, it has been so long since I have had that experience that I really could not say."

DRUM AND CYMBALS.

"Don't you think it is time for Mir-a and to play on some musical instrument Edward?" asked Mrs. Sharp of her husband, as the notes of their daughter's voice floated in from an adjoining room.

"Yes," replied Edward, with conviction, "I do; but it should be some loud instrument, to drown her voice."

AN EFFECTIVE PLAYER.

"I tell you," said Smith, speaking of a noisy musician, "that man just makes the piano talk."

"Yes," said Jones, "and he makes everybody who hears the piano swear."

THEY HAVE NEVER FAILED.

I have been sick more or less for the last ten years, which has cost me many dollars in doctors and druggists' bills. The last two years it only cost me three dollars. Why? Because I used Sulphur Bitters instead of employing doctors. They cured me of Jaundice.—F. F. Boyd, Hoboken.

A FATAL MISTAKE.

Physicians make no more fatal mistake than when they inform patients that nervous heart troubles come from the stomach and are of little consequence. Dr. Franklin Miles, the noted Indiana specialist, has proven the contrary in his new book on "Heart Disease" which may be had free at Wm. T. Lee's who guarantees and recommends Dr. Miles' unequalled New Heart Cure, which has the largest sale of any heart remedy in the world. It cures nervous and organic heart disease, short breath, fluttering, pain or tenderness in the side, arm or shoulder, irregular pulse, fainting, smothering, dropsy, etc. His Restorative Nervine cures headache, fits, etc.

MILES' NERVE & LIVER PILLS,

Act on a new principle—regulating the liver, stomach and bowels through the nerves. A new discovery. Dr. Miles' Pills speedily cure biliousness, bad taste, torpid liver, piles, constipation. Unequaled for men, women, children. Smallest, mildest, surest! 50 doses, 25 cts. Samples Free, at William T. Lee's.

HOW TO SUCCEED.

This is the great problem of life which few satisfactorily solve. Some fail because of poor health, others want of luck but the majority from deficient grit—want of nerve. They are nervous, irresolute, changeable, easily get the blues and "take the spirit's down to keep the spirits up," thus wasting money, time, opportunity and nerve force. There is nothing like the Restorative Nervine discovered by the specialist, Dr. Miles, to cure all nervous diseases, as headache, the blues, nervous prostration, sleeplessness, neuralgia, St. Vitus dance, fits and hysteria. Trial bottles and fine book of testimonials free at Wm. T. Lee's.

There seems to be general regret among members and friends of the Marblehead Co., C., 5th Regt. that the new Armory project failed of execution as had been desired. A wooden building with tin roof is not acceptable to the company, and it seems hardly suitable in this age.

A Costly Art Project.

Mr. Franklin W. Smith of Boston, who is a lover of art, is in Washington to advocate the erection by Government of a magnificent structure for history and art in that city, to cost $5,000,000. He proposes that a temple like the Parthenon shall crown one of the surrounding hills about Washington, and be encircled by immense galleries to be occupied by the most famous works of art. Mr. Smith is very enthusiastic upon this subject, and his courage appears to have no bounds.

Special Tax on Beer.

The committee on Ways and Means has before it a very important bill which is of the greatest interest to maltsters and brewers. It is proposed in the bill to levy a special tax upon beer not made wholly of barley, malts and hops.

The bill was introduced into the House of Representatives at the last session by Mr. Turner of Kansas and into the Senate by Mr. Walcott of Colorado.

It proposes to impose a special tax upon, and to regulate the manufacture, sale and importation of adulterated malt liquor. The maltsters on one side and the brewers on the other are preparing for a vigorous contest over it. The bill provides, in effect, that beer which may contain any other ingredients than barley, malt, hops, water and yeast shall be sold in stamped packages to indicate that it is not made of these ingredients.—Boston Journal.

The weather in the vicinity of Bangor, Me., on Wednesday morning, was the coldest ever known there. The thermometer registered 40 degrees below zero.

At the Maine state college, Orono, it was 36 3-10 degrees below, which was the coldest known in 22 years, a record being kept at the college.

At Hampden it was 35 degrees below while in Aroostook county, in some places, it was 60 degrees below zero by the spirit thermometer.

At East Eddington it was 46 degrees below; at Eddington Bend, 43 degrees; at Frankfort, 35 degrees; at Vanceboro, 40 degrees; at Passadumkeag, 37 degrees; and at Winn, 44 degrees below zero.

Many persons in this section had their ears, noses, hands, and feet frozen, and the farmers who drove into the city suffered very severely.

The air was so full of frost in the morning that it resembled a heavy fog. Frost has entered the ground to the depth of four feet. The ice in the river is much thicker than was ever known at this season of the year.

John Gillespie of Bangor, Me., a horseshoer, started to go from Oldtown to Stillwater on foot. The thermometer registered about 20 degrees below zero.

It was about 10 o'clock when he arrived in Stillwater, and his feet, face, ears and hands were then terribly frozen. He was in a critical condition.

There is a growing impression that New Year calling is falling off; that the care, vexation and annoyance outweigh the pleasure and profit. But so long as the White House sets the fashion there will be hundreds who will follow. The White House is tenacious of custom and precedent, and not until we have a bachelor or widowed president utterly destitute of female relatives will the White House fail to keep open New Year's to all comers.

But there are annoyances. At a certain O street house two gentlemen called together. The servant whose duty it was to attend the door had disappeared for the time being and the cook was drafted into service. She was not up to the latest development of polite circles, but was not to be caught napping.

After a brief parley at the door she appeared in the parlor with a single card in her hand. Beckoning to her young mistress, she said in a stage whisper:

"Thayre's two min at th' dure, but they've awnly wan ticket. Shall oi lit th' both ay thim in?"—Washington Post.

The Danvers Historical Society held its annual reunion on Thursday evening.

The best medical authorities say the proper way to treat catarrh is to take a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla.

The New York Commercial Bulletin suggests that Congress refer currency question to a select commission. This has merit, in that it might give Congress time to recover its senses and the country a momentary respite from the delicious attempts of its statesmen to "do something" to relieve the financial stress. There is nothing now in the business situation that begins to be so disturbing and so destructive of confidence as the fool eagerness of Congress to further doctor the currency.—Springfield Republican.

George Melville, who plays the clown in Hanlon's "Superba" at the Globe, was almost suffocated by gas at Kieth's Hotel yesterday morning.

He was called as usual at about 8 o'clock, but an hour later the employees discovered an odor of gas in the hall-way which was traced to Melville's room.

The door was burst open and the actor was discovered insensible upon the bed. Dr. Charles Burnham was called, and after considerable difficulty succeeded in restoring consciousness. He is rapidly improving. It is supposed the gas which had been burning in Melville's room, was put out by him, when he was first called, and that his hand accidentally turned the key in the operation.

Peabody Academy of Science has issued a circular of information giving the object of the "trust" and a summary of the valuable collection of that useful institution.

In her volume of "Far West Sketches" lately published by the Lathrop Company, Mrs. Fremont shows herself to have been a fearless frontierswoman. Like all army women, she evidently made little of personal discomfort, and even when her husband was away on some dangerous errand she hoped for the best. Once, however, she had an experience that tried her courage, and it was in itself so curious that one can but wonder what the Society for Psychological Research would say to it. In the winter of '53-'54, when Mr. Fremont was on an exploring expedition, his wife was living in Washington, near her father. One night Mrs. Fremont had been sitting up late listening to her sister's account of a ball from which they had just returned. As she knelt before an open fire, balancing a long stick of wood which she was about to put in the grate, "suddenly," she writes, "a hand rested lightly on my left shoulder and Mr. Fremont's voice pleased and laughing, whispered my name. There was no sound beyond the quick whispered name—no presence, only the touch—that was all. But I knew (as one knows in dreams) that it was Mr. Fremont, gay, and intending to startle my sister, whose ready scream always freshly amused him. For two weeks before this, Mrs. Fremont had been so impressed with the conviction that her husband was on the verge of starvation that she had been losing appetite and sleep. Now, after this half vision, the feeling came to her that he was out of danger, that he had come to speak to her, to tell her so. The matter was freely discussed in the family, and the precise day and hour of the vision noted. They could not hope to hear from Mr. Fremont for many months, but at length letters came to confirm all his wife's impressions. During the fortnight when she had believed him to be starving, Mr. Fremont and his men were passing through a horrible ordeal of hunger and cold. On the night when his wife had felt his presence, the explorer had reached a little Mormon settlement; and, after due allowance for difference in longitude, at the very moment when he seemed to stand near her, Mr. Fremont was entering in his journal a wish that his wife might know of his safety.

The following incident occurred in a pious family not a hundred miles from Stoughton. On Thanksgiving morning the head of the family, while thanking the Lord for the good He had done for the little ones of his family, grew eloquent over the benefits they had received. He thanked Him for the old horse Barney, which gave them such delightful country riding. He thanked him for their home and good dinners, and he poured out his soul in thanks to God for the toys that they had. His little four-year-old daughter could not contain herself. She broke into the prayer with a sigh, and then clapping ecstatically, said: "Oh, God, don't you wish you were us?"

F. M. Wilkins.

Mr. Frank M. Wilkins, of the firm of Wilkins Bros. & Co., engaged in sheep and cattle business, died at his ranch in Val Verde Co., Texas, on Dec. 18, 1890. Mr. Wilkins was born at Peabody, Mass., in February of 1849, and was a son of James W. and Julia A. Wilkins. He was graduated from Amherst College in 1872; was for two years master of the high school at Canton, Mass.; was admitted to the practice of law at the Massachusetts bar in 1874, and was located at Brockton, Mass. In 1877 on account of lung trouble, physicians advised his going to Texas. He was admitted to the Texas bar in 1878, but even in that warm climate could not endure indoor confinement. He then interested himself in the stock-breeding business of Texas, and with his brothers, Cyrus W. and Fred A. Wilkins was doing an extensive business at their ranch in Val Verde and Crockett counties. Mr. Wilkins was honored and respected by all who knew him, and all southwestern Texas mourn his loss as a valuable citizen, a true hearted, genial friend and one of the leading stockmen of the State.

SOCIETY NOTES.

District Deputy, Shove Symonds, installed the following officers at Geo. Peabody Lodge, No. 18. A. O. U. W. on Monday evening: M. W., F. G. Preston; F. Wm. M. Lockhead; O. John Kay; R. W. T. Strout; F. D. A. Goodridge; R. T. W. Shepherd; G. Charles Poeten; I. W. George Jernyn; O. W. Charles Noyes; P. M. W. Horace G. Upton.

After the regular installation ceremonies the party adjourned to Essex hall, the use of which had been kindly permitted by the British American Association, where a fine banquet had been prepared by Smith & McCallis, caterers of Salem, to which they did ample justice, and indulged in speech making and listened to selections upon the piano by Harry F. Stockwell. Several visitors from out of town lodges were present and a general good time was enjoyed. The party broke up at twelve o'clock. The lodge commences the new year under very favorable circumstances, quite a number of applications being now pending for membership. It is expected that at the next meeting five candidates will be given the degrees.

The officers of Holton Lodge I. O. O. F., were installed Tuesday evening by D. D. G. M., W. H. Lewis and suite of Lynn, and are as follows: N. G., Willard G. Cook; V. G. Wm. M. Munroe; Rec. Sec., Henry Baetje; P. S., Geo. H. Manning; Treas., G. F. Sanger; W. G. S. Smith; O. E. B. McNeal; I. G., Joseph Clotney; O. G., D. A. Goodrich; R. S. N. G., Joseph Blake; L. S. N. G., John G. Burbeck; R. S. V. G., Charles S. Batchelder; L. S. V. G., Justice Jones; R. S. S., John A. Tedford; L. S. S., A. P. Saunders; chaplain, Wm. A. Saunders. Following the close of the lodge a banquet was held at Baldwin's hotel.

Grand Army Hall was crowded with veterans, sons of veterans and wives and daughters, sisters and cousins of veterans on Tuesday evening, together with a large number of people not allied to any Grand Army organization. The occasion was a joint installation of the officers of the Sons of Veterans' camp, the Women's Relief Corps and Union Post, 50. The officers of the camp were first installed by Capt. F. D. Nimblett of Danvers, and staff. Next followed the induction into office of the officers elect of Corps 52 by Mrs. Mary Hawkes of Danvers, and the exercises were concluded by the mustering in of the officers of Post 50 by Commander Ely W. Hall of Post 5, Lynn. The usual speech making was dispensed with, contrary to the general custom, but to the evident satisfaction of all, and a collation consisting of ham sandwiches, hot coffee, ice cream and cake was served, to which every one did ample justice. The ceremonies of installation were carried out in a manner creditable to the installing officers and to all who took part. George H. Green holds over another year as captain of the S. of V., Miss S. F. Kittredge continues as president of the Relief corps, and Capt. W. F. Wiley enters upon his second term as commander of Post 50.

Dairymen, stockmen, livery stable men and horse-car men unite in saying that no such horse and cattle lotion as Salvation Oil has ever been put up in the market. It should be kept at every stable and stock yard in the land. Price 25 cents a bottle.

For good Goods it will pay you to look at C. J. O'Keefe's stock at 633 Essex street.

The W. R. C. Entertainment

Union Relief Corps has arranged a novel entertainment for next Wednesday evening in the large Town Hall which must draw a good audience. It is an extravaganza comprising many characters, with costumes rich and striking, culminating in a final tableau of great brilliancy. The parts have never been printed, the play having been purchased in manuscript by the Corps, from the parties who last presented it to the public in Washington. It was especially well received there and will give a delightful evening's entertainment here, as some seventy well known young ladies are to wear the taking costumes and enact the different parts. The Goddess of Fame court for the purpose of giving "the crown of fame to her who bears the fairest name." Martha Washington, Mary, Queen of Scots, Joan of Arc, in her garb of armor, the sister singers—Alice and Phoebe Cary—Louise Alcott, Mother Goose, the Irish Servant Girl, Isabella, Queen of Spain, Florence Nightingale, Cleopatra, Harriet Beecher Stowe, the Sister of Charity, Barbara Fritchie, Topsy, Pocahontas, Ruth and Miriam from the pages of the Bible, Sappho whom Byron helped to immortalize, Grace Darling, keen Samantha Allen—Josiah Allen's wife—and Mrs. Partington and Ike,—and possibly, others—are all claimants of the crown, and good pleaders in their own behalf. All appear in characteristic costumes and manner, the queens with attendants as becometh royal personages. Much singing will add to the interest of the occasion and the 8th Regiment orchestra will supply the instrumental music which makes a prominent feature throughout the performance. Mr. Barrell of Cambridge has been drilling the participants for some time and will look after the stage effect and minutiae of the play on the evening of its presentation. Tickets are already largely sold as there has been a good demand for them by those who were in the secret of preparation. Lee, at his drug store, has them on sale; reserved seats 50 cents, and admission tickets, 35 cents. The profits of the entertainment will go into the treasury of the W. R. C. This will prove to be the most brilliant entertainment of the season.

Painful Accident.

On Monday afternoon at about 5 30, word was brought to Frank E. Farnham, Esq., by a messenger, that his son, Henry H. Farnham, whose age is twelve years, had fallen and broken his arm. Hastily summoning a physician and repairing to his home, he found the boy suffering from a bad gash in the head, where an artery had also been severed, his front teeth upon the upper jaw had all been knocked out and both arms had been broken near the wrist, the left wrist was also broken and that arm was also broken in two other places.

Dr. C. C. Pike attended to his injuries and relieved his sufferings as well as possible under the circumstances.

A short time ago, Horace, the older brother, captured a "screech owl" near high bridge, and afterward the brothers sighted a grey owl, which was subsequently shot by Frank Roome. Thinking that the mate still remained in the tree the boys determined to capture it, and Monday afternoon Henry went alone to the spot where the owl had been shot and climbed the tree to see if he could find the coveted prize. On reaching the hole where the owl was expected to be, he found it empty. While descending his weight was brought upon a decayed limb, which broke and precipitated him with great force to the ground, about twenty feet below where he landed upon an old stone wall, head foremost. His arms were outstretched and no doubt saved his life.

His escape was miraculous. The fall was sufficient under most circumstances to have broken his neck, and the wonder is that he was not rendered unconscious by the concussion and thus perished by the exposure to the cold.

The little patient requires constant attention to relieve his intense sufferings, although to-day he is much improved.

Miss E. T. Larkin, minister of the Society of Friends, will conduct a service at the Sutton Home, Sunday, Jan. 11, at 3 P. M. Mrs. Benj. Upton and Miss McPherson will furnish the vocal music.

Daniel B. Lord, the plumber, has issued a neat business card, the reverse side containing the Peabody fire alarm. The demand for these cards has been large, necessitating a second edition being printed.

Both speakers admitted that the road belonged to Salem to build, but stated that when the matter came before the Aldermen, they were not prepared to recommend the order before the Commissioners and appropriate the necessary funds for construction. The ideas expressed at this meeting simply favored a conference of the Selectmen with the Salem Board of Aldermen. This road would be very much more useful to Peabody teamsters than to Salem people, as it would avoid climbing Blubber Hollow hill and the scheme seemed to present many advantages that made it commendable to Peabody voters. Mr. Trask stated that if a reasonable part of the expense were borne by Peabody, the road would undoubtedly be built. He stated that the portion of the road that "Peabody was supposed to build was only about 2500 feet." The motion to adopt article was carried.

The third article to authorize the call to the legislature for permission to appropriate money necessary to defray the expenses, as no authority seems to exist for raising money for such a case as this, the road, or portion of which, Peabody proposes to pay, being outside the town limits.

Rufus H. Brown made a motion that a committee of three be appointed to push the matter in the legislature. Moderator Perkins asked if the legislative work would not be after the conference with Salem, Mr. Goulding explained that the article was put into the warrant to facilitate matters. If the legislature granted the thing asked for, and Salem and Peabody could not agree, it would not make no difference. The idea was to have everything ready to vote an appropriation at the coming March meeting. Mr. Goulding then said that the matter of building this road had been dragging along since the spring of 1888. If the road is constructed, now Salem will maintain it hereafter.

Stephen Blaney approved the idea of this road. It was needed perhaps more by Salem than Peabody. He considered that Salem ought to pay for this road, but rather than not have the road he should say that if Peabody could pay one-quarter of the expense, go ahead with the work. The motion was carried by a unanimous vote.

The committee then elected to present the matter to the legislature are C. Warren Osborn, Samuel Trask, and Rufus Brown.

The 4th article in the warrant was the adoption of the Australian system of voting for town officers, etc. With very little discussion the question was put and moderator Perkins counted 45 affirmatives. He said that he was somewhat of the opinion that under the by-laws of the town it needed a vote of 100 to appropriate money for the purpose. The vote was doubted and three tellers appointed, who on the next vote found 158 voters in the affirmative and none in the negative. Just before this vote was taken, Richard Barry said he would like to hear the question again as he and others could not hear the moderator. He would like to know what would be the benefits of the adoption of the system. Mr. Goulding briefly said that the benefits would be the same as that of the State election. It would educate the voters. Then the hustling and turmoil would all be done away with, and a voter could vote free from prying eyes. [Applause.]

The matter of the number of town officers remained practically the same as last year, with the exception of the constables. It was voted to make the number three.

"Get another dozen lamp chimneys."
 "What! are they all gone?"
 "Yes."
 "I'm going to try a sort I've been reading about, if I have to send to Pittsburgh for 'em. Macbeth & Co.'s 'pearl-top.' They say their chimneys don't break."

"Another humbug, probably."

"Don't Muggins keep 'em?"
 "I'm going to see. Give me a postal card. I'll have that chimney, anyhow."

Muggins got 'em for him, and did a thriving chimney business for several weeks, till everybody got 'em; and somehow his trade has increased all round ever since.

The Old Soldier.

I sit on a stile and watch the drill,
 The sword is bright with morning dew.
 I feel in my heart a surging thrill
 As the squadrons thunder "soultu Quadrupedante."

I think of the days long since gone by,
 How well I remember my bottled horse;
 His temper was bad; he'd kick sky high;
 But few I've had better, and many worse;
 Poor Rosinante!

And the note of our old chief's command
 In memory's ear still echoing sounds.
 His drills were held by the cornet's band
 To stir the blood like a day with hounds;
 But the chief is dead.

Those cheery cornets, all comrades good,
 'Tis sad to think how few remain,
 They did their duty as soldiers should,
 And the joy of life was sufficient gain
 To each reckless head.

The squadrons form and advance and wheel
 How I envy those boys, who ride in line!
 Each snubbed face looks as brave and leal
 As those of the messmates thirty year syne
 In my days of gold.

But the trumpet cries, "Ride home at ease,"
 And, though I am a wad of small account,
 I can wish good luck to lads like these
 As I leave my stile. 'Twas steady mount For a soldier old.

—London World.

My Laddie? No.

Was it up or down our boat shot out?
 You who are oarsmen maybe know;
 There seemed no need that I should heed
 Aught save to watch my laddie row.
 The floating tress's of the trees
 Bent low to kiss the river's edge;
 A pipe of bird, whose nest was stirred,
 Rose sleepily from out the sedge.

The swift turns of the curving course,
 The tranquil nook where lilies slept;
 A human flute, now sharp, now hoarse,
 As low beneath the bank we crept.
 The wet tips of the willow ropes
 Dripped silver in that magic air;
 The river's like a giant hedge,
 Grew denser with shadows black as a d bare.

A sudden flash of gleaming lamps,
 Where sweet, shrill laughter pierced the night;
 A glint and glow on us below,
 Then—stillness, and the rare moonlight.
 A twany head in crimson cap,
 Eyes, honest eyes, most darkly blue;
 Bare arms of snow that come and go
 Athwart a statue's rosy hue.

O moon! what strange dementia breeds?
 What stirs this quiet pulse of mine?
 What vision sweet and incomplete
 Flashes the world with light divine?
 No answer! But the moon shines on,
 Smiling, mayhaps, with gentle glee
 Why should I wish with her to kiss
 The rower, who is not for me?

Some day the statue will arouse,
 The marble arms with warmth will glow;
 Then in his boat another'll float,
 And she will watch my laddie row.
 "And why," you ask, "to other loves
 Do I resign my gondolier?"
 "Because (Ah, me! the cruelty!)
 I am his maiden aunt, my dear."

RATS!

They Are Intelligent and Possess a Keen Sense of Humor.

Rats have always been credited with great intelligence. Their tricks sometimes rise entirely above the level of mere animal cunning and reach the domain of humor. A family living on the West side, says the Buffalo Express, has been both amused and annoyed by the doings of a rat in the cellar. To give an outline of the creature's career would fill a book, and only a few of his feats can be referred to here.

He appeared to delight most in carrying things about the cellar, and his favorite freight was eggs. The eggs were kept in a box with a cover shutting close down over it, not a mere lid, but a real shutter with a rim on it. This rat cared little for that, but not only carried off the eggs as fast as he pleased, but he always shut the cover just as he found it.

It is said that rats carry eggs between their fore paws and walk on their hind ones like a kangaroo, but nobody appears to have found out just how this one carried on his business. The eggs would be found everywhere about the cellar and in the most unaccountable places, sometimes stored away in a corner with something thrown over them to cover them up, sometimes tucked into holes in the wall, but none of them was ever eaten by a rodent. He did everything just for the fun of the thing, and never for plunder. But somehow the family didn't take kindly to the rat and his ways, and unfeelingly set a trap and caught him, when he was dispatched just as though he wasn't a bit of a genius. But still the eggs turn up in unexpected parts of the cellar, just to remind people of the sharp quadruped that once had the run of things down there. The last discovery is of two or three eggs on top of the brick wall of the furnace, which not only rises perpendicularly from the floor nearly to the next floor, but has apparently no approach on which an animal could walk. How did the creature get them there?—Boston Herald.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL.

To-night closes the long and successful run of the "Soudan" at the Boston Theatre. Next week will begin an engagement of the "The Crystal Slipper" by the American Extravaganza Co., of Chicago, which will continue for a limited season.

At the Park Theatre "Around the World in Eighty Days" is the attraction, introducing Avolo Brothers who have been secured direct from Paris, Eden Theatre, the Nantus-kies from Riga, Russia, and Jaco and Coco, the human monkeys, and the Grand Amazonian marches.

The "Solicitor" still continues to attract at the Museum.

At the Hollis Street next week for one week only, James T. Powers and a company of talented comedians will appear in "A Straight Tip."

At the Grand Opera House, Lewis Morrison as Mephisto in Faust, closes tonight and Monday will be followed by "The Great Metropolis."

At the Tremont Theatre, Nat Goodwin makes his farewell tonight. Monday the Cadet Thetricals "Injured Innocents" will be put on.

Monday, at the Globe Theatre the J. C. Duff Company will present "The Red Hozzer."

"Shenandoah" has again made a big hit at Chicago.

R. E. Graham, as the Duke in "The Sea King," made an immense hit at St. Louis on Monday. This clever young comedian seems to be one of the most popular on the road this season.

"The Burglar" is drawing large audiences to Heuck's Opera House, Cincinnati, this week. Al S. Lipman carried off the honors, as usual.

"Natural Gas" is getting a reputation as a record-breaker in the West. The vagaries of Millie Price have not in any way injured the prospects of Donnelly and Girarde. Sam P. Cox is making arrangements to marry off the young ladies in his company in all the towns they play in. He says it booms business. He will secure divorces for them when they play return dates.

Frank Blair and Edith Murrilla have done much to brighten their parts in "Ship Ahoy."

Henry E. Dixey was thirty-two years old last Tuesday.

Fanny Rice will leave the Casino May 1, and star in a farce-comedy.

The Gilsey estate began rebuilding the Fifth Avenue Theatre on Tuesday. Harry Miner is to have a ten years' lease of it when finished.

"The Fakir" comes to Sinn's Brooklyn Theatre Jan. 26, and then to New York for the first time at Hammerstein Harlem Theatre, Feb. 9.

In the Leslie Carter Co., Raymond Holmes seems to be the only one that has made a success.

Basil West has joined "The Homestead" Co.

The concert tour of Xavia Scharwenka will be limited to the larger cities of the Eastern and Central States although the management is besieged with call for the appearance of the pianist in all parts of the Continent. His reputation seems to have spread amazingly.

The only ones who really lost money by the great fire are Fanny Davenport and the members of her company. All the rest were fully insured.

"A Texas Steer" ends its successful ten week's run at the Bijou Theatre, Jan. 24.

Cecil Clay, husband of Rosina Vokes, fell through a shaft at the Madison Square Theatre on Monday, and dislocated his ankle.

"The Power of the Press," which will soon be produced in New York, shows the power of the press in this manner. The hero is sent to prison, where he serves a sentence of five years, and then a newspaper finds he is innocent.

"The Pharisee," produced lately in London, is said to have been written for the life and adventures of A. M. Palmer.

Next season Mr. Robert L. Downing will send "Tally Ho" on the road under the management of Josh. M. Ogden. The play was written by Joaquin Miller, and is considered his best. It will be done in first-class style.

SUDDEN DEATHS.

Heart disease is by far the most frequent cause of sudden death, which in three out of four cases is unsuspected. The symptoms are not generally understood. These are: a habit of lying on the right side, short breath, pain or distress in side, back or shoulder, irregular pulse, asthma, weak and hungry spells, wind in stomach, swelling of ankle or dropsy, oppression, dry cough and smothering. Dr. Miles' illustrated book on Heart Disease, free at William T. Lee's who sells and guarantees Dr. Miles' unequalled New Heart Cure, and his Restorative Nerve, which cures nervousness, headache, sleeplessness, effects of drinking, etc. It contains no opiate.

EDITORIAL BRIEFS.

WE REGRET that the W. C. T. U. column was obliged to be omitted last week, on account of its late arrival, and the various delays caused by getting our new boiler in working trim.

THE PRESS has been equipped with a new twenty horsepower steam boiler. It is of steel and the latest and most approved pattern, and is twice the size of the old boiler, which it has supplanted. It was placed in position by John Boyle & Co. This increase of size has been made necessary by our large and rapidly increasing Job Department, as well as to afford us better facilities for getting out our editions of the PRESS and Fireside Favorite, both of which are making steady progress in growth of circulation. With our new facilities, we shall be enabled to deliver the PRESS at the Post Office at 12 o'clock, Saturday noon, which will enable our numerous readers to peruse its columns Saturday evening. We trust this change will be appreciated by all of our subscribers.

IT LOOKS as if Senator Cameron would succeed himself. At a caucus of the Republicans of the Pennsylvania Legislature on Wednesday the sentiment seemed strongly set in favor of returning him. It is uncertain however, just what position he will take on the National Election Bill but Representative Quay, son of the United States Senator, gave his word, that three months ago, he heard Cameron say, he would go with his own party and support the election bill. This statement was confirmed by Senator Gobin and others. It is well known that in the recent action of Congress upon the question of side tracking the election bill to give place to the silver bill, Cameron was not found with Senator Hoar and the other friends of the former measure. Mr. Cameron's popularity will doubtless carry him through, whichever stand he intends to take, particularly as there is an uncertainty as to his opinions.

THE CONNECTICUT Legislature met Wednesday morning at ten o'clock. In the senate organization, senator Reid, of Bridgeport was elected President pro tempore; but in the House, a long debate on technical parliamentary questions indulged in, which was delayed the organization. The Senate is democratic while the House is republican. The Senate has by committee demanded of the Board of Canvassers, a canvass of votes for State officers, which is declined by Secretary of State Walsh, and Treasurer Henry, who constitute a majority of that Board as that forms a part of their report to the general assembly. There being no general assembly until the organization of both branches, no report could be made. At the afternoon session the House finally effected an organization by electing N. W. Page, republican, speaker, and carrying out the rest of the program of the republican caucus. The report of the Board of Canvassers was then presented, but discussions between the two branches left the report in the possession of the House.

IN CONSEQUENCE of threats of violence, Governor Goodell ordered a patrol guard in about the various apartments of the State Capitol on Wednesday, when the legislature met for organization and election of Governor. This is the first time in the history of the State that a guard has even been deemed necessary at the Granite State Capitol; but Governor Goodell acted wisely in thus preparing for extreme measures. The circumstances of the state election left the complexion of the legislature in an unsatisfactory condition and open threats have been made by the democrats, that violence would follow any opposition to their endeavor to organize in accordance with their elections, as they claimed them; but it is a deplorable spectacle for one of our old New England States here where we have attempted since the foundation of the Federal government, set the precept and emulate the example of moderation and decorum. In newer communities, such occurrences would hardly call for passing notice, but for Puritanic New England, it looks like retrogression.

Perfect health is seldom found, for impure blood is so general. Hood's Sarsaparilla really does purify the blood and restores to perfect health, when possible. Try it yourself.

LATS MONDAY witnessed the inauguration of the new city governments throughout the state. Newly elected mayors have had an opportunity to tell what they are to do. The citizens will now have an opportunity to see how near they will come to the mark.

THE WEYMOUTH Gazette, commenting upon a recent editorial of the Hingham Journal upon the subject of Young Men's Republican Club, intimates that there is a tendency of the young men towards democracy, and suggests that if the Republicans are wise they will search for the cause of this tendency and take measures to counteract it. The present generation of young men cannot, it continues, "be aroused to enthusiasm by the record of what a party did a quarter of a century ago. Their eyes are turned to the future, and appeals to record do not reach their hearts. The men they wish to support for office are the young, active and wide-awake men of to-day, and not the men who were active twenty-five years ago and have been living largely upon their record since." There is good food for reflection in these words, even if it does sound a little like croaking. The tendency, we might almost say policy, of the Republican party in Massachusetts, has ever been to keep young men back, with an intimation that "children should be seen, not heard," but the time has come when the young men refuse like Banquo's ghost, to "down" at the bidding of the old war horses of the party, but in the strength and vigor of their youth, they are beginning to assert themselves; and as they knock at the door of the party for recognition, it behooves those who wield the power to-day to postpone no longer their claims. It is little encouragement to aspiring young men to be compelled to wait, regardless of fitness, like privates of the army, for promotion, where the officers "never resign and seldom die." There is undoubted wisdom in the old maxim, "old men for counsel and young men for war," and too great care cannot be exercised, that in recognizing the young men that the tide is not wholly overturned and the current sent in the opposite direction, as is too often the case when attempts are made to reorganize established customs, and that the older men are not thrust bodily aside to make room for an influx of young blood. The young men should have a chance, but it is not necessary or proper to turn over to them the whole government.

NEW HAMPSHIRE ELECTS A GOVERNOR.

THE NEW Hampshire legislature organized Wednesday with 179 Republicans and 153 Democrats upon its role, and elected Hiram H. Tuttle, Republican, governor for the two years next ensuing. He received 185 votes while Amsden received 150.

A USEFUL MISSION.

A SOCIETY has been organized in Newton, as a branch of the Red Cross, under the name of "The Hygiene and Emergency Society", for the purpose of spreading information relating to the causes, means of prevention and remedy of diseases, including information upon the domestic and public sanitary problem. It also aims to familiarize the community with the ready remedies to apply in cases of accident and other emergencies, through the means of lectures by local physicians. The care of the sick is another of its points of instruction. The society is made up of members of the community generally, without regard to vocation. A similar society would find abundant opportunity to display its usefulness in Peabody, as well as in some of our neighboring cities and towns. The sanitary condition of Peabody is a matter that will, ere many years call for consideration and action, and it would not be amiss to begin early to investigate the systems of sewerage in use, that we may be prepared when the question is forced upon us for determination, to deal with it understandingly. Much valuable time might thus be saved and needless expenditures of money upon experiments, be avoided.

Lynn's shoe shipments for the year ending Saturday made a very good showing considering that fire created such devastation in the heart of that shoe city. The total shipments for 1888 were 302,112 cases, and 1889 there were shipped 295,743 cases. For three weeks in November and December 1889 no shoes were shipped from Lynn. After that the city began recovering from the effects of the fire. The figures of the past year only show a loss of 113 cases. The largest week's shipment last year was 7,527 cases October 16, the smallest one January 9, being 3,170 cases.

At present trade is quiet. No more could be expected just at this time. A good trade is anticipated by manufacturers the present year.

Nannkeag Railway. A petition from the Nannkeag Street Railway Co. for leave to connect its turnouts from Carlton street to the Willows, thereby making a double track down Fort avenue, was referred to the committee on streets.

Beverly Bridge.

The draw of Beverly bridge was opened 108 times in 1890, to allow a passage for craft of all kinds. According to the report of the Superintendent John F. Pummer, 62 vessels with 16,095 tons of coal, 8 with 2308 tons of pipe for the new water works main between Salem and Danvers, 46 lumber laden ones, and a large number laden with bark, corn, gravel, fish, guano, iron, salt, etc., comprised the list.

Report Of The County Treasurer.

The statement of the County Treasurer, shows the receipts for the year to have been $471,188.95, of which $205,000 was from county tax, $71,456.59 was from loans and interest, $6197.81 from Ipswich house of correction, $9207.67 from Lawrence house of correction, $8411.21 from Salem house of correction, $25,161.03 from fines and costs of police court, $1134 from naturalization fees, $4552.71 from sheriff's fines, $3880.72 from fees, of clerk of Supreme and Superior Courts, $23,745.70, from dog licenses. The expenditures were $353,340.81, of which $81,582.27 were notes and interest, $20,975.51 support of prisoners of Ipswich house of correction, $26,583.94 for support of prisoners of Lawrence house of correction, $17,438.25 support of prisoners of Salem house of correction, $10,528.43 support of prisoners of Newburyport house of correction, $43,888.82 cost of criminal prosecutions, $16,258.50 cost of jurors, $31,221.06 cost of highways and bridges. The outstanding notes of the county amount to $310,000, of which $100,000 matures in 1891. The total gross county debt is $338,395.27, less cash in treasury Jan. 1, 1891, 111,848.13, making net indebtedness $226,547.13.

The Essex County Schoolmaster's Club dined Saturday at the Tremont House, Boston. Members were present from Lynn, Salem, Peabody, Haverhill and Amesbury. It was voted to hold the next meeting at Haverhill.

The annual meeting of the Essex County Teachers' Association will also be held in Haverhill. This meeting is held Friday following the annual Fast Day in April.

"Go where glory waits thee," she said as she buckled on his armor, and pressed into his off hand a small package. It contained a few bottles of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup; she did not want to have to contend with an enemy and a cold at the same time. Sensible girl!

Salem people are large owners in the Newmarket cotton mills at Newmarket, N. H., which were visited by fire last Friday evening. It was a hard battle for about three hours. The town fire companies worked well, but their machines were of little use. The fire was confined to the attic of No. 1 mill, as the lower stories were protected by the automatic sprinkler. The roof was nearly destroyed and the bell fell into the river.

The main building of the Geneva Worsted Mill, owned and operated by the Geneva Worsted Company, were burned Monday forenoon. The loss is estimated at $100,000. It was insured for $66,000, no company having over $3000.

Putting hot ashes into a wooden box in the cellar is thought to have been the cause of the fire in the residence of Dr. George M. Rhodes, at the corner of Milton and Rockwell street, Dorchester, shortly after seven o'clock Monday morning. The flames spread with great rapidity, causing damages estimated at $5000.

Adj. Gen. Dalton has transmitted to Gov. Bracket his annual report on the Massachusetts volunteer militia. The compensation allowed by the state to its militia he deems entirely insufficient, and not commensurate with the duty required. The state militia at present comprises 405 officers and 5470 enlisted men, with a vacancy of one company of infantry. It is well equipped, but a change is suggested in the present fatigue cap and dress helmet. The expenses of the department for the year have been $188,444, with an unexpended balance of $20,056. The usual routine work on war records has continued; 8172 certificates of army and naval service have been made, 8617 letters and indorsements were written, and 610 testimonials of service engrossed.—Lowell Courier.

Practical home missionary work is being boomed at the expense of more or less satisfactory soul-saving labor in Africa, China and other countries where the by-mo-book and the rum of civilization are slowly penetrating. People are beginning to realize that right here in Boston there is opportunity to spend, in legitimate, uplifting philanthropy, all the money that there is to spend for such purposes. Let charity begin at home, by all means; and, if necessary, let her remain there until she finds that her services are no longer required.—Charlestown Enterprise.

Said an oculist: "If you are troubled with your eyes it will not be sufficient for you to have your eyes carefully examined by a specialist, and then get your glasses and think that you are all right. You may be careful to wear glasses whenever you are using your eyes, but this is not enough. You must, in order to keep them in good condition and to be able to rely upon them, have them examined as often as you do your teeth."

"No sensible man thinks that when a good dentist has put his teeth in order he has nothing more to fear. He goes to his dentist once every year, perhaps oftener. And so with his oculist. He should consult him at regular intervals. If his eyes have not grown weaker, or if they have not changed in other ways, he is assured of the fact, and may use them accordingly. If the slightest change in glasses is required he is warned of this, and is able to nip a new evil in the bud."—New York Tribune.

A great many people want to know how large Texas is in area. They look in quite a number of alleged statistical abstracts and never find the same figures in two of them. The official figures of Texas area are 252,696 square miles—equal to about 8.9 per cent of the entire area of the United States and territories. Texas is six times larger than New York, seven times as large as Ohio, and 100,000 square miles larger than all the Eastern and Middle states, including Delaware and Maryland. Compared with the countries of Europe she has 34,000 square miles more than the Austrian Empire, 62,000 more than the German Empire, and nearly 70,000 square miles more than France.—Texas Trade Journal.

Hon. Marcus Morton Seriously Ill. The friends of ex-Chief Justice Marcus Morton have been considerably worried regarding the state of his health since his retirement from the bench last year, and their anxiety increased eight weeks ago when the venerable jurist, now in his 72nd year, was attacked with heart trouble. Since that time he has been confined to his house, and a portion of the time to his bed. Judge Morton is at present under the care of Drs. C. G. Crawford of Lawrence and J. W. Letch of Andover. He finds sleep almost impossible, and walks about the house continuously.

January Closing Sale, Prior to Stocking Taking.

Which sale for a variety of reasons will, it is believed, exceed in interest and importance any sale we have ever made. Every department in the house will share this great dry goods distribution, and offer very unusual advantages to buyers. We wish it distinctly understood, however, that we do NOT CLAIM to HAVE REDUCED EVERYTHING. This would be impossible on a market firm and advancing in very many lines of goods; but in a great stock such as ours—the largest well regulated dry goods stock in Salem—there are many goods, each lot moderate in quantity and perhaps somewhat broken in assortment, which it pays us directly to turn into cash, besides the large indirect advantage—which we greatly value—of distributing say $51,000 worth of real bargains in Dry Goods among our customers far and near. Besides this there are holders of goods, who recognizing the great outlet here afforded come to us, and in order to realize immediate cash, which they know can always be commanded here by prices sufficiently low offer us extraordinary inducements. In the recent condition of the market these offerings have been not only unusually abundant, but of a more interesting character than usual, and have invariably been availed of by us when we considered the interests of our patrons sufficiently served. Many such lots will be found in this great January sale. The aggregate constitutes, we believe, the most attractive offering we have ever made. We submit today in Ladies' Cloaks, Dress Goods, Boots and Shoes. The new Cotton Underwear is here. The spring stock of linen Housekeeping Goods is here. Next week Hamburgs, Scotch Ginghams and India Silks, the largest and choicest stock that will be shown in Salem as here, before.

A CITY LUXURY.

Just as the city looks to the country for most of the luxuries used on its tables, so the country must turn to the city for those conveniences which are justly termed luxuries for the hard-working housewife. City housekeepers have learned to realize that to save time is to lengthen life.

SAPOLIO?

is one of the best known city luxuries and each time a cake is used an hour is saved. On floors, tables and painted work it acts like a charm. For scouring pots, pans and metals it has no equal. IF YOUR STOREKEEPER DOES NOT KEEP IT YOU SHOULD INSIST UPON HIS DOING SO, as it always gives satisfaction and its immense sale all over the United States makes it an almost necessary article to any well-supplied store. Everything shines after its use, and even the children delight in using it in their attempts to help around the house.

"Lost in Sorrow," Reverie for Piano, by Ecker. This is without question one of the most beautiful pieces of of this class of music that has ever come to our notice. It is simply elegant and will no doubt be as much a favorite as "Wiegand's Morning Prayer Meditation." Price of above new piece is but 40c. Ing. Fisher, Publisher, Toledo, O.

Every house should have at least one good Easy Chair. The most comfortable pattern ever invented is the famous Morris Chair, which adjusts to four different inclinations of the back. Morris Chairs cost usually from $40 to $75, but a new and beautiful pattern is now offered by Paine's Furniture Co., 48 Canal street, Boston, at the low price of $28.

Of the numerous Carrier Boys' addresses that have come under our notice, that issued by the Salem Gazette leads all, in point of originality and literary display. The poetical selection—"The Broomstick Train," from the pen of Oliver Wendell Holmes, is a refreshing departure from the ordinary, "original" doggerel verse that usually disfigures carriers' addresses.

The "Every-Day Circle" of "The King's Daughters," made a pleasant visit on Saturday afternoon, to the Sutton Home for Aged Women. All were gathered together in the reception room, and Miss M. J. Floyd gave the origin of the Order of "The King's Daughters." Miss E. T. Larkin led in prayer, Mrs. E. C. Porter of Salem, the newly elected president of the Circle, made a few remarks, Miss. Lina McPherson gave choice recitations, Mrs. Benj. Upton gave appropriate selections of song, and New Year's gifts were presented to each member. A most enjoyable hour was spent by all. There are several members of the Order in town. This Circle numbers fourteen.

Dyspepsia

Makes the lives of many people miserable, causing distress after eating, sour stomach, sick headache, heartburn, loss of appetite, a faint, "all gone" feeling, bad taste, coated tongue, and irregularity of the bowels. Dyspepsia does not get well of itself. It requires careful attention, and a remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which acts gently, yet efficiently.

It tones the stomach, regulates the digestion, creates a good appetite, banishes headache, and refreshes the mind. "I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. After eating I would have a faint or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. My trouble was aggravated by my business, painting. Last spring I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, which did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced." GEORGE A. PAGE, Watertown, Mass.

Peabody's Mortality.

The town clerk's record for the year 1890 shows a total of 208. Of this number 99 were males and 109 females, 113 were single, 58 married and 37 widowed. The oldest person had reached the ripe old age of 92. 13 were over 80 years of age, 14 were between 70 and 80, 19 between 60 and 70, 19 between 50 and 60, 9 between 40 and 50, 11 between 30 and 40, 22 between 20 and 30. 100 died with various diseases with ages from 1 day to 20 years. Of the total number 208, 26 died of heart disease; 21 of consumption; 8 of pneumonia, and the rest of a multitude of diseases. 101 were natives of Peabody 37 of Ireland and the remaining 70 are divided chiefly in the surrounding towns and the provinces. This is the largest record of deaths since 1883, and appended is a list that shows a big increase last year. In 1883 there were 210 deaths, 1884, 188; 1885, 158; 1886, 169; 1887, 180; 1888, 175; 1889, 194; 1890, 208. As will be seen in the above figures, the greatest mortality was under 20 years, and the cause appears to be in the large number of deaths among children. This is the largest death rate since 1883.

THEY HAVE NEVER FAILED.

I have been sick more or less for the last ten years, which has cost me many dollars in doctors and druggists' bills. The last two years it only cost me three dollars. Why? Because I used Sulphur Bitters instead of employing doctors. They cured me of Jaundice.—F. F. Boyd, Hoboken.

LITERARY NOTES.

A father can give his young son no better present than a year's reading of the Scientific American. Its contents will lead the young mind in the path of thought, and if he reads there a while, he'll forget frivolities and be of some account, and if he has an inventive or mechanical turn of mind, this paper will afford him more entertainment, as well as useful information, than he can obtain elsewhere. Copies of this paper may be seen at this office and subscriptions received. Price, $3 a year, weekly.

The famous Angelus, the most costly painting of modern times, is booked for its return to Europe, and will be added to one of the grandest galleries of the Continent. Those who have not seen it can get an exact reproduction of it—the only one produced in precisely the same tints and colors as the original—by subscribing for Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper. The subscription price is $4, and it includes a full-sized and perfect copy of the original painting, made in Paris by the process of chromotypography. It is a most beautiful specimen of French chromatic art. Frank Leslie's this week is full of pictures and good things. Buy it of your newsdealer for ten cents.

A Street Car Episode.

I was coming up town in a street car recently when there entered, evidently from one of the neighboring railroad ferries, an old gentleman dressed rather carelessly in an old fashioned way, who had a good sized sachel in his hand. He sat down and rested the sachel on his knees. The conductor, who rejoiced in a bull neck and a square jaw very much in need of the razor, came in for his fare and said, curtly:

"Put that gripsack on the floor. I prefer to carry it this way," replied the old gentleman calmly, for which nobody blamed him, as the floor of the car was carpeted with mud.

"Are you goin' to put it down, say?" demanded the conductor, with a scowl. No, replied the old gentleman, looking him squarely in the eyes.

The scoundrel went to the rear platform muttering curses on what he denominated the old jay. The old jay was one of the most distinguished lawyers in the country, an ex-governor of a great state and a scholar of universal renown.—New York Cor. Pittsburg Bulletin.

One of the most peculiar and interesting objects in natural history to be found anywhere can be seen to advantage in and on the Halifax. It is a "wine fish," says the Florida Times Union. It is about three inches in diameter and from eight to ten inches long. On being disturbed it can color the water for some distance a "red wine" color by exuding a liquid, of which it seems to have a large supply. It is said that it can only be found in the Halifax and Hillsboro rivers.—Boston Herald.

In all emancipation movements, and the enlargement of woman's sphere, the matter of obtaining what is desired by indirection remains. Why was the type-writer invented? It seemed a most innocent advance and new avenue for women. And now we hear that the Type-Writer is more likely to get married than any other industrial woman. It is one of the most promising of all the indirect ways of escaping from the monotony of single life. Thus, even in our enlarging opportunities, we keep on in the old way. The object is still obtained by indirection. It is no answer to this question, whether women shall propose, to say that every woman can get married who wishes to do so, and that all history shows this.

The real question is, is she free to marry according to her taste and inclination; and would she be happier, in the majority of cases, if she could honorably approach those to whom she is attracted, instead of waiting to be approached by those who are attracted to her?

It is not fair to leave this question hanging in the air without saying that there are old fashioned people of both sexes who think men and women are radically different, that if they were made alike the world would be a flat affair, and that, as human life is arranged, the pleasure of being wooed is quite equal to the pleasure of wooing.—CHARLES DUBLEY WARNER, in Harper's Magazine.

Not one deserter in fifty is caught, and the unwillingness of citizens to give information that will lead to their apprehension sometimes leads to curious complications. Some years ago a young graduate from West Point was sent to the west and detailed for special duty with a squad of Indian scouts. So long as he was with his party he, of course, was able to keep his bearings, but one day, returning from an expedition into the mountains, they stopped for dinner, and after dining he directed the Indians to go on to the post while he would follow an hour or two later. Not accustomed to the mountains, he lost his way. The Indians came to the post without him and reported that he had not overtaken them, but as they were directed to go on they obeyed orders and did not return to search for him.

A day or two passed and as no news came of the missing officer, his friends, who esteemed him highly, sent out the Indians to trace him up and find him. They followed his trail for 200 miles, and repeatedly had news of him, as he was seen by miners and prospectors, but could get no information from them as to the direction he had taken, for he was supposed to be a deserter from the army, and no one would aid the soldiers to run him down. He was found at last after over a week's wandering, almost dead and out of his head with hunger, thirst and exposure, all of which he owed to the general sympathy for deserters, for had the civilians aided the scouts he might have been overtaken in a few hours.—Interview with Lieut. Sayre.

WHEN I WAS SICK.

My room looked like a drug store, I had so many bottles in it. The more I dosed, the worse off I was. Finally, I paid my doctor and told him he needn't come any more. I was troubled with Chronic Rheumatism, and couldn't get out of bed alone. Six bottles of Sulphur Bitters cured me.—Benj. Fitch, Adams House, Boston.

Grecian shoes were peculiar in reaching to the middle of the leg.

The present fashion of shoes was introduced into England in 1633.

In the ninth and tenth centuries the greatest princes of Europe wore wooden shoes.

Black shoes were worn by ordinary citizens, white ones by women, while red ones were sometimes worn by ladies, and purple ones by coxcombs.

In the reign of Richard II they were of such absurd length as to require to be supported by being tied to the knees with chains, sometimes of gold and silver.

In 1463 the English parliament took the matter in hand and passed an act forbidding shoes with spikes more than two inches in length being worn and manufactured.

In the reign of William Rufus, of England, in the eleventh century, a great bear, "Robert, the Horned," used shoes with sharp points, stuffed with tow and twisted like rams' horns,

A FANCY QUAIN.
I sometimes wish it were really so.
As the Buddha devout declares,
That the soul at will could easily go
From its fleshy sheath unawares,
Fleety as we wander in a dream,
Softly as from buds the roses bloom,
Or as lightly as a golden beam
Flits in and out a daisied room.
Then float above this earth world,
As the clouds in the blue o'erhead,
With the spirit's wings unfurled,
Wandering as the impulse led.
If this fancy quain were really so,
As the Buddha devout declares,
Couldn't you tell where first I would go,
And steal upon whom unawares?
Swiftly as moonlight creeps on a tide,
Lightly as perfume floats thro' the air,
I'd wait myself, dear love, to your side,
Kissing away all traces of care.
Then float above this earth world?
Perhaps? I cannot know nor say;
What would you and my spirit feel,
I might forfeit this life to stay.

MY PRIZE PICTURE.

I was young and susceptible, and I was also an amateur photographer.
My dark room was the envy of all my friends, and my work had received the club prizes for artistic merit more than once. However, as they were nothing more than printed slips of paper, these prizes were mere empty honors.

But now I had decided to enter a competition that was worthy of the name, and where the first prize—which I felt sure that I could win—was a check of dazzling dimensions to a youth whose modest income was drawn alarmingly low by the constant sacrifices demanded by the all-devouring camera god, which I had set up in the place of Laros and Penates.

This summer I had had no holiday at all, for two days before I was to start for Lenox—where on the last of June I was to have been best man to my old chum Fred—I was laid on my back, fast in the clutches of pneumonia, and though more than two months had passed since then, I was only just out of the doctor's hands. I still felt shaky, and acquaintances were continually stopping me in the street to tell me how badly I looked.

It was now the middle of September, and just the time for a flying trip in search of the picturesque, so I laid in a good supply of rapid plates, packed my traps, and started off to find my prize picture.

It proved a pleasant jaunt, and I changed my plans to suit those of the friends I often fell in with on the way;
for although my camera was company enough in pleasant weather, it was not disagreeable to have friends to talk to on cloudy days, or a pretty girl to dance and flirt with during the long evenings.
I took many a delightful tramp o'er hill and dale in search of the prize picture which I was sure that I should come across some day. I have always leaned toward a belief in fate, and "Kismet" is the motto engraved upon my seal.

Several dozen of my rapid Cramers had been used already, and I was well pleased with my collection of river views and mountains, cattle pictures and old farmhouses with quaint interiors—to be developed when I should return to town.
One bright morning, when I was far up in the valley of the Naugatuck, I wandered into fairyland by chance. I had left the high road and struck through the woods, not knowing whither the path would lead me, and at last I came out upon a level tract between the hilly woodland and the river, which was fringed with fine old trees.

A dazzling mass of bloom was spread before me, clumps of feathery white blossoms and plumes of vivid goldenrod were nodding in the breeze, and underfoot the ground was carpeted with every shade of aster, from richest purple to the most delicate tints of lilac and rose. In this secluded spot Dame Nature had strewn her treasures with a lavish hand.

No photograph could catch all its elusive beauty, yet I wanted one for a souvenir, and I proceeded to set up my camera. I made a charming bit upon the ground glass, with the level, flowery foreground and the old gnarled oak in the middle distance, while beneath its widspread branches the rippling river showed its rare lights and shadows. It struck me as just the setting for a picture of some fair maiden; but alas! where could I find her in this solitude?

I buried my head under the dark cloth, intent upon the focus; but when I came out into the sunshine again what vision of loveliness did I see approaching? I saw a maiden whose perfect figure was clad in soft, white drapery, and her hands were full of wild flowers and crimson sumach leaves. She stooped, from time to time, to pick the tall, white asters that seemed to bend their flower laden sprays toward her hand, and then continued her way, slowly and graciously, and all unconscious of the eager, waiting amateur.

In went the plate holder and out came the slide. A breathless moment of suspense, and then she stood just where I would have placed her. Her position was one of perfect grace. Pausing, she had turned slightly and bent to pluck a flower, looking up and past me with a bewildering smile.

I pressed the bulb, the shutter snapped, and with a feeling of triumph I knew that the prize picture was mine—beyond recall!

When I got back to the inn where I was stopping I found a telegram recalling me to town. The summons did not disconcert me in the least, for my short holiday had proved an eminent success.
In health I felt like a different man, and I was exultant over my stolen picture.

Some days passed before I had leisure to develop the plate, but then I found I had indeed a prize, for it proved the best negative in every way among my entire collection.

Before I went down town the next morning I hastily printed a proof, which I looked at with increasing rapture several times during the day.
What a perfect pose that girl had unconsciously taken, and how very beautiful she was! I had only thought of her before as a "good subject," but now I could not get her lovely face and graceful figure out of my mind. Who was she, and did she live in that quiet town among the hills, or had she been a stranger like myself? How could I find out, and where could I see her again?

For see her I felt I must.

It is a strange confession to make, but before twenty-four hours were over I was desperately in love with the unknown original of my prize. That we should meet again some day I had not the slightest doubt. Kismet!

But after all would it be right to send this picture—her picture—into the competition to be criticised, admired freely, passed from hand to hand, then reproduced and sent broadcast over the length and breadth of the whole country?

Why not, when this might be the very means of bringing us together? And then I thought how I should persuade her that my wish to find her out had overcome all scruples, and that with the seeming liberty which I had taken I had shown myself ready to surrender myself her prisoner and await her sentence—for life or death!

I could hardly wait for Saturday afternoon to come, and was in a fever until the few clouds of the morning had disappeared and left me the golden sunshine needed to print the prize picture.

I watched the first print with breathless attention, lest it should be too dark or ashy too light. And when it seemed exactly right I removed it carefully and put it in a dark place, and laid another piece of freshly fumed paper upon the negative. Then I put the printing frame out again on my window sill and began to fuss with another negative.

How it happened I never knew, but there was a crash—and when I turned to the window the printing frame was gone.

I picked it up on the sidewalk—forty feet below—with my precious negative shivered into a thousand pieces.

All my hopes now centered on the one print which fortunately I had secured.
And oh, the agony of anxiety that I went through in the toiling, mounting and burnishing of that one priceless print!

But it was safely finished at last and perfect in every way—beautiful, artistic, beyond question the best piece of photographic work that I had ever done.

So, in spite of the irreparable loss of the negative, I felt almost happy, for with this I would surely accomplish my double purpose. It could not fail to win the prize—a small tribute to pay to my unknown darling's beauty. And it would also be the means of bringing us face to face. For the picture must certainly find its way into the hands of some of her family or friends, and she would hear of it, see it, be a little indignant perhaps. But her father or brother or guardian would be certain to resent the supposed liberty, and might even write to the successful amateur to take him to task for his presumption; that was my most ardent desire—the very clue I wanted. Once I knew where to find her, and then I could manage all the rest.

I was radiant with satisfaction, and was now only keeping the finished picture until I should have a chance to take a copy of it for myself; for I could not make up my mind to part with it altogether until I had found the original.

I was coming up town the next afternoon, my mind full of the beauty and winsome grace of my fair unknown,
when I ran across my old chum Fred.
It was the first time I had seen him since his marriage, and we each had much to say.

"I want you to meet my wife, Tom;
I know you'll like each other. She was as disappointed as I was that your illness kept you from coming to our wedding. Are you all right again now?
You look well. Can't you drop in upon us to-night? We are stopping at the Buckingham until our house is ready."

"I shall be most happy to," I answered. And accordingly I presented myself that evening at the door of their private parlor.

Fred welcomed me cordially, and his young wife dropped the roses she was arranging as I entered, turned and came forward smiling and with outstretched hand.

I staggered backward—I believe I should have fallen if Fred had not caught me by the arm—for the beautiful unknown in my prize picture with whom I had fallen so desperately in love was no other than Fred's wife!

"What is the matter? You are ill!" she cried, while she hastily brought me a glass of wine.

"It is nothing—nothing, I stammered.
"I believe I'm not yet quite strong. I beg your pardon for being such a fool."

The wine restored me somewhat, and I stayed long enough to remove the feeling of embarrassment that naturally followed after this awkward scene.

When at last I got back to my room I looked at my picture eagerly. The same, beyond the shadow of a doubt. And then I began to realize the full extent of my double loss. Impossible to continue my adoration of the fair unknown—since now I knew her to be the wife of my friend, and impossible to send the stolen picture of another man's wife into a public competition.

I turned the picture to the wall, and sat for a long time lost in thought. Then
I seized a pen and wrote:

DEAR FRED.—Truth stranger than fiction. With this I send you the photograph of a fair stranger who deliberately and unconsciously walked into my picture when I was off on a photographing trip two weeks ago. This will also explain my peculiar collapse this evening. It takes a smaller thing than such a queer coincidence to upset a fellow when he is still below par. I know you will prize the picture, for it is the only one in existence, and the negative unfortunately is broken.
With respectful remembrances to your wife, your old friend
Tom.

As I sealed my note the word "Kis-met" gleamed mockingly up from the dark wall. I tied up the photograph and sent it off by a messenger before I had time to reconsider my decision.

"Good-by to my dreams—and to my prize picture," I said sadly, as the messenger pursued his way down the dark and silent street.

It was gone, and already I repented of my haste. Then, as a sudden thought struck me, I exclaimed:

proof!"—Frank Leslie's Weekly.

How to Treat a Cold.
Don't stuff a cold as the old adage advises, if you do you will have a fever to starve. A genuine cold is a shock received by the many million nerves which approach near the surface of a human body, and which control the nearly seven million pores of the skin.
This shock closes the pores of the skin is transmitted to the nerve centers and back to the mucous membranes forcing a great amount of blood to those membranes creating more or less irritation and consequent fever, inflammation, dryness then watery discharge and catarrh.

The shock may have its cause from a chill, from improper eating, a nervous fright and various other causes which irritate the nerves of the skin and mucous membranes of the nose, throat and bronchial tubes. Excess of food in the stomach still more clogs the system and pores of the skin so that effete matter which should be carried off by the natural courses is retarded; which is ample reason for not stuffing a cold. Experimenting with a severe cold is a dangerous custom, as most persons try one remedy only until some friend suggests another "sure cure." When slight hoarseness or tightening of the nasal membranes warns one of a skin exposure or chill from whatever cause, act promptly; delays are dangerous, with children it may mean croup and strangulation; with adults, catarrh—bronchitis perhaps pneumonia. If neglected nothing can prevent the sneezing, red nose, and woe begone look of a person with a cold. Scores of mothers would as soon go to bed without matches in the house, as without that old-fashioned remedy, Johnson's Anodyne Liniment near at hand for colds and croupy children.
Used with a mild laxative, as described on the wrappers or in a pamphlet which,
I. S. JOHNSON & CO., Boston, Mass., will send free to any one, Johnson's Anodyne Liniment will cure a cold quicker than any known remedy. A mild nutritious diet, a gentle physic to open the secretions, and a bottle of that old Anodyne from your druggist, will conquer any cold.

The Stony Composer.
Day after day he stands at his case, picking up the bits of metal. His hand goes back and forth from the case to his "stick," and never the suspicion of a smile lights up his countenance, though the copy he is putting into type may make thousands roar with laughter. There is never a suspicion of moisture in his eyes, though the copy before him will draw tears to the eyes of the reader of the story. Click, click, the type falls in its place in the stick,
and the story grows under his hand.
All matter, grave and gay, is to him "stuff," and so long as he has lots of stuff to get up he cares not what its import may be.

The matter he is putting up has no effect upon him whatever. If his lines don't "justify," easily, he will swear at a sacred hymn as an epic on a dog-fight. And, again, the manuscript he handles never changes his views. He may be a Democrat and work up into type the rankest Republican editorials, or he may be an Atheist and put into type the most beautiful religious arguments. They never sway him an iota.

THE INAUGURAL

Governor Russell's First Address.

HIS DEPARTURE FROM AN OLD USAGE.

Comments on Growing Evils—Legislation—Reforms Suggested in Regard to Suffrage and Election Laws—The Lobby—Special Legislation—Administrative and Executive Work—Education, Liquor, Reapportionment of the Congressional Districts—Other Matters.

GENTLEMEN OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

Entrusted by the people of the Commonwealth with the management of its affairs of the current year, we meet today to begin this responsible and honorable duty.

A usage long established requires me at this time to submit to the two branches of the legislature suggestions and recommendations that seem to need their consideration and action. It has been usual in such a message briefly to consider the finances of the Commonwealth, the condition of the various departments, their wishes and needs. Necessarily this information is gathered from official reports, all of which are submitted to your consideration. As I can have but little trustworthy knowledge of these reports, it seems to me useless and perfunctory to anticipate your careful review of them by stating briefly what they state at length, or by repeating their recommendations.

Especially is this true when other matters of more importance demand your attention. I therefore depart from this usage with full confidence that will give to the reports and recommendations of the departments the careful consideration to which they are entitled, as the best thought of experienced officials upon subjects with which they are familiar. As experience gives me a more full and accurate knowledge of the work and condition of the departments, I may hereafter call your attention to clauses and reforms that may be advisable.

The Constitution of Massachusetts declares: "Government is instituted for the common good; for the protection, safety, prosperity and happiness of the people, and not for the private or partial interest of any one man, family or class of men. Therefore the people alone have an incontestable, inalienable and indefeasible right to institute government; and to reform, alter, or totally change the same, when their protection, safety, prosperity and happiness require it."

This declared purpose of government and power over it guaranteed to the people make it the imperative duty of their chosen representatives, as their trusted servants, to keep it ever true to their interests, to watch for the expression of their will, and when ascertained implicitly to obey it. Rarely is such expression directly made in an election or with a partisan voice. Yet by petitions, public meetings, the public press, and other signs, there is unerring evidence of their will as to the policy of their government.

A political revolution may then give emphasis to their discontent, weight to their criticism, and be their mandate, not for partisan legislation, but for heed to their wish. Massachusetts, with her sturdy, intelligent, patriotic people, jealous of their rights and courageous in defending them, has many a time been the fruitful field of aspirations meant to be the forerunner of law, and successful in their purpose. This has justly made her a leader in the six small of states. There have been great aspirations for human rights, for upholding the nation in important crises, for reforms that insure purity and independence in elections, efficiency and unselfishness in administration, for retrenchment and economy in state expenditure, for wise and progressive labor legislation, and for other objects, where the voice of the people was heard as distinctly and followed as faithfully as if they had directly passed upon these questions. There was no need of a poll to know the popular will.

Judged by such signs of the people's thought and wish as have controlled in the past, I ask you to consider whether there is not within our Commonwealth and throughout the country a profound and just feeling that there is a growing tendency to divert legislation and government from their true purpose, and to surrender their control to selfish interest and selfish objects, rather than to use them "for the common good"; whether there is not also with this feeling an earnest demand for some change and reforms, within your power to grant, that will check this tendency and keep their government well within the control of the people, to the end that all law may be the free and full expression of the people's will, and its administration just, pure and honest.

With a strong conviction that such demand exists, that it is just and should be heeded, I submit to your consideration suggestions for legislation in this direction. They are based upon a firm belief that people can safely be trusted with political power; that legislation should be for their interest, and never controlled against their interest, and that their government, so far as possible, should be made directly and immediately responsible to them. Many of these suggestions deal with matters that have been considered without partisan bias by your predecessors and by the people generally. They are submitted in no partisan spirit, and will be considered by you, I am confident, with the single purpose of faithfully serving the public interests.

As a first and fundamental change necessary to accomplish the reforms suggested, I call your attention to a restriction upon the suffrage, which is based upon a mistrust of the people, is unjust in principle, injurious and corrupting in practice, and which leaves this great primal right of freedom without proper constitutional guaranty, and subject to be controlled, obstructed, and possibly defeated, by legislative action. Massachusetts, almost alone of the states of the Union, requires the payment of a tax as a qualification for voting. Besides certain conditions as to age, sex, residence and education, our Constitution also prescribes, to qualify a voter in any election, the payment of "any state or county tax which shall within two years next preceding such election have been assessed upon him in any town or district in this Commonwealth." There is excepted from this provision "every citizen who shall be by law exempted from taxation."

Whether or not there shall be any state or county tax, and upon what such tax shall be laid, whether upon polls or property, are matters within the control of the legislature. When laid, the assessment of the tax upon the citizen requires the action of the local board of assessors. The failure of either body to act means the disfranchisement of voters. Thus the suffrage, the very foundation of republican institutions, instead of being protected by constitutional guaranty, is left to the discretion of the legislature, and is dependent upon its annual action. There have been years in the past when no state tax was required or laid. It may be that other sources of revenue will make it unnecessary at some time in the future to lay either a state or county tax. It is possible that in such a case there would be a wholesale disfranchisement. Judicial interpretation has declared: "It (the Constitution) confines the power, therefore, in terms to those who shall have paid some tax assessed within a short period preceding the election, and for the sake of exactness fixes that period at two years."

If, therefore, the persons in question have been exempted for two entire years, either by being omitted in the assessment, or by the abatement of the tax by the assessors, such persons are excluded by the plain terms and manifest intent of the Constitution. By statute law, within the power of any legislature to change or repeal, a portion of the state and county tax is assessed upon polls; otherwise all except the owners of taxable property would be disfranchised. By statute, too, the person assessed may have the state and county tax separated from the town tax; otherwise he must pay more than the Constitution requires, or be disfranchised. By statute, too, no poll tax can be abated within the year in which it is assessed; otherwise the power to disfranchise every person who pays only a poll tax rests absolutely with a local board, and abating taxes would be a convenient way of abating voters. So it has become necessary by statutes to lay a tax, to separate the tax on polls from the tax on property, to forbid its abatement—that the sacred right of suffrage may be preserved to the freemen of Massachusetts.

To repeal any of these statutes in any year puts in jeopardy this right. By a simple change in them, the legislature may raise the most stringent and odious property qualification, and disfranchise a large majority of the voters in the state. If, for example, a statute was passed abolishing the poll tax, or exempting all polls from any state or county tax, or providing that those taxes should be laid wholly on real estate, at once by legislative act there is raised a new qualification, severe, repulsive, intolerable, and from one-half to three-quarters of the voters are disfranchised. "It is liberty to taxation, not want of taxable property," as our supreme court has said, "which distinguishes citizens generally from citizens exempted by law from taxation."

"The exemption by law contemplated by the constitution is an exemption from all taxation, without any distinction between a poll tax and any other tax. * * * So, if the legislature were to take off the poll tax altogether, it could not be said that all persons having at any particular time no taxable property would be exempted by law from taxation; therefore to come within the other provision of the Constitution they must actually pay a tax to enable them to vote; and such in the absence of all poll tax must be a property tax. That no legislature probably would ever dare to exercise this power to disfranchise, is no reason for allowing the right of suffrage to remain within its control. A right so fundamental and sacred ought to be established, defined and protected by the Constitution, and so placed beyond the reach of legislative discretion."

Opportunity for the arbitrary use of power in a political emergency, for partisan purposes, is one of the first evils against which a republican form of government should guard. The maintenance of this qualification seems clearly in conflict with the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States, and renders the state liable, as provided in that amendment, to a reduction of her representation in the national house of representatives.

There are other reasons quite as important that require the pollution of this tax qualification for voting. It is a test of a man's intelligence, capacity, or honesty, of his interest in public affairs, or even of his contribution for the support of government. Indirectly, in the cost of necessities of life, especially in rent, does every self-supporting man pay taxes. The real tax-payer is not the one who pays the tax, but the one upon whom it finally rests. This tax deprives a man of his vote because of his poverty only. It forgets that his very poverty makes him the more dependent upon the efficient administration of laws that are wise, just and honest, and that our democratic idea of government requires that he be given a voice in the making of these laws.

In matters that concern the health, safety, education, convenience and happiness of the community, he should often look to law, while wealth can always protect itself. He is subject, moreover, to perform all the duties of a citizen, to give himself in defense of his country, to hold his liberty and life subject to her laws, to all of which he is required to render implicit obedience. Why should he not, if of mature age and proved intelligence, have a voice in these matters which vitally affect him? There were both truth and just sentiment in the touching appeal of Henry Wilson—"Poverty is bitter enough to be borne without the degradation of disfranchisement."

The man of toil who has reared a family, contributed hundreds of dollars by indirect taxation to support the government, who may have given perhaps his blood to the defense of the country, should not, as life begins to cast its shadows over him, as his arm begins to fail and his step to totter, be degraded because he is, in his old age, compelled to drink the bitter cup of poverty. That constitutional provision which would deny to the poor man, who could not pay his tax bill, the right to vote, should be forever blotted out of the Constitution of a Christian Commonwealth.

Is it wise to deprive men of all share in the government merely because they cannot pay a direct tax? May they not, if deprived of a proper, conservative way of giving force to their opinions or their grievances, in their discontent try other means to make their wishes known and their power felt? This tax qualification either disfranchises many thousands of men or tends to subject their votes to the control of another's will. It leads to the debasement of our politics, to the collection and expenditure of large sums of money at elections; it tends to make wealth a necessary qualification for candidates, because poverty is a disqualification for voters. In important and exciting contests it is of no effect except to degrade the voter, to burden the candidates, and to suggest and encourage corruption.

Upon such grounds the constitutional convention of 1833 voted more than three to one against it. Democrats, Whigs, and the founders of the Republican party, stood side by side demanding its abolition—amongst them such distinguished jurists and statesmen as Marcus Morton, Charles Sumner, Joel Parker, Henry Wilson, Charles Allen, Francis W. Bird, Otis P. Lord, Richard H. Dana, Jr., George S. Boutwell, Amasa Walker, Abner Burlingame, Nathaniel P. Banks, Robert Rintoul and William Schouler.

There is now the same demand, just as strong and non-partisan. Recognizing it, your predecessors of last year, by a large majority, adopted a resolution to amend the Constitution by annulling so much of it as requires the payment of a tax as a qualification for voting. This resolution now comes up for your consideration. I strongly recommend immediate and favorable action upon it, and its submission to the people, as required by the Constitution, at an early day,—to the end that the suffrage may as soon as possible be made broader, safer and purer, by removing the injustice, danger and evil that now surround it.

Property Qualification for Governor. In this connection I submit to your consideration the question whether any useful purpose is now served by the constitutional qualification for governor that he must "at the time of his election * * * be seized in his own right of a freehold within the Commonwealth of the value of one thousand pounds." The very terms of value point to a time and circumstances vastly different from the present. Is not this, our sole remaining property qualification, out of date?

Election Laws. In a government really representative, which would have law the true expression of the people's will, the protection of elections from all improper influences is next in importance and order to a free and pure suffrage. This has been, and should be, peculiarly a matter of state legislation. Much has already been accomplished by the wise and successful reform embodied in our ballot law, which secures to every voter independence and secrecy, and puts upon the state a proper charge and responsibility. Legislation can still do much in this direction. The expenses attending nominations and elections are great and growing, and are believed by many to be in part unnecessary and in part injurious. All of them effect public interests.

In my judgment the people have a right to know the amount of such expenses, for what and to whom incurred, and to limit their amount and define their proper objects. Expenses which cannot bear the light of day ought not to be made.

Your immediate predecessors considered subject, and passed in one branch of the legislature "An act to secure the publication of election expenses," as a first and proper step in this direction. I commend this matter to your favorable consideration, with the suggestion that this act, to be effective, must be more stringent, and that it should be followed by further legislation.

The Ballot Law. The advantages of our present ballot system are so great and universally acknowledged that it should be our aim to strengthen it by removing any just ground of criticism upon it. At present, either through misunderstanding or carelessness, the voter often fails to mark for the full number of candidates. In presidential elections, the voter will be required to mark separately the names of at least fourteen electors in order to give full effect to his vote for president. It is probable that in this case the evil of partial voting will be much increased, and may lead to an unintentional division of the electoral vote of the state. I suggest that the law be so amended that a single mark may be a vote for all the electors of a party, with an opportunity for the voter to scratch any name and to insert another.

It is desirable to encourage the voter to exercise his full right of franchise, and to make it easy for him to do so, by any means that will not impair the efficiency of our ballot system. Further and more effective notice of the names of candidates to be balloted for should be given to the voter before each election,—either by the distribution by the state of sample ballots, or in some other proper way. I would suggest also for your consideration the expediency of establishing some uniform and accurate system of counting and canvassing the votes, in order to avoid errors now common. Such a system could make the accuracy of the first count so certain as to obviate or restrict the necessity of any recount.

Precinct Officers. By section 25 of chapter 423 of the acts of 1890 provision is expressly made for the representation among election officers of the voters who do not belong to either of the two leading political parties. Subsequent clauses in the same section conflict with this provision and defeat the evident intent of the legislature. The matter deserves your attention and correction.

The Lobby. One thing above all is necessary to make law the true expression of the people's will. Broadening and protecting the suffrage, reforming and purifying elections, will fail of this purpose, unless the law-making power is protected from insidious and corrupting influences, which tend to control legislation against the people's interest and to impair public confidence in its impartial enactment.

There exists in this state, as in other states, an irresponsible body known as the lobby, representing or preying upon special interests, which professes and undertakes for hire to influence legislation. Its work is wholly distinct and different from the advocacy of one's cause in person, or by counsel or agent, which is the constitutional right of every one. It seeks often to control nominations and elections, and to subject the individual legislator, directly or indirectly, to secret and improper influences. It throws suspicion upon the honest and temptation in the way of the dishonest. Professing power greater than it has, it frequently extorts money as the price of its silence or unnecessary assistance.

It has initiated legislation, attacking the interests of its clients, in order to be hired to defend those interests. It has caused the expenditure of large sums of money to obtain or defeat legislation. It cares little for the merits of a measure or the means employed to make it successful. In my judgment, improper measures have been made law by its influence, against the public interest, and just measures have been defeated. These criticisms are not based upon rumor or conjecture, but upon facts reported upon most thorough investigation by your predecessors, who denounced in unsparring terms the evil and diligently sought a remedy.

In 1887 they spoke of the methods thus employed as "a struggle for success without regard to means;" and they added, "The venality and corruption which these practices encourage, tending to defeat that right and justice which the state is bound freely and without price to bestow, are a reproach to a free people." In the same year, the governor, vetoing a measure because of the lobby influence, described the lobby as "a pernicious system," and its methods as "a monstrously bad and corrupting practice."

In 1890 a committee of investigation of the house reported: "It is a fact beyond denial that a body of professional lobbyists has for years formed a part of the machinery of legislation * * * and has been growing in numbers and influence," and again they denounced its methods. The evils of the lobby have become so flagrant and disgraceful that for the purity of legislation, the protection of the legislature and the fair name of our Commonwealth, they demand your serious consideration, and some stringent and radical remedy. This is a matter which especially concerns the legislature, and therefore, one which the executive approaches with some embarrassment. Yet I feel I should be derelict in my duty if I failed to do all in my power to aid you in its solution.

It is far easier to state the evil than to suggest the remedy. Clearly it is impossible and improper to prevent a constituent or any other person from having the freest access to a legislator. This constitutional right guaranteed to the people gives opportunity to the lobby to do its work. Prevention by non-intercourse is therefore impossible. Prevention by publicity is possible, and I would suggest for your consideration whether a remedy may not be found in this direction, by making it easier than it now is publicly to investigate the methods used and money spent on pending legislation; and also by giving power to some proper officer, before a measure finally becomes law, to demand under oath a full and detailed statement as to these matters.

The fear of publicity, and through it of defeat, may stop improper practices by making them worse than useless. Your immediate predecessors, with an earnest desire to cure the evil, and believing in the remedy of publicity, passed an act requiring all counsel and agents employed by any special interests on matters pending before the legislature to be registered, and a statement to be made within thirty days after the adjournment of the legislature. I believe that good will come from this act, if fairly and thoroughly enforced, but that it falls short of being a sufficient remedy. It makes public the names of all persons employed, but not the acts of the lobbyist. It makes public the expenses incurred, but too late to affect the legislation for which they were incurred.

I ask you also to consider whether something cannot be done to relieve the legislature of much work that seems to be onerous and unnecessary, to prolong its sessions, and to give life and strength to the lobby. Recent amendments to your rules have been made, I am informed, with this purpose. You may deem it wise to make further provision for the earlier introduction of business, and for its more systematic conduct. Any steps which would tend to reduce suggested legislation to a specific form, and to give the fullest possible notice to the public of the exact status of any matter pending, would, I am confident, restrict the employment of the lobby. If additional clerical or expert assistance is required for this purpose, the state can well afford to pay for it.

Relief from Special Legislation. As a further and more fundamental remedy, I submit for your consideration whether much of the special legislation, which makes a large portion of the business of every session, cannot be avoided by the passage of general laws or by other means. The Constitutions of several states prohibit all special laws. In this state constant applications for charters for banks, railroads, insurance companies and other corporations, which involve the expenditure of large sums of money and the employment of the lobby, led to the passage of general laws on these and other subjects, which left them, under proper limitations, to be settled as business questions, and at once relieved the legislature of much disagreeable and onerous work.

There seems to be a necessity for further legislation in the same direction. A general law in reference to public water supplies would prevent the frequent and unnecessary, but often conflicting, applications on this subject to the legislature by cities and towns, and provide for its broad and just treatment. The applications of corporations for further powers and privileges might well be covered by general laws, which, with careful restrictions protecting the rights of the public, might give to some public authority jurisdiction over such applications.

Much special legislation is enacted in behalf of cities and towns, and is made necessary by their limited powers. Twenty-three cities and forty-one towns were the subjects of special acts at the last session. In my opinion greater powers can be given to cities and towns, with safety and advantage, not only as a relief to the legislature, but as a just and proper extension of local self-government. I therefore commend to your consideration the subject of enlarging their powers by general laws, especially in matters of taxation, franchises, municipal control of municipal work, and ownership of instrumentalities for its performance. The exercise of such powers can well be left as a question of expediency for each community to determine for itself.

Control of Municipal Franchises. Upon what terms and conditions a city or town shall grant franchises for the use of its public highways, and what control it shall have over such franchises, when granted, are questions of public importance which have been much discussed and are worthy of your serious consideration. On the one hand it is urged that special privileges in the public highways, distinct from their public use, ought to be paid for, either by a gross sum or a fixed rental; on the other hand it is said that such payment, exacted from a corporation whose business is solely with the public, only adds an expense which the public finally pay, either in higher charges or poorer service. Last year an act, compelling the sale by auction of such franchises in the future, was passed by the house.

In my judgment each community is best fitted, has the right, and ought to have the power, to determine this question for itself. I therefore suggest for your consideration the expediency of giving to cities and towns, with such limitations as you deem necessary, the power of selling such franchises in the future, and of fixing the terms and conditions on which they shall be granted. In this and all matters of local administration let us guard jealously the right of local self-government, preserve it when possible, and restore it where necessary.

General Municipal Law. The constant demand by our cities for charter amendments, the apparent necessity for enlarging their powers, the number of towns that soon will ask for municipal charters, the wisdom of having them uniform and comprehensive, suggest the expediency of framing a general municipal law, under which future cities shall be incorporated, and which can be adopted by present cities if they see fit. Under it, towns, upon having the required and ascertained qualifications, might after a proper vote at once organize a municipal government.

Where different local circumstances may require different powers or officers, discretionary power can be given by the law. If the time and research necessary for framing such a law make it impracticable for your consideration, you may deem it expedient to have the matter made the subject of a thorough and independent investigation by able and experienced men. Such an investigation might at least make valuable suggestions on the important and difficult subject of the best form of proper municipal government.

Railroad Passes. For many years, I am informed, it has been the custom for the railroad corporations of this state to tender free passes over their respective roads to members of the legislature. Even if this is done without purpose to create an obligation, the custom is open to just criticism. Measures in which these corporations are interested are certain to come before the legislature. Its action ought to be free not only from any obligation, conscious or unconscious, but even from a suspicion of such obligation, that the public may have full confidence in its impartiality. The pay now allowed to a member of the legislature for his services makes it unjust to put upon him any further expense.

I believe the giving of such passes ought either to be forbidden or compelled by law, and that any expense involved should be borne by the state. This may be done by a fair and proper mileage amendment to the Constitution, mileage being by it limited to "traveling to the general assembly and returning home once in every session, and no more;" or you may deem it wise for the state to purchase or give passes; or, if within its power, to require the railroad corporations to give them. They could hardly object to a law which should compel them to do only what they now do voluntarily.

Another custom of the same character and open to the same criticism I call to your attention,—the entertainment, often with profuse hospitality, of committees or of other members on behalf of some special interest having legislation pending. Expenses of this nature, properly incurred, ought, in my judgment, to be borne by the state rather than by the special interest, which may thereby gain some advantage. The only remedy seems to be an absolute prohibition of such entertainment.

Administrative Boards and Commissions. The suggestions I have made in reference to the suffrage, elections and legislation have been with a desire and hope that, if they meet your approval, they will tend to make our government more thoroughly representative, its laws a truer expression of the people's will, and its power more directly within their control. With the same purpose I commend to your consideration its system of administrative and executive work. With much truth Massachusetts has been described as a commission-governed state. Its great departments of education, health, charities, prisons, reform schools, almshouse and workhouse, agriculture, railroads, insurance, fisheries, harbors and lands, savings banks, and others, are governed by independent boards, practically beyond the control of the people.

Besides these there are commissions on gas, pharmacy, dentistry, civil service, arbitration, cattle, wrecks, pilots, state aid, and others for special and temporary purposes. Almost without exception the members of these boards are appointed by the governor, but only with the advice and consent of nine other men. Their tenure of office is usually for a term of several years, often without power of removal by any one, sometimes subject to removal for cause or otherwise by the governor with the same consent. The latter power in effect necessitates a trial upon formal charges, which seldom would be made or could be proved, except for flagrant malfeasance in office. The subordinate officials are generally appointed by the boards.

These boards and their work are practically beyond the control of the people, or of any one immediately responsible to them. The limited power of the governor occasionally to appoint a single member. The people of the state, who have a most decided opinion about the management and work of these departments, and give emphatic expression to that opinion, and yet be unable to control their action. The system gives great power without proper responsibility, and tends to remove the people's government from the people's control. The head of the executive departments of the state, elected by the people and directly responsible to them, has but little power and few duties, except social and perfunctory. I make this criticism on the system with full knowledge that, as a rule, the work of these boards has been excellent and their members faithful public servants.

But Massachusetts may not always be so fortunate. Is it not far safer to rely upon a sound system than on the chance that a defective system may be made to work well by good officials? I submit that the first essential of sound administration is to couple power with responsibility by making it subject to the people's control. Speaking of this necessity, one of the ablest and most experienced public officials, Mr. Seth Low, has said, "Power without responsibility is always dangerous, but power with responsibility to a constituency, which can readily call it to account, is not dangerous. It is the requisite of efficient administration."

To accomplish this, I suggest for your favorable consideration, first, whether boards and commissions, whose work is wholly executive, ought not to be departments of state, each with a distinct removable head; second, whether power of removal of their members, for cause stated, ought not to be given to the governor as the chief executive, thereby compelling him to exercise a supervision of their work, and making him, and so making them, responsible to the people for its administration. Such power has been given to the mayor of our largest city, as the best and safest system of municipal administration. Can it not be safely entrusted to the governor of the Commonwealth? It makes any man conservative; its selfish use for patronage only is fortunately sure to be both disagreeable and destructive.

Education. From the earliest days Massachusetts has generously provided for the education of her children and maintained with jealousy her public school system. She has wisely deemed it essential to the preservation of her institutions and our liberties, and so the concern of all her citizens. It is certainly our desire, and plainly our duty, not only to uphold this system in its full vigor, but also to provide for its progressive development.

In my judgment, industrial education and manual training have been so successful where tried, and are of such practical benefit, that I have no momentary as possible consideration their adoption as part of the system of instruction in our public schools, at least in some communities. At present a large proportion of the children who enter the grammar school leave before graduation. A still larger proportion do not enter the high school, and comparatively few graduate from it.

There exists in this state a great difference and inequality in the character and efficiency of the public schools in different places; also in the amount spent upon them for each pupil, and in the burden of taxation for such expenditure. Almost invariably the burden is heaviest where the amount raised and spent is least, due to the vast difference in the wealth and valuation of respective places. In 1880 the average rate of taxation throughout the state for all purposes was $14.63, and for school purposes (estimating it at 25 per cent. of the total tax) $3.67 per $1000, or an amount equal to about $3.91 in Weymouth, and $10.42 in Palmer. Yet the amount spent for each child in the first-named places was nearly twice as much as in the last and many times as much as in some towns. Necessarily there is a corresponding difference in their educational advantages. The result is a great inequality in the public education of children in the state, and a marked contrast between such education between the wealthy towns with fine schools and the poor towns with many children.

Taxation. The inequality of the burdens of taxation in this state has been known and felt for years, but no adequate remedy for it has yet been found and applied. A subject so complicated in its details and important in its bearings requires most thorough investigation before any legislative action. I have been unable to make investigation sufficiently thorough to warrant me in making suggestions for your consideration, except to commend for your favorable action the recommendation of my immediate predecessor, "of levying as a duty or excise, upon the settlement of estates, a tax upon legacies and successions," with proper exemptions and limitations.

Labor Legislation. Though Massachusetts has led the states of the Union in this field for many years, she has not reached the limit of wise and progressive labor legislation. Her course in the past has seemed too slow and conservative to some, too radical to others, but has been approved by the great mass of her people, and amply justified by results. I doubt not it will commend itself to your judgment and will be continued with your approval; and that you will give to all labor legislation that distinguishes attention which neither accepts everything because asked for in the name of labor, nor rejects everything because opposed in the name of capital.

I recommend to your favorable consideration the reduction of the hours of labor of women and children employed in factories and workshops. Such a limit of the last house of representatives and was barely defeated in the senate. In England, where it is often claimed that the condition of labor is deplorable, the hours of such labor have long been limited by law to fifty-six a week. While with us the problem is more complicated, because each state has its own legislation and no uniform statutory regulation of hours for the whole nation is possible under the Constitution, yet it seems to me that to stand still because there are obstacles to the way of progress. Our very dependence upon manufacturers requiring skilled labor should lead us to adopt a liberal policy in respect to the hours and conditions of toil—ones which will promote the welfare and increase the utility of our working population.

While a general reduction in the hours of labor must be brought about mainly by the organized action of employers, it is, I believe, and I believe with just cause, that the state should lead its co-operation, and the weight of its example in this direction. I therefore commend to your careful consideration the question whether the time has come to consider and further the hours of labor of public employees engaged in manual work.

A bill to prohibit the imposition of fines or deductions of wages upon factory operatives employed in the weaving has been considered by the legislature a number of years, and failed to pass last year by a single vote in the senate. While legislation on this subject is not free from difficulties, it is desirable that the constant restriction which this practice causes should be removed by some practicable means. In many factories this practice does not exist, so it cannot be an absolute necessity. I trust that you may find some satisfactory solution of the question.

Liquor Legislation. I call to your attention the well-known variety of opinion as to the meaning of the statute provision in relation to the keeping of a public bar, and the utter lack of agreement in its construction and enforcement. It is inconsistent with sound public policy that a provision of law which is the same for the whole Commonwealth should be open to such wide interpretation. In my judgment, this provision, as construed and enforced in the city of Boston, does not tend to promote temperance, is not sustained by public opinion, and ought to be corrected.

Reapportionment of the Congressional Districts.

The passage by congress of a bill reapportioning representatives upon the basis of the census of 1890, which now seem probable, will make it your duty to divide the Commonwealth into new congressional districts. I strongly recommend the passage at the present session of such a redistricting bill, establishing districts of proper geographical shape and contiguous territory, and of such political complexion as to give to each political party, as nearly as possible, the representation to which its numbers entitle it.

Other Recommendations. Greater uniformity in the legislation of the several states upon many subjects, especially upon marriage and divorce, is very desirable, and this requires concert of action between the states. To this end New York has appointed a commission, serving without compensation, and, through this commission, requests action by this state, which request I commend to your favorable consideration. A thorough reform in our system of land transfer and registration, upon the lines of legislation which has long been successful in other countries, and intended to make it safer, cheaper and easier, will, I am informed, be called to your attention. It deserves your serious consideration.

SENATORS AND REPRESENTATIVES. There is an opportunity for us by wise and progressive legislation to meet the just demands of the people and to restore confidence, to strengthen the institutions of our beloved Commonwealth, and to add something to her glory and prosperity. Such inspiring work should lift us above party strife, encourage us to greater confidence, and cordial co-operation in the fearless and unselfish discharge of our respective duties. Then may the law be the free and true expression of the people's will, and only for their interest.

It is proposed to submit a Prohibition Amendment to the voters of the State of New York on the second Tuesday in April next. A person with authority interviewed the public officials in Washington, who vote in the State, to ascertain how they stood towards the change in the organic laws of that commonwealth. Nearly all were opposed, and some very indignant that their views were asked. Not one would work for the success of the Amendment. The Republicans of the state have made the submission of the question a party measure, yet nearly every Republican Congressman was found opposed to it. Senator Wm. M. Everts, said he had not considered the subject at all, and Vice-President Morton declared "I am in favor of High License. High License is the policy of the Republican party. The Republicans of New York are in favor of High License—Oh, I don't mean all of them, but the majority of the Republicans favor High License."

To the moral administration of President Harrison, under the direction of James G. Blaine, Secretary of State, who hails from Prohibition Maine, is due the discredit and everlasting shame of putting in operation, what no other administration ever attempted, an official plan for "extending the markets" for American beer. Blaine a drummer in foreign countries for the beer trade is not an honorable or delightful spectacle. A fifty page pamphlet has just been issued bearing the stamp of the Government printing office, and dated 1890, which can only be obtained by addressing the Secretary of State. Its contents have not been given to the public or the press by that official, or any of his subordinates, but has undoubtedly found its way to the trade which it is intended to benefit. This pamphlet is entitled: "Malt and Beer in Spanish America. Reports from the Consuls of the United States on the Trade on Malt and Beer in Their several Districts, in Answer to a Circular from the Department of the State." The "circular," which says its "motive" "being the enlargement of the American trade," asks three questions, and further calls for all possible information "so that the malsters and brewers of the United States may fully understand the requirements necessary to successful trade in each district." More than forty United States officials in foreign lands, mainly in South and Central America, Mexico and the West Indies, made reports which are printed in this state document. The official machinery of the United States has collected at government expense this mass of information, hints and practical suggestions to the American drunkard making "business," and is slyly sending it out "where it may do the most good." The same hand which signed the "circular," that of the Assistant Secretary of State, could write in another direction, "The attitude of the American Government has been one of pronounced hostility to the liquor traffic." Probably no party ever afforded so many illustrations of bare-faced hypocrisy as does the Republican party in all its dealings with the temperance question. Well may "The Voice" of New York ask: "Will the Christian people of this Christian land stand this sort of thing? If so, what will they not stand?"

The difference between the man who drinks and the man who does not is seen the plainest in case of a wound. It has been proved over and over again in the hospitals of Philadelphia, in the case of cuts that there is from twenty-five to forty days difference in the healing in the favor of the cold water patient. In eight cases out of ten where a beer drinker is cut or shot, he has a trussle with erysipelas or gangrene.

STARTLING FACTS.

The American people are rapidly becoming a race of nervous wrecks, and the following suggests the best remedy: Alphonso Hempling, of Butler, Pa., swears that when his son was speechless from St. Vitus dance Dr. Miles' great Restorative Nerve cured him. Mrs. J. R. Miller, of Valparaiso, and J. D. Taylor, of Logansport, Ind., each gained 20 pounds from taking it. Mrs. H. A. Gardner, of Vistula, Ind., was cured of 40 to 50 convulsions a day, and much headache, dizziness, backache and nervous prostration by one bottle. Trial bottles and fine book of marvelous cures, free at Wm. T. Lee's who recommends and guarantees this unequalled remedy.

In Habersham Park, Ga., is a curious grapevine. About five feet from the ground, from a large live oak, there protrudes a grapevine about one inch in diameter. The tree is perfectly solid and no roots to the grapevine can be seen.

The preventive work for temperance now going on in the United States, known as Temperance Education in the public schools, is rising like a star of hope for other lands. In 1887 this instruction concerning the nature and effect of alcoholic liquors and other narcotics was introduced into the schools of Honolulu, Sandwich Islands. In the following year one of the American text-books on the topic was translated into Japanese and is now in use in the schools of that country. In Australia Temperance Education is made compulsory in primary grades.

The Siamese Minister of Education has recommended the translation and introduction of one of the American temperance physiologies into the Government schools of that country, where not only alcohol and tobacco, but opium and Indian hemp as well have united in their work of extermination. A resident missionary of Siam, writing to Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, the originator and leader of the Temperance Education movement in this country and now Superintendent of the same for the world's W. C. T. U., says that among the Siamese there is hardly one temperate man in one hundred, that she has never seen a man or boy among them who did not use tobacco, and some use opium and Indian hemp as well, and that the blood of the whole race is vitiated by these poisons. One slave to opium said—"If his mother's flesh were opium he could cut it out piece by piece and smoke it."

In India, where drink is said to be on the rising tide among the masses, the missionaries are looking to physiological instruction as a means of saving the coming generation from the threatening evil and are actively engaged in a movement for securing the introduction of the study into the Government schools. Mr. Maurice Gregory, of the Bombay Guardian, the Rev. H. C. Stuntz, editor of The Indian Witness, and other missionaries in the Madras Presidency, in Bombay, Calcutta and Northern India are in correspondence with Mrs. Hunt concerning the preparation of the necessary text-books and other ways and means essential to the success of the movement.

Application for copies of the American physiologies have also been received from Turkey, where, according to the Rev. A. Fuller, President of the Central College of Turkey, tobacco is almost a greater curse than alcohol.

Other countries in which movements have been begun for the introduction into the schools of this saving knowledge of the narcotics, which are weakening the strong and destroying the weak of all races, are, France, Austria, Bulgaria, Denmark, the Danish West Indies and England. Several leading philanthropists of the latter country have written for copies of the American school text-books on this topic, and the British Women's Temperance Association is preparing to work actively for the introduction of this study into the British public schools.—The Congregationalist.

Contesting a Live Man's Will.

In the probate court at Cincinnati the case of Mrs. Josephine Fee against J. J. Hopple was heard by Judge Goebel. It is a case in which the daughter sues her father to prevent the carrying out of his will, instead of waiting until after his death to contest it, on the ground that he has, by undue influence, disinherited her not only, but been led to aver that she was not his daughter, by reason of some alleged flaw in his marriage to her mother, his first wife.

That good woman died years ago and it is about twenty years since Mr. Hopple married a Miss Boone, who had been his nurse through an illness. Mrs. Boone-Hopple did not like her step-daughter, Josephine, and it is alleged that she induced Hopple to destroy a will in which he had provided for Josephine as his "beloved daughter," and to make the new will, leaving the latter practically without share in his $50,000 estate. It is a case interesting and unique.—Cor. Philadelphia Record.

200 TREMONT ST., BOSTON.

A new process of cremation and mummifying has been proposed in France, based upon the well-known and successful experiments in plating with copper or other metals, by means of electrolysis, the most delicate tissues of grasses, leaves and skins. At the Paris exhibition of 1881 a beautiful variety of objects thus metallized was shown, and at that date an English writer suggested, half humorously, that the process might in the future be employed for preserving the lineaments of the dead while inclosing their remains, by way of a modern improvement on the ancient Egyptian mummy.

The Frenchmen have apparently taken this idea au sérieux, and, as an experiment, have actually plated a dead child. The result is a perfectly faithful statue of the subject, truer to life than any sculptor could hope to achieve. The metallic shell is strong to withstand shocks. To receive the electroplating of copper, aluminum or gold, as the case may be, the skin is prepared by a bath of nitrate of silver, and the silver reduced upon it by the vapor of phosphorus. There are also various other ways of providing the necessary "electrode" on which to deposit the coating.

It has been objected that the gases of decomposition might burst the metallic shell, but it is proposed to overcome this by cremating the body inside the shell while leaving a vent for the gases. The ashes might be allowed to remain inside the metal covering, which would thus become a cinerary urn and mummy case, a reliquary, and a statue of the dead person all in one, capable of being preserved in the house or mausoleum to remote antiquity. The ancestral portrait gallery might, in fact, become a collection of statues as faithful to life as the photograph, and more durable than the wood or porphyry of the Pharaohs.—Boston Herald.

A very interesting article by Herbert Spencer appears in this month's number of the Popular Science Monthly. In it he argues against Darwin's theory limiting the origin of music to the early expression of amatory feelings, and claims for it the broader derivation from voice-sounds caused by all kinds of emotional excitement.

Uncle Sam And The Indians.

It has been figured out that since 1776 this government has made and broken 32 different treaties with the Indians, and that has lied to and deceived them no less than 1000 times, says the Detroit Free Press. This doesn't prove that this is the most truthful government the sun ever shone on, but the Indian ought to behave himself for all that. Indeed, he ought to behave so well that the government would be ashamed of itself.—Boston Herald.

"THE CROWN OF FAME."

Many Aspirants Kneel Before the Fair Goddess.

She Lends a Patient Ear to All.

An entertainment was given in Town hall Wednesday evening under the auspices of the Women's Relief corps, before a very large audience, which was novel in character and unique in presentation, and above all successful from an artistic as well as financial point of view. It will probably net the corps something like $200. A great deal of time had been spent in preparing for Wednesday night's production, and a large number of persons were interested in it, the cast including some seventy persons, all of whom have been under the personal direction of W. L. Barrell of Cambridge, who has the management of the Greek plays at Harvard, and is well qualified for the work. During the evening orchestral music was furnished by musicians from the Eighth Regiment band, under the leadership of R. L. Reinwald, and Mrs. George C. Farrington furnished the piano accompaniments for the vocal selections. At the conclusion of the entertainment two group pictures of the players were taken with a flash light by Murray White of this town.

The "Crown of Fame," the name under which the entertainment was presented, is not a drama nor a series of tableaux, but a sort of living panorama, in which well-known female characters in history and the arts appear before the Goddess of Fame in competition for the crown, each presenting her claims before the Goddess. The success of such an entertainment is due mainly to the local interest that attaches to it from those taking part, and if given by strangers, would probably prove monotonous and wearisome.

The stage was well covered with seats of various kinds, and a row of pine trees made a background. The curtain rose a few minutes past eight and the Goddess of Fame, impersonated by Miss Margaret S. Poor, was ushered in by two pages, Walter Foster and Philip Symonds, accompanied by thirty attendants and the crown bearer, Miss Florence Worcester. The Goddess was dressed in white and gold trimming, and all her attendants wore fillets in their hair and were draped in white robes. After a pretty march, the Goddess ascended her throne and delivered an address, in which she summoned all the noted women of history into her presence that she might give the crown to her who bore the fairest name.

The first to appear and kneel before her majesty was Louisa Alcott, impersonated by Mrs. H. A. Dodge. She was dressed in black silk and modestly proclaimed her reasons for receiving the crown, which were her home life and love for children.

Next came Florence Nightingale, direct from the hospital on the battlefield. The character was admirably taken by Miss Sarah G. Woodbury who wore a brown woolen dress, white apron and nurse's cap. She spoke for the cause of humanity and said the Protestant women are not behind any others in their efforts to help the sick, wounded and dying.

Mrs. Partington and her son Ike were next presented and the good woman pleaded for the crown for Ike's sake. The character of the mother was taken by Miss Annie Mayhew, who had a good make up, while Ike was made the most of by Frank Arnold, who cut up all kinds of antics with Topsy during the evening, and furnished all the amusement there was with one or two minor exceptions.

Alice and Phoebe Cary followed the last couple and paid homage to her royal highness, Alice being impersonated by Miss Mary Ferguson and Phoebe by Miss Jennie Nichols. Alice wore a blue silk gown with flowing sleeves and Phoebe was attired in a brown striped silk. Their claims were sacred song and sweetness, tenderness and patience. Miss Ferguson sang "One sweetly solemn thought" very finely, and Miss Nichols read the "Dream of the West."

Mary, Queen of Scots, (Miss Nancy Osborn) royally attired in black velvet with flowing train and yellow satin front, next appeared before the goddess, accompanied by two maids of honor, Miss Eva Goulding and Miss Carrie Wilson, both in velvet costumes. She asked for the crown on the ground of sympathy for the oppressed.

Harriet Stowe, in black silk, spoke of her labors for the town trodden and the good that "Uncle Tom's Cabin" had done. The part was well taken by Miss Georgie R. Batchelder.

Next came Miriam, the sister of Moses, and her two maids, Miss Alice Poor and Miss Ethel Brown, the group forming one of the prettiest groups of the evening. She asked for the crown for rescuing Moses and made a plea for the children of Israel. The character was impersonated by Miss Susie Farnham, who looked like a beautiful Jewish maiden. She wore a white crepe dress with silver trimmings, and a long veil of passementerie lace was draped from her forehead over her head and shoulders, partially concealing her dark brown locks, which reached half-way down her waist. She spoke clearly.

Next came Mrs. Stowe's creation, Topsy, as black as a thunder cloud, and wearing a bright yellow dress. She didn't care "nuffin bout" the crown for herself, but wanted it for Miss 'Phelia. The character was taken by Dora Butts, and could not have been carried out better. She cut up shines with Ike Partington all the evening, made fun of the patches on his pants, and caused a good deal of amusement.

Grace Darling, in a sailor suit and carrying an oar, just as she looked after her brave rescue of nine souls, next presented herself before the Goddess and told her story. Miss Ella Sanger made a typical sailor girl and took her part well.

Sealchi, the greatest of contraltos, next bowed before the throne. The noted songstress was impersonated by Miss Geraldine Damon of Danvers, who sang "The journey is long," which was so well received that she gave "The dearest spot on earth to me" on an encore and was liberally applauded. She wore a white cashmere overdress trimmed with moire ribbon and white tulle bodice set off at the neck with a bunch of violets.

Next came Cleopatra, the wily sorceress of the Nile, richly clad in queenly garb and attended by two maids, Misses Dalton and Osborne, the former in pink and the latter in brilliant yellow, with a beautiful crepe shawl. Miss Lina McPherson who impersonated the queen, was bedecked with jewels and after presenting her claims reclined on a divan, where her attendant's sat beside her and fanned her till the contest was decided. Her part was ably carried out.

A sister of charity (Miss Clara Ferguson) with a Catholic prayer book in hand and clothed in the garb of the order, related her mission and work, but said she would receive the crown not now and here, but hereafter.

Bridget Flannigan, with her hands full of boxes and bundles, told of the trials of servant girls and asked for the crown for the patience they showed. Miss Ella Blanchard, who took the part, was made up with red hair, green dress and old bonnet and the genuine old brogue.

Sappho with her lyre, represented by Miss Alice Peirce, was the next to claim the attention of the Goddess. This sweet singer of Greece was beautiful in a yellow China silk with ornaments and proclaimed her work in behalf of education.

Miss Edith Hatch of Malden, soprano, impersonated the character of Annie Louise Carey, her first selection being "Tell her I love her so," and in response to an encore she sang "My darling's face," both pieces being finely rendered. Miss Hatch wore a white silk dress with a dark figured lace overdress.

Xanthippe, the intractable woman and continual scold that Socrates had to put up with from the time he married till he took the fatal draught of hemlock, was impersonated by Miss May Teague, who wore a red and yellow dress, and had her pretty face covered with black marks. She claimed the crown for having made one man submissive and long suffering.

Ruth (Mrs. E. L. Norton) in a costume of yellow, black and gold, proclaimed her virtues and aspired modestly for the crown.

Next came "good Queen Bess," Elizabeth, Queen of England, with Misses Lord and Hall as maids of honor, the former in brown velvet and the latter in green. Elizabeth (Miss S. F. Kittredge) claimed the crown for the progress made in education, the arts and sciences during her reign. She was dressed in dark velvet en train with brocade front and wore the high ruff collar of her time.

Miss Ella Quint as Joan of Arc, with a shield and sword and true military bearing as well as costume, made a striking picture as she pleaded for the crown for her patriotism.

Mother Goose, the children's delight, was the very picture of the dear old soul as she used to be printed in the books. With a short dress, a red cape, a pointed hat, big eye glasses and a babbling tongue, Miss Nellie M. Merrill, who carried out the character, rattled off her melodies without laying any claim to the crown except that of assistance and encouragement to all.

When Martha Washington (Mrs. E. A. Sanborn) courted before the throne she presented a strong claim for the crown of fame as the wife of Washington and the sharer of his trials and helper at all times. The part was well costumed and carried out.

Jennie Lind, the songbird was represented by Miss Harriet F. Smith, who sang "Forget me not," for her first selection and "The last rose of summer," on an encore. Both were given with good effect and generously applauded.

Miss Edith Torr looked as much like an Indian squaw in her character of Pocahontas as the real article could be found, and she asked for the crown for her kindness to the white man in giving them corn and saving John Smith's life.

Barbara Freitchie (Miss Mary Trask) was better carried out than any other personage represented. Miss Trask made up as an old woman hobbling with a cane, her teeth gone and she suffering the infirmities of age. Whittier's familiar poem was rendered by her in a most realistic manner.

Josiah Allen's wife impersonated by Miss Mary A. Forness, next passed before the goddess and had a capital makeup. She carried an old umbrella and carpet bag and had lavender strings on her bonnet. Her claims for the crown were innumerable.

The last of the characters was that of Isabella, queen of Spain, Miss Kate E. Wiley, attended by two maids, Misses Bancroft and Grosvenor. The costume of Isabella was magnificent. She claimed the crown for helping Columbus and to her the crown, a wreath of ivy, was awarded.

The entertainment closed with the singing of America and a tableaux.

A GLOWING TRIBUTE

FROM A Skilled Physician.

DANA'S IS KING

THE FOLLOWING GLOWING TRIBUTE TO THE WONDERFUL EFFICACY OF DANA'S SARSAPARILLA, AS A GENUINE BLOOD PURIFIER, IS ENOUGH TO CONVINCE THE MOST SCEPTICAL, COMING AS IT DOES FROM A PHYSICIAN WELL KNOWN IN EASTERN MAINE AS ONE OF THE MOST SUCCESSFUL PRACTITIONERS IN THE MEDICAL FIELD, AND WHO IS ALSO AN ACTIVE CHRISTIAN WORKER IN THE CHURCH TO WHICH HE BELONGS:—

ISLESBORO, ME., Oct. 28, 1890.

DANA SARSAPARILLA CO.:
Gent:—While I have always steadily refused to lend my influence to any Patent Medicine whatever, I feel that the time has come when duty demands that I should write and tell you of the wonderful effects of DANA'S SARSAPARILLA in my own family.

Some four years ago my little daughter began to show symptoms of Scrofula, which in a short time developed into the most severe and malignant type I ever saw. I am free to confess that I tested my skill to its utmost extent. I used the most reliable specifics known to Materia Medica. I consulted with other physicians, but, despite all I could do, I saw that she was failing day by day.

At this time a bottle of DANA'S came into my hands, and knowing of several cures performed by it, I decided to try it in my little daughter's case; but I assure you I had but little faith. I commenced to give it in small doses, diluted with water, and to my surprise and great joy, in less than a week she began to improve, and continued to do so very rapidly. Two bottles built the bridge to the shore of health. The third one brought her across all right. In fact CURED her. She is now twelve years of age, and as I write I can hear her ringing laugh, as she is enjoying life with her schoolmates. I CONSIDER IT THE GREATEST BLOOD REMEDY KNOWN TO MAN.

Yours respectfully,
L. W. HAMMOND, M.D.

BREVITIES

THE GENTLER SEX.

The only one of Senator Ingalls' children who inherits to a notable degree this literary talent is his eldest daughter Ethel.

Miss Davenport, the Irish governess of Spain's juvenile king, gets $3,500 a year salary, and will soon be entitled to a life pension of $2,500 a year.

Mme. Bernard-Beere, the English actress, is a graceful, statuesque, lithe, slender, tall and beautiful young creature. She never wears stays, and the garments that suit her best are of the long, loose order.

The widow of the noted temperance lecturer John B. Gough will probably leave the old Gough estate, near Worcester, Mass., in consequence of ill health, which demands freedom from all care and anxiety.

Miss Ray Frank is one of the few Jewesses who in recent times have preached in a synagogue. Recently she spoke at Spokane Falls, and so interested her hearers that they decided to establish a permanent congregation there.

Mrs. Richard A. Proctor proposes to perpetuate her husband's name by building an observatory on Mission Heights at San Diego, Cal. The building with the telescope will cost about $25,000, and the bulk of this sum Mrs. Proctor hopes to raise by lecturing.

Miss Adeline Patti Baird, a goddaughter of the diva, has a string of pearls collected from the days of her babyhood. One of her first gifts was a number of fine unstrung pearls, and to these have been added others from time to time until she now has a matchless necklace.

Sara Bernhardt has set all Paris crazy by her African complexion. The cosmetic compound consists of saffron, well kneaded with powdered coffee, combined with a delicate mixture of musk and chikory, diluted with rose water until sufficiently liquid to be brushed over the skin.

Mrs. Frank Leslie owns a gold medallion surrounded by diamonds set like the rays of a star. A gold buckle fastens this to a ribbon wrought in the Venezuela national colors. "In the cause of humanity, progress and civilization" this decoration was conferred by the republic of Venezuela.

TALES OF THE TURF.

The Russians, French and English people have caught the trotting fever, and are making liberal purchases in trotting bred nags in this country every season, thus opening a new market that will surely increase in magnitude as the years come and go.

The Kentucky Trotting Horse Breeders' association is in favor of larger and better stakes, and it will probably offer some time during 1891 a $50,000 stake. The directory has already decided on one of $25,000, guaranteed, in addition to the $10,000 stake already advertised.

Ed F. Geers, the crack Tennessee reinsman, has been engaged as trainer and driver by C. J. Hamlin, of Buffalo, N. Y., at a salary of $4,000 a year. Geers has developed and driven some great horses, among them Brown Hal, 2:12; McEwen, 2:18; Hal Pointer, 2:09; etc.

Sam Gamble, the California horseman, fancies that he is a "hoodoo," and firmly declares that he will never visit a track when Stamboul is going to trot again. If Sam does not happen to be present the stallion reduces his record; but if, on the contrary, Sam puts in an appearance, Stamboul proves to be "just a little off."

The most prominent sale of trotting horses that has been held in central Illinois for some time took place at the farm of Col. V. Stryker, near Springfield, recently. The sale aggregated $15,000. Eleven head of horses brought $10,840, or an average of $985.45. Anthony, a 3-year-old bay, sired by Antonio, sold to J. B. Barnes, of Springfield, for $3,125.

Said a prominent horseman a few days since: "One hundred thousand dollars looks like a very high price for a horse, but you and I, if we live to be old men, will probably see the time when some stallion will sell for $500,000. The best will continue to increase in value. It will be a 'survival of the fittest,' and the very greatest horses will year by year increase in value."

RAILROAD BREVITIES

It is figured that the United States has a mile of railroad for each 400 of population and each 22 miles of area, while the balance of the world has a mile for each 7,500 of population and 287 miles of area.

Kansas has more miles of railroad than all the New England states put together. She has 1,159 more miles than New York, more than Pennsylvania, Iowa or Texas. Kansas today has 8,754 miles of railroads. Illinois alone surpasses her with 9,000 miles.

The new Canadian Pacific railway bridge at Milford, Man., spanning the Souris river, has been opened for traffic. The immense bridge was completed in the marvelously short time of five weeks. The structure is 3,300 feet in length and is on an average 75 feet high.

There are many indications that before long the electric light will be the only luminescent employed on railway trains. The Russian government has decided that all the carriages on the state railways shall be lighted by the electric light in the future.

Professor R. H. Thurston, of Cornell, declares in The Forum that it is mechanically practicable to attain a speed of a hundred miles an hour in railway travel. The only obstacle, he thinks, is a financial one—the public will not pay for the speed, and the companies won't supply it at a loss.

MIZPAH.

A plain, broad ring, massive, antique and golden,
Lied before me now,
Hallowed by memories sacred, pure and olden,
And a heart spoken vow.

I lift it gently: by the moonbeam's glimmer
I trace an ancient word,
"Mizpah," no other; but my eyes grow dimmer,
And my heart's depths are stirred.

From the bright gold Time's never tiring fingers
Have nearly worn that prayer;
But on the tablet of my heart it lingers,
'Tis written changeless there.

The Lord watch between us when we are parted;
When our tired feet
Tread paths diverging ever; when, sad hearted,
We never meet.

Watch between us when earth's strong temptations
Lead us oftentimes to fall;
When, sinful, we would sell our heavenly freedom
For Satan's thrall.

Watch between us when with this life away,
When with dark woes oppress;
When fainting in our labors, endless, dreary,
We find no rest.

Oh ever watch! through all the years so fleeting;
Through weal and woe;
Till our tired hearts have ceased their restless beating
In grave mounds low.

And when at last, "life's fitful fever ended,"
We soar on high,
Our songs of praise shall evermore be blended Beneath Thy loving eye.
—Sadie E. Hughes in Housekeeper's Weekly.

A Clever Literary Woman.

It is but fair, when counting up the successful women writers of today, to reckon the author of "The Anglomaniacs" in the southern contingency. Mrs. Burton Harrison, although for years a resident of New York city, is essentially a Virginian. She is a direct descendant of the Thomas Jefferson family, and has several brilliant professor cousins now occupying chairs in the Washington, Lee and the University of Virginia. In girlhood she was known as "Lovely Connie Cary," with as much wit and good looks and charm enough of manner to have endowed a whole country side of belles.

Mrs. Harrison has been uniformly successful in her literary efforts, but it remained for this last and unsigned story to bring her supreme success. Her name now ranks among the first feminine writers of the day, and much brilliant work from her pen is anticipated. As with all clever women, Mrs. Harrison has her pet fad. This fancy takes the very satisfactory form of collecting rare old silver. Having an unusually fine assortment of heirlooms, she has amassed, piece by piece, many priceless specimens of antique cups, jugs and urns, with odds and ends in the same precious metal picked up in this country and abroad.—Illustrated American.

Why the Canal is Crooked.

In connection with the canal which Mehemet Ali caused to be cut by unskilled Fellah labor, to connect the waters of the Nile with the sea at Alexandria, a characteristic story of the Napoleon of Egypt has been told. A French engineer, in conversation, ventured to criticize the viceroy's plan for the canal while the work was in course of completion. "Your highness," he said, "will pardon me for suggesting that your canal will be very crooked." "Do rivers in France always run in a straight line?" promptly asked the pasha. "Certainly not," responded the surprised Frenchman. "Did not Allah make them?"

"Assuredly, your highness," replied the engineer, who thought the questioner's wits were wandering. "Well, then," answered Mehemet Ali, triumphantly, "do you think you or I know better than Allah how water ought to run? I imitated him in my canal, otherwise it soon would be a dry ditch, not a canal." The Frenchman was silenced, if not convinced, and the canal was certainly made very crooked, and so remains.—San Francisco Argonaut.

Increasing the Speed of Railroad Trains.

There seems no serious difficulty, on the engineering side, in securing and maintaining a speed of 100 miles an hour, or probably more; but the capitalist is here intimidated. Higher speeds cost money for initial and operative expenses in vastly higher ratio than either increase of speed or the returns to be expected on capital so invested. Our fastest trains do not directly pay, even now, when the wear and tear of engines, cars, roadbed and bridges, to say nothing of flesh and blood, nerves and health, are considered. When the people want higher speeds, and need them so badly as to be able and willing to pay for them, the engineers will construct and the railroads will furnish trains of still higher velocity and of still greater safety.—Professor R. H. Thurston in Forum.

Half Man, Half Lion.

Old man Aristotle, who is even now regarded with great respect, was a whistler when it came to turning in interesting yarns about animals and men in foreign parts. He says there is a beast in India that has three rows of teeth in each jaw, is as big as a lion, but has ears and a face like a man's. Its eyes are gray and its body is red. It has a tail like a scorpion with a stinger in it. Its voice is like a pipe and a trumpet. It is not less swift of foot than a stag, and is wild and devouring men.—John Ashton in Curious Creatures in Zoology.

Misunderstood.

A deaf old lady riding in an electric car became much alarmed because of a blockade, and asked a young woman next to her what had happened.

"There is no danger," replied the young woman. "Remember that a kind heaven bends over all."

The old lady turned to her companion and inquired in a vexed tone, "Mary Ellen, what's that young woman saying to me about men's overalls?"—Youth's Companion.

Will You Chip In?

A whaling vessel which lately arrived at San Francisco reports that the natives of Lapland are ready to leave that country in a body if the people of the United States will chip in to bring them over. If you want an oily, pudgy, good natured pet, here's your chance to get one cheap.—Detroit Free Press.

What Star Photographs Reveal.

Perhaps the most notable of these celestial photographs, in the direct light that it throws upon the nebular hypothesis, is Mr. Roberts' already famous picture of the Andromeda nebula. Nobody can look upon the vast nebulous spirals that this photograph reveals, surrounding a great central condensation, and showing here and there a brighter knot where a satellite of the huge focal mass is in process of formation, without feeling that Laplace and Kant were not very far astray in their guess as to the mode of formation of the solar system.

But although stars in abundance are scattered over and around the Andromeda nebula, there is little in their appearance to suggest a connection between them and the nebula. It is different with the nebulae in the Pleiades and in Orion. In the wonderful photographs of the Pleiades by the Henry brothers, of Paris, one not only sees masses of nebulous matter clinging, so to speak, to some of the more conspicuous stars, but in one place a long, straight, narrow strip of nebula has stars dotted along its whole length, like diamonds strung upon a ribbon.

It becomes more difficult to resist the conclusion that in this strange nebulous streak, with its starry file, we possess an indication of the mode of origin of the many curious streams and chains of stars with which the heavens abound when we look at another amazing revelation of celestial photography. I refer to Professor Pickering's photograph of Orion, taken with a portrait lens from a mountain in southern California.—Garrett P. Serviss in Popular Science.

Physical Aspects of Australia.

In Australia of the present, what attracts the stranger most in the physical aspect of the continent is the weird novelty of the mountain regions. Yet to these regions the stranger gives, doubtless, too much importance. Outside of the mountains the well settled portions of Australia are simple, charming and comparatively unimpressive. There is, indeed, the vast interior desert region, whose desolation is said to be impressive enough. But the traveler of ordinary inclinations sees little of that. What he sees near the coast, in the cultivated parts of Victoria and New South Wales, is a fair and generally fruitful land, sleeping under kindly skies, amid conditions of climate which remind him of California. Far off blue hills, seen against the horizon, remind him that there are wilder regions not far away. But all about him vineyards and pastures indicate prosperity; and the optimistic settlers, men plainly not as reckless nor as restless as our California population, but active and hopeful, assure him, with all the well known loyalty and vehemence of English colonists, that this remote region is the best on earth for comfortable homes.—Professor Josiah Royce of Harvard in Scribner's.

Summer and Winter.

A boy of 10, whose constant cry for weeks has been for a velocipede for a present, came in from school a day or two ago and asked his mother if she had ever read Holmes' poems.

"Oh, yes," she replied. "I know many of them by heart."

"Do you?" he cried. "Well, aren't they nice? Have we got them in a book?"

"No," answered his mother; "I wish we had."

"I feel as if I must have them!" said the small boy earnestly. "Don't you suppose I could have them? Now, I'll tell you what it is—with an air of profound conviction—"If I can't have both I believe I'd rather have Holmes' poems than a velocipede!"

"Indeed!" exclaimed his mother, much surprised and pleased. Then, turning to the boy's father, she remarked pleasantly, "Really, I don't know but we are going to have a poet in the family."

"Oh, no!" cried the boy quickly; "I'm going to be a baseball player, and when I grow up, you know—but I'll tell you what," he added, suddenly, "I might be a poet winter."—Kate Upson Clark in Washington Republic.

Names of Cigars.

I never knew a smoker whose mouth didn't water when he heard the word "Perfectos" used, but I doubt if many cigar lovers know what the word means. Without bothering about the derivation, it simply applies to a cigar that is rolled and made in the best possible manner, and hence more expensive than the ordinary article. Any kind of tobacco can be used in a Perfecto, although it doesn't pay to use a very inferior grade in it. The other most common names indicating shape and make are Concha, Regalia and Reina Victoria, which you will see on boxes in any good cigar store. Strictly speaking, a "Bouquet" cigar is one that has a ribbon tied around it, but of late paper bands have passed muster pretty freely. The name on the front of a cigar box always tells the expert the size and shape, while he looks to the right hand side for the trade name.—Interview in St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A Well 5,000 Years Old.

A last will and testament over 5,000 years old has recently been found in Egypt. The testator, Sekiah, executed it in his own handwriting in favor of his brother, a priest of Osiris. The property disposed of was to go to Sekiah's daughter upon the brother's death, the internal evidence of the document plainly showing that even in those distant days the Egyptian recognized a woman's right to own, administer and dispose of property.—St. Louis Republic.

Feline Fun.

Montaigne says: "When I play with my cat how do I know whether she does not make a pastime of me, just as I do of her? We entertain ourselves with mutual antics, and if I have my own times of beginning or refusing, she, too, has hers."

Austin Corbin, the railroad millionaire and magnate, is a bald headed, nervous man of 55, who possesses indomitable energy. He has been called the Dictator of Long Island. Fifteen years ago he was unheard of.

WHAT GEN. WILEY MISSED.

Millions That Might Have Been His if Fortune Had Been More Propitious.

Gen. John A. Wiley rises up every now and then in the middle of the night and kicks himself when he thinks how near he once came to being a millionaire. It was through no fault of his own that his plans miscarried, but all on account of a trusted party failing to carry out instructions. It happened about ten years ago, on a trip with a friend through the southwest, when the mining fever was at its height.

They were at Tucson, Ariz., where prospectors were thick, and had talked to some of them who had the "best thing in the world" for sale. Finally a man put in an appearance who said he was positive that he had a big thing; that he had two claims sixty miles from there in which was a rich deposit of copper that would assay $75 in silver to the ton; that there was a hog backed mountain on the claims which he had tapped in a straight line in four different places and struck copper each time.

The man's talk had the true ring, but, like most of the prospectors, he was without money. He had a fine gold watch, and this he put up to guarantee the expenses of the two days' journey by wagon in case the property was not what he claimed. They paid his expenses at the hotel, and the next morning started on the trip. Arriving there they found everything to be as he had represented, and arranged to buy the two claims outright for the sum of $8,000, the general agreeing to take a quarter interest for himself. They had traveling with them a young man in whom they had confidence, and to him they intrusted the details of the arrangement, as they wished to proceed home and had found means of returning to Tucson at once. So the agreement was drawn up, and the young man and the prospector were to go to Tombstone, eighty miles in an opposite direction, where the money had been deposited subject to the young man's check, with positive instructions for him to pay the money and close the deal.

The general and his companion arrived home, but three weeks having passed by, and the letter that they longed for not having come, they telegraphed their agent to ascertain the cause of his delay in forwarding the papers. He answered that he had sent a letter. When it came they learned from the contents that he had not settled the matter, having come to the conclusion that it was best, in his judgment, not to purchase the claims. And this, too, from a man who had received positive instructions to close the deal!

Well, shortly afterward an agent of Flood and Mackay came along, gave the poor prospector a cool $100,000 and the retention of a one-eighth interest for his claims, and entered into an agreement with the millionaire to work the mine on a certain percentage. The company was stocked for $12,000,000. So, you see, the general's one-fourth interest would have stood him $3,000,000. The "Copper Queen" is still a great mine, while it is said that the agent who took the contract of working the same has pulled out as high as $60,000 in one month for his percentage.—Franklin (Pa.) News.

A Peculiar Order.

They tell a funny story down town of a business man who employs a large number of men, all of whom have to use the same elevator. There is much running in and out during the day, and the elevator is kept going constantly.

Recently the business man went east and married. He brought his wife back to St. Louis. He thinks almost as much of her as he does of himself, and those who know him will understand that a degree of admiration that implies. One day lately, when the elevator was crowded on every trip, the elevator boy walked into the great man's office.

"Mrs. Blank is downstairs in a carriage," he said, "and wants to see you." "Tell her to come up in the elevator," said the husband with dignity, "and don't let any one else get in the elevator with her. If anybody tries to crowd in you report him to me and I'll discharge him."

The elevator boy grinned, and the wife came up alone. But in an hour afterward every employe in the building had heard of the order, and now it's considered a great joke for a man going up to peep in the elevator and say to the boy, "Do I get discharged if I go up this trip?"—St. Louis Chronicle.

Preferred Apples to a College.

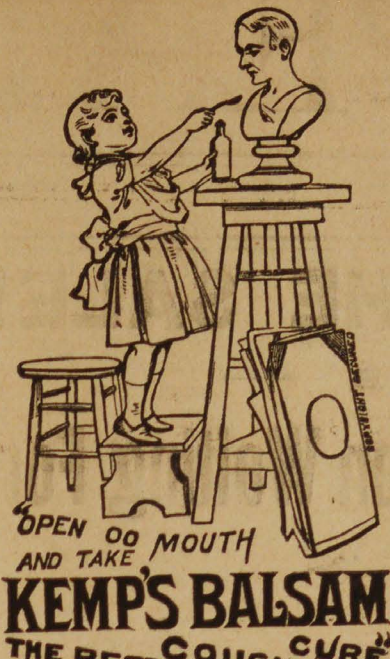

About a century ago, when the commissioners who had in charge the selection of a site for Bowdoin college were attending to this duty, they pitched upon New Gloucester, Me., as combining more advantages than any other place they had visited, but the owner of the land refused to part with it if it was to be used as the site of a college, though willing enough to sell it if it was to be put to any other use. The reason that he gave was that the students would steal the apples in an orchard in which he took great pride. So it seems that this is the reason why New Gloucester is noted for its apples rather than as being the seat of Bowdoin college.—Portland Transcript.

Discrimination.

A surprising thing is the unintelligent judgment that many people form as to the contents of newspapers. They swear by their favorite journal and dispute statements that appear in other journals, although such statements may be merely official reports and authoritative reports of occurrences verified on their face. How vastly superior are those who have the intelligence to read newspapers between the lines, to know when information is trustworthy, to make allowance for bias, to take things with the salt that seasons them.—New York Sun.

Affixing Stamps.

Since it has been suggested that stamps can be kept from sticking together by passing them over the hair, it becomes worth while to know how to avoid touching them with the tongue. Moisten the envelope instead.—Cor. Writer.

EDITORIAL BRIEFS.

A DETERMINED effort has been manifested to kill the Election Bill. Honest electoral contests seem to be little appreciated by many of the members of Congress.

IT LOOKS as if the long delayed Copyright Bill would eventually become a law.

SLATES for the town election are being made; but there is ample time to make and break a great many before that event is upon us.

THE PRESS will publish in full the opinion of the Supreme Court upon the Electric Light injunction, as soon as it is ready to be made public.

IN ANOTHER column, we publish an original retrospect, in verse, written expressly for the PRESS. It contains several local hits which will readily be recognized. We shall be pleased to receive contributions of original verse or prose, and to make the matter interesting, we offer a cash prize of five dollars for the best poem, and five dollars for the best short story, about two columns in length, the contest to be decided by a select committee of well known townsmen. We prefer that the competition be confined to local writers and local topics. The contest shall remain open until July first, when the entire contributions will be submitted to the judges, and the prizes awarded.

NO CLOSE observer could fail to notice during the eight months that have passed, the striking increase of open and offensive drunkenness in our streets. Since the first day of May last, the time when the sale of intoxicating liquors became legalized in Peabody, it has been no uncommon occurrence to see six to ten persons in a state of unmistakable intoxication, varying in degrees, to be sure, but still visibly and undeniably drunk, in a single day. We had frequently heard from the advocates of license, during the "no license" regime, that "just as much liquor was sold in town and just as much drunkenness prevailed, as had been or would be, under the domain of license," but the experiences of the past eight months have furnished such conclusive answer to the statement, that we trust no one will have the effrontery now to repeat the assertion. It is no answer to say that arrests have been as few in town, for drunkenness the past, as in former years, from whatever cause the number of arrests have been kept at the minimum, the fact still remains, that drunkards were at large upon the public streets, making themselves obnoxious to decent people, in numbers exceeding by ten-fold the cases under no license. There may have been reasons of expediency that prevented the number of arrests that might have been made; as to what the cause is we have not thought it necessary to inquire. The facts speak for themselves and cannot be gainsaid. In former years, when open bars were unknown to our municipality, it is true that several, perhaps many, residents of town found a way to procure liquor, some in town and others out-of-town, and got drunk; but those cases occurred mostly in the evening, they, in many cases rode from Salem to Peabody in their drunken condition and disappeared from view, which was some relief. Then, too, the difficulties of obtaining liquor under the circumstances then prevailing made frequent occurrences almost impossible, and doubtless much less pecuniary want and distress was prevented by the removal of frequent opportunities to spend the earnings in drink, that should have been turned into the family. In view of what has been so offensively patent to all since the open bar became a part of the established order of things, let us hope all sober-minded, moral citizens will see to it in the coming town meeting that NO LICENSE shall be made the order for the year to come.

THE RESCRIPT of the Court in the electric town plant case freshly illustrates the difference between positiveness and certainty and the danger of illiberality in matters of opinion. The minority of our citizens or rather of those who attended the heated and enthusiastic meetings of last spring, and who then believed as the Supreme Court has now ruled, received but scant courtesy from the majority who differed from them.

Some of the vehement assertions of that period must now savor a little of the ridiculous even to those who made them. But as the question is now settled, and as, after all, our difference of opinion had but a common object, the true interests of the town, we will turn our faces to the future and away from the past. The court has decided that no law now exists under which the town can light its own streets and buildings. It had previously, May 27, 1890, decided that such a law could be made by the Legislature. Few persons had any doubt on this point. And that such a statute will pass, perhaps at the present session is highly probable. It is undeniable that there is a rapidly growing tendency (set in recent motion to a great extent by Edward Bellamy), toward what is termed paternal legislation, an assumption by state and municipality of rights and powers heretofore held to belong exclusively to private enterprise. We have some fear that this tendency is fraught with danger to the public weal but we waive discussion on this point for the present. If the Legislature shall enact a statute with proper conditions as to voting by ballot, etc., and a majority of our citizens shall deem it wise and expedient to adopt such a statute, no thinking man will offer further objection. But the wisdom and expediency of such adoption will, we think, depend upon the answer to a query which springs from the second of the questions just passed upon by the Court. That query is: Can the Legislature authorize cities and towns to expend money for the purpose of manufacturing light to sell to private customers? We think that question will be decided in the negative by the court, though we avoid positiveness in the opinion. That it must be decided affirmatively, before Peabody or any other town will be warranted in making the large expenditure necessary for an electric plant must, we think, be conceded. For it is obvious that without the advantage of the profit of commercial lighting, no town could successfully compete with private companies. And this being the fact, would it be expedient for the town to vote for a town plant? Would a majority of the voters by a deliberate ballot vote, re-affirm the decision of last spring? That remains to be proved. Meanwhile we are not suffering particularly for public light. The tax payers are losing nothing by the delay, and we can all afford to wait with patience, and to finally determine this important question by a fair and dispassionate discussion.

THE SUPREME COURT has issued a peremptory mandamus, from which there is no appeal, to the County Commissioners in regard to the erection of a truant school. At least this body will be compelled to obey the instructions of the Court, and the wishes of those municipalities which petitioned for such a school will be carried out. There has been a long contest in this matter—and the Commissioners have carried on a useless and unwarranted fight. It has resulted in the displacement of the chairman of the Commissioners, though this was by no means the entire cause for his defeat—and a delay which has brought much harm to the cause of education. In this delay the voters have been in part at fault. There never has been that consensus of feeling, among the citizens of the county, in favor of the establishment of truant schools, that there should have been. Danvers repudiated her vote given years ago, and declared against the establishment of such a school.

It would appear that the wishes of the majority of the voters of the county were not in sympathy with such an institution. But it does not follow, on that account, that a truant school is undesirable or unnecessary. The commissioners have tried in every way to evade the law, relying, in part, on this negative sentiment. Petitions have been sent to the Legislature in favor of repealing the law. But it has not availed. The legislators were wiser than their constituents, and the law still stands on the statute books.

The large portion of the people of Essex county has not realized the necessity for a truant school which certainly exists. It is not familiar with the difficulties which have beset every school in this town, and other towns and cities in regard to truancy. Ask the school board of the town, ask any one of the conscientious teachers of the public schools if such an institution is needed and note their reply. And they are the persons to give answer to this question. The truant officers can do nothing. The magistrate has no power to sentence these scholars who are habitual truants.

There are some places in the county that support truant schools of their own. This, itself, shows their need. But the law itself allows several municipalities to petition for the establishment of such a school, and this is just what was done, the law was not carried out though.

There is not a necessity for the erection of a building or a school that shall entail a large expense on the county. It should be an institution that should be corrective in its influence, and secure to the inmates that flavor of the true family which is too often absent from the lives of the children who are liable to be sent there. It should not be a penal institution. But it will have its effect, not only in the influence which it will exert among those who are sent thither, but upon those who are deterred from habitual truancy from a knowledge of its existence.

We congratulate the citizens of the town that there is at last a hope of the establishment of a truant school. Its voters petitioned for it; and later supported the commissioners who had opposed their wishes. There is no town in the county where its influence will be felt more favorably than Peabody.

DON'T LIKE CIVIL SERVICE REFORM.

The Milford Journal is still "kicking against the pricks" and the trouble now is that Clerk McLaughlin of the house is a Democrat, and is elected by Republican votes. After a long diatribe it winds up as follows:

"Civil service reform" has a pretty, jingling sound, but no greater humbug to point of fact, practice and principle has ever been peddled off upon the American people, or any other people for that matter. It is the pestling place of demagogues and the garb for charlatans to masquerade in.

The "spoils doctrine" is well, we suppose so. But it's the doctrine, we believe in, all the same.—Newton Graphic.

We can't help recognizing the truth of the Journal's remarks, notwithstanding the superior abilities of Clerk McLaughlin. His case is the exception that proves the rule.

ESSEX COUNTY.

Charles Sumner Wilson Esq., the colored lawyer of Salem, was taken to the Danvers Asylum this week, having become insane in consequence it is said by brooding over his professional failure. He started life, a poor boy, and by hard work succeeded in graduating at Tufts College in 1877, after which he entered the law office of Hon. W. D. Northend, and in 1880, was admitted to the Essex Bar. He practiced for a while in Boston, thence going to Maryland, where he taught school for a number of years. About a year ago, he returned to Salem, and since that time has devoted himself principally to procuring a government position. He has always felt that his abilities were overlooked on account of his color, and this idea has caused him much mental anguish. He was well known in Peabody, particularly among those interested in base ball matters, as he was years ago, pitcher for the old "Light-foots."

An $85,000 monument is to be erected in the family cemetery lot at Gloucester, to the memory of the late prima-dona, Emma Abbott.

Lynn exults over the Truant schools victory.

Henry Nason of West Newbury, narrowly escaped death one day this week, by becoming closed within the crossing gates of the Boston & Maine road at that town. By a remarkable presence of mind he wheeled his horses around and the train passed within an inch of the team.

The water of the Merrimack river, used for family supply, is said to contain diphtheria germs. Lawrence and Lowell suffer from this infection, but below Lawrence, no danger is apprehended.

Last Saturday, Georgetown, witnessed a great sleighing carnival.

S. W. Elliot, formerly of Amesbury, now Superintendent of the Stockton Combined Harvester and Agricultural Works, was presented by the employees, this week, with a gold watch and chain.

Lynn had 10 deaths last week.

There was a $500 fire at Hotel Oxford, Lynn, on Tuesday.

Henry M. Stanley delivered a lecture in Haverhill on Wednesday Evening.

A girl named Conroy was badly burned by burning cement at Elton & Sears' shop in Danvers yesterday.

A great excitement was caused recently by the conjunction of certain planets, said by astronomers to foretell deaths by cold, &c. But all anxiety was quickly dispelled by the sage remark of one old citizen. "What do we care! ain't we got Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup."

The soloist of the symphony concert at Music Hall last Saturday evening, was T. Adamowski, who rendered Wienlawski's concerto number two for violin in a manner highly acceptable. His expressive and appreciative delivery of a romance can scarcely be equalled in this country and his clever technique and admirable mastery of the intricacies of Wienlawski's composition was never more strikingly apparent than on Saturday evening's performance. The high appreciation of his hearers was abundantly testified by the ovation with which he was greeted. Several floral pieces were tendered him upon the occasion. The orchestra gave Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony and Berlioz's overture to Benace, and a charming ballade for strings by Mc Kenzie. The concert was a fine artistic performance.

The Philharmonic concert at the Boston Theatre last Sunday evening was highly appreciated. Selections from Wagner were conspicuous upon the programme. Andres and Doerner piano duettists will entertain with some artistic selections. At the closing concert, one week from tomorrow evening, Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Nights Dream" will be given in full, Mr. Middle will read, the music will be performed in full, assisted by 200 female chorists.

For the reproduction of her scenery properties and stage settings, destroyed in the Fifth Avenue fire, Miss Davenport secured the leading artists and stage mechanics in New York, Brooklyn and Philadelphia, and they are now at work on a duplicate set of scenery and properties for "Cleopatra." Paris and London were called for costumes, and Miss Davenport assures Manager Rich that she will be on hand at the Hollis Street Jan. 26 to fulfil her engagement as per contract. This will be the first production of the new "Cleopatra."

The Nashville students, the original Jubilee Singers, gave the Star Course Concert Monday night at Tremont Temple.

The general verdict of those who have witnessed the "Crystal Slipper" this week is, that it is a superb show. It has lost nothing of interest since its former production upon the Boston Theatre stage. The scenery and costumes are beautiful, the ballets are charming and the whole effect striking and picturesque. El Foy and Misses Louise Montague, Miss Ida Mule and Topsy Venn are especial favorites with the audience. Foy plays his same old role, Yosemite, the barons' valet, and keeps the audience in a merry mood. Next Saturday closes the engagement.

"Ship Ahoy!" has occupied the boards this week. It is the latest nautical farce. The story of the opera deals with the experiences of a standard opera company, the members being worked on the Pacific Ocean and cast ashore on the Palm Islands, a good satirical hit on the "red tape of the navy is worked into the opera, that is quite amusing.

"The Great Metropolis" has entertained the visitors of the Grand Opera House this week. Next week will open with "Kajanka."

"A Straight Tip" has been well received at the Hollis. On Monday, the laughing success of London, "Dr. Bull" will be put on for a week's run.

Little Maria Tempest has made a reputation with Boston theatre goers this week, at the Globe, in the role of Kitty Carroll, in the "Red Hussar." She came to Boston a stranger, but before her first performance had clotted, she had found and touched a sympathetic cord in many a breast.

The "Solider" has drawn good houses the past week at the museum.

The Hanlon-Volter Martineff English Pantomime Company, with the far-famed Hanlon aerial performers; the Martineffs in pantomime; Walter Emerson, the cornetist; Rapolo, the equilibrist; Stubbs Tripp, grotesques; the Wertenberg family of gymnasts, the most of them women; the Chinese fair, by the Montague Troupe, will be seen at the Boston Theatre Jan. 26.

Mrs. James Brown-Potter and Kyrle Bellow are playing Calcutta. They close their Indian engagement in Bombay the latter part of the month and thence go direct to London, where it is their intention to produce "Hero and Leander," an adaptation from the German, in which they met with some success in Melbourne.

John B. Masou late of Boston Museum Company, has accepted an engagement to play the part of American in "The Idler," Heddon Chamber's new play at the Princess Theatre, London.

Wilton Lackaye is again playing Nero on the road.

Henry F. Gilliz, of the defunct American Exchange (Limited), of Europe, has lost the case against Lawrence Barrett, about which he made such a fuss a short while since.

EDITORIAL BRIEFS.

A DETERMINED effort has been manifested to kill the Election Bill. Honest electoral contests seem to be little appreciated by many of the members of Congress.

IT LOOKS as if the long delayed Copyright Bill would eventually become a law.

SLATES for the town election are being made; but there is ample time to make and break a great many before that event is upon us.

THE PRESS will publish in full the opinion of the Supreme Court upon the Electric Light injunction, as soon as it is ready to be made public.

IN ANOTHER column, we publish an original retrospect, in verse, written expressly for the Press. It contains several local bits which will readily be recognized. We shall be pleased to receive contributions of original verse or prose, and to make the matter interesting, we offer a cash prize of five dollars for the best poem, and five dollars for the best short story, about two columns in length, the contest to be decided by a select committee of well known townsmen. We prefer that the competition be confined to local writers and local topics. The contest shall remain open until July first, when the entire contributions will be submitted to the judges, and the prizes awarded.

NO CLOSE observer could fail to notice during the eight months that have passed, the striking increase of open and offensive drunkenness in our streets. Since the first day of May last, the time when the sale of intoxicating liquors became legalized in Peabody, it has been no uncommon occurrence to see six to ten persons in a state of unmistakable intoxication, varying in degrees, to be sure, but still visibly and undeniably drunk, in a single day. We had frequently heard from the advocates of license, during the "no license" regime, that "just as much liquor was sold in town and just as much drunkenness prevailed, as had been or would be, under the domain of license," but the experiences of the past eight months have furnished such conclusive answer to the statement, that we trust no one will have the effrontery now to repeat the assertion. It is no answer to say that arrests have been as few in town, for drunkenness the past, as in former years, from whatever cause the number of arrests have been kept at the minimum, the fact still remains, that drunkards were at large upon the public streets, making themselves obnoxious to decent people, in numbers exceeding by tenfold the cases under no license. There may have been reasons of expediency that prevented the number of arrests that might have been made; as to what the cause is we have not thought it necessary to inquire. The facts speak for themselves and cannot be gainsaid. In former years, when open bars were unknown to our municipality, it is true that several, perhaps many, residents of town found a way to procure liquor, some in town and others out-of-town, and got drunk; but those cases occurred mostly in the evening, they, in many cases rode from Salem to Peabody in their drunken condition and disappeared from view, which was some relief. Then, too, the difficulties of obtaining liquor under the circumstances then prevailing made frequent occurrences almost impossible, and doubtless much less pecuniary want and distress was prevented by the removal of frequent opportunities to spend the earnings in drink, that should have been turned into the family. In view of what has been so offensively patent to all since the open bar became a part of the established order of things, let us hope all sober-minded, moral citizens will see to it in the coming town meeting that NO LICENSE shall be made the order for the year to come.

THE RESCRIPT of the Court in the electric town plant case freshly illustrates the difference between positiveness and certainty and the danger of illiberality in matters of opinion. The minority of our citizens or rather of those who attended the heated and enthusiastic meetings of last spring, and who then believed as the Supreme Court has now ruled, received but scant courtesy from the majority who differed from them.

Some of the vehement assertions of that period must now savor a little of the ridiculous even to those who made them. But as the question is now settled, and as, after all, our difference of opinion had but a common object, the true interests of the town, we will turn our faces to the future and away from the past. The court has decided that no law now exists under which the town can light its own streets and buildings. It had previously, May 27, 1890, decided that such a law could be made by the Legislature. Few persons had had any doubt on this point. And that such a statute will pass, perhaps at the present session is highly probable. It is undeniable that there is a rapidly growing tendency (set in recent motion to a great extent by Edward Bellamy), toward what is termed paternal legislation, an assumption by state and municipality of rights and powers heretofore held to belong exclusively to private enterprise. We have some fear that this tendency is fraught with danger to the public weal but we waive discussion on this point for the present. If the Legislature shall enact a statute with proper conditions as to voting by ballot, etc., and a majority of our citizens shall deem it wise and expedient to adopt such a statute, no thinking man will offer further objection. But the wisdom and expediency of such adoption will, we think, depend upon the answer to a query which springs from the second of the questions just passed upon by the Court. That query is: Can the Legislature authorize cities and towns to expend money for the purpose of manufacturing light to sell to private customers? We think that question will be decided in the negative by the court, though we avoid positiveness in the opinion. That it must be decided affirmatively, before Peabody or any other town will be warranted in making the large expenditure necessary for an electric plant must, we think, be conceded. For it is obvious that without the advantage of the profit of commercial lighting, no town could successfully compete with private companies. And this being the fact, would it be expedient for the town to vote for a town plant? Would a majority of the voters by a deliberate ballot vote, re-affirm the decision of last spring? That remains to be proved. Meanwhile we are not suffering particularly for public light. The tax payers are losing nothing by the delay, and we can all afford to wait with patience, and to finally determine this important question by a fair and dispassionate discussion.

THE SUPREME COURT has issued a peremptory mandamus, from which there is no appeal, to the County Commissioners in regard to the erection of a truant school. At least this body will be compelled to obey the instructions of the Court, and the wishes of those municipalities which petitioned for such a school will be carried out. There has been a long contest in this matter—and the Commissioners have carried on a useless and unwarranted fight. It has resulted in the displacement of the chairman of the Commissioners, though this was by no means the entire cause for his defeat—and a delay which has brought much harm to the cause of education. In this delay the voters have been in part at fault. There never has been that consensus of feeling, among the citizens of the county, in favor of the establishment of truant schools, that there should have been. Danvers repudiated her vote given years ago, and declared against the establishment of such a school.

It would appear that the wishes of the majority of the voters of the county were not in sympathy with such an institution. But it does not follow, on that account, that a truant school is undesirable or unnecessary. The commissioners have tried in every way to evade the law, relying, in part, on this negative sentiment. Petitions have been sent to the Legislature in favor of repealing the law. But it has not availed. The legislators were wiser than their constituents, and the law still stands on the statute books.

The large portion of the people of Essex county has not realized the necessity for a truant school which certainly exists. It is not familiar with the difficulties which have beset every school in this town, and other towns and cities in regard to truancy. Ask the school board of the town, ask any one of the conscientious teachers of the public schools if such an institution is needed and note their reply. And they are the persons to give answer to this question. The truant officers can do nothing. The magistrate has no power to sentence these scholars who are habitual truants.

There are some places in the county that support truant schools of their own. This, itself, shows their need. But the law itself allows several municipalities to petition for the establishment of such a school, and this is just what was done, the law was not carried out though.

It should not be a penal institution. But it will have its effect, not only in the influence which it will exert among those who are sent thither, but upon those who are deterred from habitual truancy from a knowledge of its existence.

We congratulate the citizens of the town that there is at last a hope of the establishment of a truant school. Its voters petitioned for it; and later supported the commissioners who had opposed their wishes. There is no town in the county where its influence will be felt more favorably than Peabody.

A CITY LUXURY.

Just as the city looks to the country for most of the luxuries used on its tables, so the country must turn to the city for those conveniences which are justly termed luxuries for the hard-working housewife. City housekeepers have learned to realize that to save time is to lengthen life.

SAPOLIO?

is one of the best known city luxuries and each time a cake is used an hour is saved. On floors, tables and painted work it acts like a charm. For scouring pots, pans and metals it has no equal. IF YOUR STOREKEEPER DOES NOT KEEP IT YOU SHOULD INSIST UPON HIS DOING SO, as it always gives satisfaction and its immense sale all over the United States makes it an almost necessary article to any well-supplied store. Everything shines after its use, and even the children delight in using it in their attempts to help around the house.

The next in the series of monthly "Fellowship Meetings" will be held with the South church, Peabody, Tuesday, Jan. 20, commencing at 4 o'clock and continuing through the evening. Rev. De Witt S. Clark will preach at 4 o'clock, upon "Praying in the Spirit."

Nobody seems much displeased with the decision of the Supreme Court on the town plant question. In an interview with the chairman of the committee, he stated that other towns are pressing for enabling legislation and thought the town would wait the outcome of the movement now on foot.

An expert who examined the Faraklin Motor, used on the Essex Electric cars, recently, pronounced it the best in the market. This motor has several peculiar features that give it advantage over the others. It has never been known to burn out under any circumstances. This, we are told, makes its use much cheaper than any other.

P. Roger Gill gave a supper to his employees on Wednesday evening. Particularly pleasant relations exist between the workmen and employer. Two years ago Mr. Gill received a gold headed cane as a memento from his employees and at Christmas they presented D. P. Gill, who is foreman of the establishment with a gold chain and charm.

The people of the South Church were greatly interested in listening last Sabbath evening to Rev. S. S. Matthews of Boston. PROBATE COURT.

At the session of the Probate Court in Lawrence on Monday, wills of the following persons were proved:

Bernard Bradley, of Lawrence; Walter Conson, administrator with the will annexed; Mary A. Courtney, Haverhill; Rose L. Courtney, executrix; Wm. Dooling, Lawrence; Hannah M. Dooling, Adah Huse, Melbuen; Hattie J. Huse, Elizabeth Johnson, Haverhill; Wm. J. Edwards, Anthony S. Jones, Newburyport; Chas. C. Dane, Joseph S. Morse, Melbuen; Edward A. Morse Thos. Saunders, Andover; Warren Saunders, Hannah Toomey, Lawrence; John Breen.

Administration was granted upon the estates of the following deceased persons:

Annie Hallowell, of Lawrence; James Baste, administrator; Mary A. Tattersall, North Andover; Samuel Tattersall; Thomas L. Walsh, Lawrence; Catherine Walsh; Wm. H. Webster, Haverhill; Phineas Haynes.

Five guardianships were granted, 2 sales of real estate were authorized, and 25 inventories, 19 affidavits of appointment and 14 accounts were received.

An Argument for No License.

According to the Cape Ann Advertiser, the annual report of the City Marshal shows that the police made 857 arrests during the year ending November 30, 1890, over one-half of which were for drunkenness in some form, there being 482 cases of simple drunkenness, 2 for second and 4 for the third offence, 4 common drunkards, 2 for delirium tremens, besides 33 drunken lodgers.

An Interesting Relic.

The Father Mathews of Salem were presented with a large atlas recently by James Spring of that city, in whose possession it has been since the disbanding of the Irish Reading Room association. The volume is much appreciated from the fact that it has an interesting history connected with it. The fly-leaf has the following inscription on it: "Presented to the Irish Reading Room association in Jan., 1856, by James Looney."

"What a piece of work is man! how noble in reason, in form and moving," unless he has rheumatism, then he loses his god-like grace and limps sadly through the world. He shouldn't though. He should use Salvation Oil.

Dr. A. M. Dudley has removed his dentistry office to No. 135 Washington street, the office recently occupied by Dr. C. B. Swasey.

The great New England road in which so many people of this section have important interests, had an extremely small beginning in Massachusetts. In 1833 the Andover and Wilmington Railroad Company was incorporated, with authority to build a road between these two points to connect with the Boston & Lowell Railroad at Wilmington. The little road of six and one-half miles was opened for travel in 1835, and was the beginning of the most important railroad corporation in New England. Previous to the year 1839 the Andover & Wilmington road had obtained authority to extend its tracks to the state line to meet those of the Boston & Maine Railroad Company of New Hampshire, and in that year its name was changed to the Boston and Portland Railroad Company.

In 1840 this road was opened to Exeter, and in 1841 to Dover, N. H. In 1842 a consolidation was effected of the Boston and Portland Company of Massachusetts, the Boston and Maine company of New Hampshire, and the Maine, New Hampshire and Massachusetts company of Maine, the consolidated road taking the name of the New Hampshire company. The opening of the road to Dover had been followed by such an influx of important traffic that it was found imperative to establish a connection with Boston independent of the Boston & Lowell company; therefore, in 1844 a charter was obtained for the Boston & Maine Extension Railroad company, which permitted the laying of tracks between Wilmington and Boston. A union of this with the parent company was effected in 1845. At about this time the town of Lawrence was incorporated, and its future importance was clearly seen by the Boston & Maine management.

The portion of North Andover which had been taken to form a part of the new town lay too far from their tracks to establish any convenient connection. A detour of nine miles was therefore constructed, commencing near the northern point of the Boston & Maine extension and joining the main road in North Andover about two and one-half miles from Lawrence. The road from Salmon Falls to Portland was established in 1873, the company up to 1871 having run its cars between South Berwick Junction (a point two and one-half miles east of Salmon Falls) and Portland over the road of the Portland, Saco & Portsmouth railroad, under a contract with that company. Since this date, the mileage of the company has not increased by building, but within the last 34 years a large number of leases have been executed, which have enormously increased its extent, so that the number of miles under its control at present amounts to about 1300.

Among the most important of the leased roads is the Eastern, of which the company holds a fifty-four years' lease, with forty-eight more years to run. More recently it has obtained control of the Boston & Lowell. The Boston & Maine is a railroad which has always had a strong hold on the confidence of New England investors for very obvious reasons. It has always been in the hands of reliable and intelligent men, who have successfully managed its affairs.

It is pre-eminently a home investment, its directors all being New England men, and every mile of its extensive connections being within that section, and it has from the first, paid handsome dividends, never, we believe less than 6 per cent., and of late years 8 and 10 per cent. The unprecedented fall in stock of this road, from 221 to 100 in October last, cannot be accounted for by any existing circumstances, and leads to the suspicion that strong bearish influences are at work in the Boston market.

The decrease in the last dividend is no matter for alarm, as the immense sums put out in the improvements of the road will certainly return to the stockholders later, in increased value of the property; expenses of this road, as well as of other New England roads, have been heavy the past year, and in view of certain projected reforms planned both by the State and National legislatures will be likely to be heavy for some time to come, but an investment which pays eight per cent. with a corporation which has never passed its dividend, can scarcely be found fault with.

A story is running through the inner circles of theatrical criticism to the effect that Manager Conried wrote a letter to Mr. James Gordon Bennett, bitterly complaining of Dramatic Editor Meltzer's criticism of Poor Jonathan. Mr. Bennett answered the letter by cableing the order to raise Mr. Meltzer's salary $35 per week.

Theatres are said by the superstitiously-inclined professionals, to burn by threes. Little's Minneapolis Bijou made the second, and for a week before the Fifth Avenue was destroyed the old fellows were scanning the newspapers for the third. When it came they seemed extremely happy, particularly as Mr. Miner himself is said to have broken a big mirror the night before the fire.

The new Fifth Avenue Theatre is to be fire-proof, and will embrace a part of the old Gilsey homestead on Twenty-eighth Street.

The Terrible Indian War.

Now in progress, excites universal attention, and a history of the thrilling events connected with it will be eagerly sought after. The enterprising publishers, S. S. Scranton & Co., Hartford, Conn., have in preparation and will issue as soon as possible after the decisive battle, a work of 500 pages, by W. Fletcher Johnson, author of "Johnstown Flood," giving a graphic sketch of Sitting Bull, the Medicine Man, and the leading chiefs, and a complete richly illustrated history of the whole terrible struggle.

Agents should write at once to the publishers, who give liberal terms and pay freight.

America's Only German Illustrated Newspaper.

It is a curious fact that there is only one weekly German illustrated newspaper in the United States. It is the German edition of the famous Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper, and it is not surprising that it has a very large circulation. It is sent three months for $1, the same as Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper, and an annual subscription of $4 entitles the subscriber to a magnificent fac simile of the "Angelus" in eight colors a work of art worthy of a place in any one's parlor. Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper this week is full of beautiful pictures. Get it at your newsdealer's for ten cents.

The only thing about the Pawtucket Gazette and Chronicle which it has been possible for any one to criticize unfavorably has been its unwieldy form. Now the paper has been changed to a neat quarto, and at the same time a new dress of type has been bought. The result is that the Gazette and Chronicle hereafter, will altogether be above criticism. Editor Lee has our hearty congratulations.—Somerville Journal.

This form which was adopted by the PRESS many years ago, is coming to be recognized as the best for weekly and semi-weekly publications, as it affords many advantages both to publishers and readers.

THE GREATEST STRIKE.

Among the great strikes that of Dr. Miles in discovering his New Heart Cure has proven itself to be one of the most important. The demand for it has become astonishing. Already the treatment of heart disease is being revolutionized, and many unexpected cures effected. It soon relieves short breath, fluttering, pains in side, arm, shoulder, weak and hungry spells, oppression, swelling of ankles, smothering and heart dropsy. Lee, also his Restorative Nerve for Leadache, fits, sprains, not ditches, nervous chills, opium habit, etc.

Dr. Robert Koch, the great German scientist who first discovered the germ theory, and who has once more startled the world with his lymph theory. His name has now become a household word and it really seems as if his lymph when injected under the skin kills the germ or bacilli producing tuberculosis and lupus. More than one seventh of all deaths can be traced to this full disease, and should Koch's lymph really prove a remedy for this he may claim to be the greatest benefactor mankind has seen this century. His discovery even surpasses Jenner's discovery of the vaccination lymph. Koch himself is still a young man; he was born in Germany, in the Hartz Mountains in 1843 and took his physicians degree in 1866. He practiced in different hospitals until 1872, when he settled in a small town in Silesia, Germany. Here he made his first important observations, but owing to the conservatism of the authorities he was unable to make any headway. He then went to Berlin where he became a member of the Imperial Health Board. This was Koch's chance. Here he proved that consumption, cholera and many other diseases were traceable to minute organisms. He was then sent to India by the German Government. That country is the cradle of cholera and there his investigations fully bore out his theory. Since then he has been prosecuting his researches with what splendid results have just been shown.

Direct Taxation.

Direct taxation, on a large scale, is near at hand. The men who bought and paid for the present Congress can now choose what its form shall be. They can have a general income tax; or they can have something less open to fraud, less inquisitorial in its nature, less oppressive upon honest men, and offering no premium to perjury. But they know nothing about the science of taxation, and they do not care to learn; so that the whole matter will be left over to the new Congress, and a general income tax, objectionable as it is, seems most likely to be adopted. It has already been proposed by Senator Plumb and Mr. Mills. It is one of the demands of farmers' alliances everywhere.

It will be very popular in the West, because it will be collected chiefly in the East; and it will be popular among farmers in all sections, because incomes under $1000 will be exempted, and so scarcely any farmers will pay it. The The protected manufacturers and mine-owners may have a harvest for four years, but it will be not so rich as they have imagined, because consumption will fall off. After that time the men of wealth, who bought the soldier vote by the promise of enormous pensions, which they expected to saddle upon the poor, will have the great pleasure of paying most of the pension bills themselves, through an income tax.

The billionaire seems to be coming; yet he will not come, because the reign of the extortioner is fast drawing to a close.—Thos. G. Sherman, in the January Forum.

THE SONG OF THE BOW.

Keen and low
Doth the arrow sing
The Song of the Bow,
The sound of the string.
The shafts cry shrill:
Let us forth again;
Let us feed our fill
On the flesh of men.
Greedy and fleet
Do we fly from far,
Like the birds that meet
For the feast of war.
Till the air of fight
With our wings be stirred,
As it whirrs from the flight
Of the ravening bird.
Like the flakes that drift
On the snow-wind's breath,
Many and swift,
And winged for death—
Greedy and fleet,
Do we speed from far,
Like the birds that meet
On the bridge of war.
Fleet as ghosts that wait
When the dart strikes true,
Do the swift shafts hail,
Till they drink warm dew.
Keen and low
Do the gray shafts sing
The Song of the Bow,
The sound of the string.
—The World's Desire.

A POOR REVENGE.

"I am going to have two guests at Elmdale the day after to-morrow," remarked Mrs. Radcliffe carelessly one morning to the old husband who adores her and who is fully thirty years her senior.

"Yes, my dear Ophelia," is the amiable answer, while Mr. Radcliffe stirs the coffee his wife has just made for him. "I am so glad to hear you say so. I was on the verge, my dear, of proposing some such social distraction. And pray whom have you hit upon?"

"You have met the lady, I am sure. She is Miss Eloise Bristow, and the gentleman is Mr. John Folsom."

Mr. Radcliffe considers this response for a moment, and then up goes his gray touched eyebrows in unmistakable astonishment.

"My dear, you must be making some mistake. I have heard you say some very hard things about both these people. I remember your being very angry indeed at Eloise Bristow just before your marriage for—"

"Can't you recollect why?" interrupts Mrs. Radcliffe in smiling interrogation. "This was my reason for being angry: Eloise chose to spread abroad certain reports about me when I was poor little Ophelia Shelton, which, whether they were true or false, concealed behind them the desire of preventing our marriage. You were sensible enough not to believe the gossip, and so she was defeated."

"But have you forgiven her, Ophelia? I thought not."

Mrs. Radcliffe's face is very calm and gentle in its expression.

"Behave! my dear Radcliffe, what is the use of cherishing grudges?"

"True, Ophelia. And this Mr. Folsom? You used to dislike him, I well remember. What was it, by the by, that he did to offend?"

"Oh, it was two years before I met you, and during the year that I lived in Portsmouth with Aunt Fannie. Ah, husband mine, what a memory you have!"

"I'm getting old, Ophelia."

"Nonsense! You are as young as I."

"Thanks for the delicious compliment. I want a kiss to you across the breakfast table. Now, tell me what it was that your Portsmouth friend did?"

"He set a very dear friend of mine, a Mrs. Farren, against me by telling her that I was trying to make her husband fall in love with me. He never knew that I had found the truth out before I left Portsmouth, but I had."

"And you are going to have these two people, both of whom I know you hate, up at Elmdale?" murmured Mr. Radcliffe, lifting both hands in mock intensity of amazement. "I never could understand some of your whims, Ophelia; they are quite beyond me! By the by, do these forthcoming guests know each other?"

"No; I doubt if they have ever heard each other's names. John Folsom has always lived in Portsmouth, you know, and Eloise in London. Mr. Folsom is in town now for a month or so, I have lately heard from Mary Waldron, an old Portsmouth friend. He is here for business reasons—trying, Mary writes, to save a little from the wreck of his fortune."

"Ah! he has, then, met with severe losses? I knew he was rich—or, rather, I remember your telling me so."

"He has lost next to everything, they say, by the failure of Rusnit & Stammer."

"And, my dear—ahem! how about this Miss Eloise Bristow? Is she—ahem!—well off?"

"Not at all. A church mouse is in handsome circumstances compared with her."

Five or six days after the above conversation Mrs. Radcliffe's guests arrived in Elmdale.

The guests find every hospitality awaiting them at the charming country seat of Elmdale.

"You have a most exquisite place here," Mr. Folsom tells his hostess, while they are left alone together for a few moments on the night of his arrival.

"Yes? Do you really think so?" is the sweet answer. "I am so glad everything pleases you. And how about your fellow guest, Miss Bristow? Is not she lovely?"

"I never specially admired brunettes," is John Folsom's reply, with a covert glance at the flaxen tresses of Mrs. Radcliffe.

The lady laughs. "Ah, it doesn't much matter. I fancy, whether one be blonde or brunette, if one has immense wealth."

"Immense wealth! And is Miss Bristow—"

"Wealthy? Oh, enormously—one of the greatest heiresses I know of."

"Indeed!" John Folsom responds, beginning suddenly to stroke his dark, silky mustache with considerable energy.

Not long afterward Mrs. Radcliffe is alone with Miss Bristow.

"My dear Eloise," she begins, "you are looking so well! By the by, Mr. Folsom paid you a compliment."

A slight flush tinges Eloise Bristow's cheek.

"Really! What was it?"

"He said you were pretty."

"He is very kind," Eloise answers, a little disappointedly.

She is pretty, and knows it very well, having been told so again and again. Mrs. Radcliffe taps her reprovingly with a costly ivory fan.

"My dear girl, you should not undervalue such a compliment from a millionaire like Mr. Folsom."

Eloise's glossy dark eyebrows suddenly lift themselves.

"A millionaire, Mrs. Radcliffe?"

"Yes. Oh, his wealth is immense! I thought you knew it."

"No, I have not heard."

"Well, that is not strange, when one remembers that you could not have known anything about him."

Five days pass. During this time John Folsom and Eloise Bristow are much together. Each soon discovers in the other a charm which lies wholly apart from that which first brought them together in such close mutual attraction; but it is doubtful whether, except for certain spurious intelligence imparted by Mr. Radcliffe, either of these two young persons would have had sufficient interest in the other's acquaintance to have made the delightful discovery which has now resulted for both.

Yes, Eloise Bristow and Mr. Folsom are thoroughly in love with each other at the end of a week's time. More than once, while thinking of how superbly her revengeful scheme had succeeded, Mrs. Radcliffe's eyes flash with malicious triumph.

At last John Folsom tells himself that he is foolish not to avow his love, since Eloise has given more than a single marked sign by which, if he cannot read the exact truth, he has at least had reason to guess it.

One day while passing the library door he catches the gleam of a pink muslin morning dress.

"It is she," he mentally murmurs, "and provided she is alone, I shall not leave her until I have declared the truth."

Eloise proves to be alone. Mr. Folsom seats himself at her side, and in a few moments has spoken words that bring the rich color glowingly to the girl's cheeks and make her eyes sparkle with brilliant fire. He finished with these humble words:

"I have no right to address you as I am doing; for oh, Eloise! even should you consent to become my wife the world would call me little else than a scheming fortune hunter."

A moment after the last words are uttered Eloise Bristow leaps to her feet.

"A fortune hunter!" she bursts forth indignantly. "I—I do not understand you, Mr. Folsom, unless you mean what you say for cruel satire!"

He rises now.

"Satire? Why, of course I do not. The facts are plain enough. My fortune is now a mere wreck of what it once was, and you are immensely wealthy."

A bitter, bleak sort of laugh leaves Eloise Bristow's lips.

"Did Mrs. Radcliffe tell you that—that I was immensely wealthy?" she asks excitedly.

"Yes."

Eloise sinks back into her seat. Fixing her eyes on John Folsom's face, which has become very pale, like her own, she now continues, "And Mrs. Radcliffe told me the same thing regarding you?" A slight pause. Suddenly she asks, "Have you ever thought, in past times, that Mrs. Radcliffe had any dislike toward you?"

John Folsom's answer then comes promptly enough. "Yes, I used to believe she hated me."

Eloise laughs again, though less bitterly than before.

"And I feel that she hated me all along, now. This is her revenge."

Those four words exercise a strange effect upon the man who hears them. He seats himself at her side. He fixes upon her face a pair of eyes that glow strangely.

"Eloise Bristow," he begins, with solemn, determined voice, "the story of my wealth is what first attracted you toward me; but now that you know me, is there not any feeling in your heart wholly apart from all this?"

Eloise makes no answer. She lowers her eyes and begins to tremble. The man at her side draws nearer.

"Eloise, I love you well enough to die for you—yes, even in these queer, prosaic times of ours. And if this be the case, surely I love you well enough to work for you! What is your answer, darling? Lift up your head and speak it out bravely. When Mrs. Radcliffe next meets us shall she laugh to herself in magnificent delight and silently murmur, 'My revenge is accomplished?' or shall she grind her handsome white teeth in secret rage while looking on our happiness, and be forced to confess that we have conquered her with the very weapons she sought to use against us, turning her revenge into that which may be our lifelong future joy—and such joy, Eloise, as no man can purchase?"

There is a momentary silence, while Eloise sits motionless, with eyes still lowered; and then an instant later she has flung herself upon his breast and hidden her passionately tearful face against his shoulder. He needed no other answer.—Elmira Telegraph.

The Value of Greenbacks.

In 1862, when the greenbacks first went into circulation, their price in gold for the entire year averaged about 88.3 cents on the dollar, their highest being 98.5 and their lowest 75.6. In 1863 they ranged from 62.3 to 79.5, in 1864 from 38.7 to 67.3, and in 1865 from 46.3 to 70.4. The year 1864, which was the darkest period of the war, saw the government currency at its lowest value and gold at its greatest premium. After the war, of course greenbacks increased in value, although with some fluctuations. At the beginning of 1879, when specie payments were formally resumed, greenbacks went to par with gold, and have remained there ever since.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

NO HOPE FOR ENGLISH LITERATURE.

At the debating club last night we all discussed a cure

"For the debilitated state of English literature." "The stuff that's written for folks," I said, "don't move 'em a delight 'em."

Because the folks who write the things don't know enough to write 'em."

"The folks who write, they stuff their heads in some big cyclopedy."

"Which ain't no place for mental food to feed the poor an' needy."

"They're huntin' on an em'ly shelf, like poor ol' Mother Hubbard."

An' go right by the open door of Mother Nature's cupboard."

"They crawl into some lib'ry far from the world's inspection."

Bury themselves in books beyond all hope of res-errection."

They cry out from their tombs, in which no sun nor star can gladden."

An' weep because the liv'n' world don't fin' no time to listen."

Then Elder Pettengell he asked: "Can you suggest a cure

For the debilitated state of English literature?"

"Ain't none; our authors' ignorance is far too dark for lightin'."

While we who know enough to write hain't got no time for writin'!"

—S. W. Foss in Yankee Blade.

A WIFE WORTH HAVING.

The old ship Vincent seemed to be one of those craft that, according to the theory of sailors, are doomed to ill fate. James Marshall, a young man from Newport, R. I., had been her captain for five years, and during that time she had been twice "knocked down," once had she carried away her foremast, and at the time of which we write the old ship was docked at Liverpool undergoing repairs from a serious damage she had received during a heavy gale in St. George's channel, but in all these mishaps the owners had been forced to acknowledge that the young captain was entirely free from blame, while, on the other hand, he had made better "time" in his trips than any other master had ever been able to get out of her.

The last damage which the Vincent received proved to be the occasion of the dawning of a new era in the life of Capt. Marshall, for while waiting in Liverpool for his ship to be repaired he fell in with a blooming New England girl named Emma Ramsey, the eldest daughter of the agent who did the business for the Vincent's owners, and ere long they discovered that between them there existed a peculiar feeling of mutual love. Capt. Marshall popped the delicate question, Emma consulted with her papa, and at length she consented to become Mrs. Marshall. It was a happy day for all parties when the marriage took place, for from the known characters of the bridegroom and his beautiful bride all felt sure that the match would prove one of peace and content.

The Vincent was once more ready for sea. Her cargo was all on board, and shipped for Boston, and Emma had resolved to accompany her husband to the United States. For a number of days the weather was pleasant, and the wind was fair, while Capt. Marshall felt himself supremely happy in the delightful company of his wife. The old sailors shook their heads as they saw the gentle Emma pacing the deck, and they very mysteriously asserted that "such pleasures couldn't always last," and so indeed, it proved; for at the close of a pleasant day, when they were within three or four days' sail of their destined port, things began to look anything but agreeable. Away to the south'rd and east'rd the horizon began to assume a sort of inky blackness, with here and there a ghostlike, livid spot, while on all hands the heavens had changed their ethereal blue for a cast of deeper and more fearful import.

Capt. Marshall felt as he had never felt before on the approach of a storm. For himself, for his ship, he had no thought then. There was one on board who engrossed his every sympathy—for his young wife he felt a degree of intense anxiety that was painful; but he forgot not his duty, and with comparative calmness he set about it. The courses were hauled up and snugly furled, the lighter sails taken in, and the lofty yards and topgallant masts sent on deck, and the three topsails close reefed.

Long before the sun went down the undulating ocean had assumed almost the blackness of night, and not many moments elapsed after the spars had been secured upon the deck ere the storm burst upon the ship. It was a regular southeaster, and those who have encountered one of these storms in the gulf know something of their power. Higher and higher rose the mighty tempest, until at length it was found necessary to take in the topsails and trust to the fore and main storm staysails and a balance reefed spanker. In this way the ship lay till morning, the gale increasing every hour.

Capt. Marshall trusted that when the sun rose on the next day the storm would abate, but in this he was disappointed, for a part of the forenoon he was actually obliged to scud before it. It was not until two staysails had been torn from their bolt ropes that he fully explained his anticipations and the extent of his fears to his wife.

"Emma," said he, "I wish I had not brought you with me."

"Why so?" she asked, as she gazed up into her husband's face with apparent astonishment.

"Why so? Do you not comprehend our danger?"

"But the ship does not leak, does it?" returned Emma with remarkable coolness.

"No."

"Then let us not fear the storm. I was born upon the Atlantic, and I feel that I can yet trust to my native element."

The captain was astonished at this trait in his wife's character, and clasping her in his arms he felt his own soul swelling with a new life.

"Emma," he said, as he gazed more affectionately than ever into her face, "my heaviest fears are passed. For you alone have I feared the most; now I can calmly tell you wherein lies our danger. This storm has driven us far out of our course, and twice have we been scudding before it. I fear that the coast of Maine cannot be far to the leeward, and of that coast I know nothing save what I may gather from my chart. For us to lay to is next to impossible. The rising sea has rendered our stay sails useless, and I have been obliged to set the close reefed maintop sail, but she cannot hold it long."

"My husband," returned Emma, "though you may know nothing of the coast of Maine, yet there are but few spots along her rugged shores that are not as playgrounds to me. My father was for years a surveyor of her islands and harbors, and I was his constant companion. To me her cliffs and inlets present nothing that can alarm me."

Hardly had she ceased speaking when a sharp crack like the report of a pistol sounded from aloft, followed by a tearing and crashing that started the captain to his feet.

"The main topsail has gone!" he exclaimed, and immediately he sprang upon the deck.

Again the ship was put before the gale, and for several moments Capt. Marshall was undecided what to do. While in this quandary he felt a hand laid upon his shoulder, and on turning he beheld his wife. She had a "sou'-wester" upon her head and a peajacket buttoned closely about her.

"What is the matter, James?" she said.

The husband explained his perplexity. A strange look of fearlessness and confidence rested upon that fair woman's face, and looking for a moment at the compass she said:

"We head due northwest. Station a trusty lookout in the foretop, and let the ship stand on!"

Capt. Marshall felt at that moment as though an angel had been sent to pilot him to a haven of rest. Whence arose the feeling he knew not, but instinctively he obeyed. Fearful and loud roared the mighty storm, on dashed the riven ship, but all fearless and composed stood the heroic woman upon the quarter deck, and the hardy seamen as they gazed upon her felt that what daunted not a woman should not daunt them.

"Land, ho!" came from the foretop.

In three minutes more, as the ship rose upon the bosom of a giant sea, the land was made out upon the deck, bearing about two points on the larboard bow. Emma caught sight of it, and seizing a glass at the next swell she discovered a lighthouse upon its summit. Then she turned her glass over the starboard beam, and in a moment she exclaimed:

"There are the Bantam Ledges. The land on the larboard bow is Seguin, and beyond it can see Cape Small Point. James," she continued as she gazed into her husband's face with a look all made up of conscious power, "if you will drop your foretop sail I will take you into the Kennebec!"

For a moment Capt. Marshall hardly credited the evidence of his own senses, but one look into the calm, radiant features of his wife determined him, and in five minutes the foretop sail was sheeted home.

Emma Marshall seized the spanker out haul and sprang upon the wheel-house, and calm as the falling of the summer's dew fell her orders to the man at the wheel. The island Seguin was cleared in safety, the ship bowled fearlessly by the foam dashed rocks, and ere long her bows clef the smoother waters of the noble Kennebec. All danger was past. Though the storm still raged, yet the old Vincent rode at anchor, and the howling tempest could harm her no more. Confidence was restored to the hardy crew.

Emma Marshall descended from her station and sought her cabin. Her rough habiliments were thrown aside, and ere long she reappeared in all the modesty and beauty of her native grace. Capt. Marshall pressed her to his bosom, and at that moment the hardy seamen waved their hats high above their uncovered heads, while a prolonged shout of joy and gratitude went forth from their relieved souls. They had been saved from the terrible coast storm, and from the bottom of their hearts they confessed Emma Marshall was A Wife Worth Having.—Sylvanus Cobb, Jr., in Yankee Blade.

Yankee Dispatch.

One day I made some reference to the clumsy and long-drawn-out way in which the Russian guns were taken up to the front. True, the roads were frightful, the mud being beyond all description, but I ventured to suggest that the progress of that artillery was, in many instances, lamentably slow.

"Wal," said the American, in broad Yankee twang, "I think you're right. They've been at it for months and there's very little promise of increasing speed. How long, now, do you think it would take Britishers to accomplish the same end?"

Actually, I had not the slightest idea, but I was not going to collapse before my Yankee interrogator, so I suggested, as an improvement on the existing state of affairs, that it would take us, say about a fortnight or three weeks.

"By the way," I continued, "how long do you think it would take the Americans to achieve a similar result?"

"Americans? Oh, that's a very different kettle o' fish! Americans?" and with this he took out his watch, and glanced at it several times in meditative silence.

"The Americans? Wal, I should say, as near as I can calculate, somewhere between twenty-five minutes and half an hour," and with this he turned on his heel with a self-satisfied air, leaving me to digest the comparison.—Irving Montague in Camp and Studio.

The Lamb Tree.

Joannes Zahn in 1696 first gave the world information as to this valuable plant. The planta tartarica bowmetz, according to Mr. Zahn, grows in Tartary like any other plant, and when it gets ripe a lamb forms on the top of the flower stalk. After a while the stalk bends over and the lamb grazes till all the grass in the vicinity is cropped off or the stem is severed. Then it dies. Wolves are said to be quite fond of this vegetable mutton.—John Ashton in Curious Creatures in Zoology.

William H. Rice in the Chicago Advance has lately said: Rum in Africa destroys more than all the missionaries can repair, and ettes such facts as these. "Think of boys and girls fourteen and fifteen years of age getting their wages in rum! In 1888 nearly six hundred natives were picked up dead in Kimberly, South Africa, killed by intoxicating drink. Rev.
Horace Walter says he has seen hundreds of native girls lying in a state of intoxication around the wagons of the spirit sellers. Mr. Rice states that "the representative of the United States in the Congo conference, in Berlin in 1885, was one of the majority in favor of agreeing to prohibit (not restrict) the traffic in spirits in the Congo Free State at once. All the thirteen nations represented in Berlin at that time ratified the action there agreed upon except the United States.
The fact is, I believe, our then secretary of State never submitted the agreement to the Senate for ratification, another evidence of how readily our law makers become the most abject slaves to the servants of other masters." Ought not Americans to blush realize the inhumanity, disgrace and barbarism in the attitude taken by this

Quiet, unostentatious, claiming no glory for themselves; asserting nothing in a bravado spirit for the holy cause that they advocate.

But theirs is a sacred theme. In the highways and byways they are forever going about doing good. Nothing of that fanaticism which makes men rebellious; none of that pugnacity which give their enemies cause to complain.
They but advocate that which every intelligent man and woman in this country must sanction; the strengthning of the bulwarks that are raised by their patient hands for the defense of mankind in its weakness; the advocacy of all the nobler principles that elevate the human race.

They are not entering the arena of public discussion for the sole object of securing frivolous and empty triumphs, they see not, neither do they covet the vainglorious applause of a multitude.

They are not arrayed in the gaudy paraphernalia of some selfish band of loud-mouthed theorists, supported by waving banners and the crash of the drum and the blast of the bugle, to herald forth their doctrines in such a way as to give the idler and the vagabond an opportunity to while away an hour of listless observation.

Humbly, prayerfully, unassumingly, they carry on the work to which their pure, true lives are devoted. Trusting in the divine assurance of the meek and lowly Nazarine, they take neither with all their might what their tender hands find to do.—Atlanta Constitution.

The Water Tower at a Fire.

In principle the towers are very simple. There is an iron tube so pivoted over one end of a truck that its top may be raised to a height of sixty feet above the street pavement. The upper end terminates in a nozzle. Connected with the bottom of the pipe is a very large hose. From two to four engines may be coupled to this hose, and their united streams forced up through the pipe and out of the nozzle. The nozzle is controlled by a man on the truck, so that a solid two-and-one-quarter-inch stream may be directed through the top windows of a six-story building with ease and certainty. The newest tower in the department differs from the older ones in several important details. The old tower had to be raised by hand-power, and it was a slow and tiresome job. Moreover, the old tower was made in sections that had to be screwed together by the men. The new tower has a twenty-eight-foot pipe suspended inside of a slender derrick that is twenty-two feet high. The derrick is pivoted over the forward wheels of the truck, and when not in use, with the pipe inside, lies prone upon the truck. At a fire the derrick is erected by means of what may be called engine-power. The piston-rods of two cylinders, which look like steam-engine cylinders, connect with the bottom of the derrick. Instead of steam, however, carbonic-acid gas, which is generated in a retort suspended near the rear axle of the truck, is used. This retort is partly filled with soda and water, and when the time comes for raising the tower a small quantity of vitrol is spilled into this mixture. The gas is generated in sufficient quantity to create a pressure in the cylinders of above one hundred pounds to the square inch, and it is this power, exerted through the cylinders, that raises the derrick by means of a stout mental rope working over pulleys and a hand-winch. The stream from the tower can be swung around in any direction, and thrown up or down through a wide arc.—From "Modern Fire-Apparatus," by John R. SPEARS, in January Scribner.

"It leads them all," is the general reply of the druggist when asked about the merit or sales of Hood's Sarsaparilla.

It is said that the friends of the free coinage measures now before Congress are confident of ultimate success and that in the event of a veto, they look to President Harrison to propose a plan that will be satisfactory. It is understood they will consent to wait a year, or adopt any satisfactory compromise measure now. It will be well if they wait forever.

SALEM, Jan. 1, 1891.

One year ago we issued our last club check; we then decided it was hardly a straightforward way of doing business to charge one class of customers five dollars per dozen for pictures and another class but little more than half as much for the same thing. Instead of adopting the motto of most photographers, viz., "anything is good enough for club work—we have made our club work equal to our best."

We believed it was a good business principle to charge all our customers the same price for the same thing, and by adopting this course and charging for our work what we believed it was worth, and trying to make it worth as much as any, we should gain their respect and good will.

Our business the past year having been much the most satisfactory of any year in Salem, proves that our judgment was not at fault. We are so well satisfied with the course we took that we shall pursue the same during '91 and shall not cater to that class who are satisfied with anything if it is cheap.

The demands upon our time in the way of large portraiture, particularly freehand crayons—have the past year been so great that we have decided to introduce colored pastel portraits, and we had made by Mr. E. L. Hanlon of Boston, than whom there is no more skillful artist in his specialty in America, a complete line of samples of these very beautiful pictures.

Remember that no better work than this can be produced in this country, and the price is but little more than is charged for the ordinary grades. Call and see these pictures if you are interested in fine portraiture. W. G. HUSSEY, 232 Essex st., Salem.

The Sleet Storm in Peabody.

The storm of last Saturday, while doing so much damage in various quarters did not neglect to get in some work in Peabody. The Naumkeag electric cars were run all day and night with great difficulty, and apparently at a great pecuniary loss, and no particular gain to the public convenience. Sunday morning they were obliged to discontinue running them, on account of the countless loose ends depending from telephone and telegraph lines in Salem and Peabody. The city fathers ordered a cessation of all powerful currents, which accounts for the failure of electric light upon the Square Sunday evening.

A journey around the town on Sunday revealed a spectacle of rare grandeur. Trees, fences, wires, and, in fact, all exposed objects were coated with a beautiful casing of ice that sparkled like diamonds, when stray beams of sunlight charred to fall upon them; but there was another phase to the scene. While trees and shrubbery were rendered so pleasing to the eye, the enormous weight thus added entailed a degree of havoc that was both troublesome and expensive. All over town great trees were shorn of their branches, and in many instances, the destruction was almost ruinous to the future beauty and usefulness of the mighty monarchs that once cast cooling shades, to protect the weary traveller from the burning rays of a summer's sun.

A large limb was broken from a tree near the Institute, that brought down ten feet of the front fence. On Harris street a great tree was split in two. Another tree, having three principal limbs, standing on Highland Park, was completely wrecked. Several of the stately elms on Wallis street, were badly broken. On Andover street, and on Lowell street near the family burial ground of the King's, the trees were much damaged. The fine old elm in front of Stephen Blaney's residence was another victim.

Telephone wires were in a perfect snarl, only ten lines could be worked Sunday, and it was five o'clock Monday afternoon before communication with Salem was practicable and up to Friday most Salem lines were useless.

Of all the picturesque sights viewed during the day, that presented by the Hartman wire fence enclosing the Ruggles estate was the rarest. It looked like a paling of fancy glass, and when the sun shone upon it, the effect was still more beautiful.

Annual Meeting.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Essex Electric Street Railway Company was held in Salem on Tuesday, when the following officers were elected: Directors, Frank E. Farnham, Frank W. Stanley and J. Howard Fallon of this town, King Upton, William D. Dennis, Joseph M. Parsons and Wm. F. M. Collins of Salem. King Upton was re-elected President, J. Howard Fallon was re-elected Treasurer and Wm. F. M. Collins was re-elected Clerk.

Some important amendments to the by-laws were adopted, and other routine business was transacted.

Selectmen's Meeting.

The Selectmen held a regular meeting Saturday afternoon. Upon complaint against the practice of running electric cars at high and dangerous speed upon the Naumkeag and Essex railways, the board authorized the chairman to confer with the management of both roads to see if satisfactory rules will be adopted by them.

Upon complaint against the Bushby building, rear of Hardy street, an order was passed requiring the owners to put the building in satisfactory condition within ten days.

An order was passed authorizing the chief of police to prohibit coasting upon all sidewalks and upon such streets or parts of streets as he may deem necessary for public safety.

The Essex Electric.

The managers of the Essex took off the electric cars Saturday afternoon to prevent damage and to avoid the great and useless expense of attempting to run them. Monday, two cars were run coupled, and broke out the track so that no further difficulties were experienced.

Unity Club Concert.

The second of the series of concerts under the auspices of the Unity Club, will be given in the Unitarian Church on Wednesday evening the 28th instant by the St. Cecilia Quartette, Miss Julia Dorgan, soprano; Bessie Smith, contralto; Mr. James J. Herrick, tenor; Thomas E. Clifford, baritone, and Leslie H. Goldthwaite, accompanist. Single tickets, 50 cents. A few more left.

Post 50, G. A. R.

Will hold an entertainment in the institute, Thursday, Jan. 29th, where the original Fiske Jubilee Singers will furnish the attraction.

Misses Pauline and Kate Relihan of Galveston, Texas, are visiting their uncle, Thomas J. Relihan on Tremont street.

James Rodie fell upon the ice recently, hurting the base of his spine badly. He is supported in part by a cane, at present.

Scarlet fever exists in a tenement in the Haskell block on Lynn street and scholars in that vicinity are not allowed to attend school.

The Essex Electric advertise to run on half hour time in the forenoon and fifteen minutes time in the afternoon from last Thursday.

Destin, the popular tailor, 18 Main street, tries to suit people—at low prices—by offering bargains in pants, overcoats, suits, etc.

James R. Wingate has been drawn as juror for the coming term of the Superior Criminal Court at Salem the fourth Monday in January.

The two street railway companies had men on their tower wagons going through the streets beating the ice off the wires with sticks on Monday.

Don't be a clam. A good dinner won't last forever—neither will a suit of clothes. That is why Destin, the tailor, 18 Main street, is always busy.

A great improvement has been noticed in the running of the Essex electric cars since the power was supplied from the Salem electric lighting station.

A new polo club is being organized in town and interest in the once popular sport promises to be revived. The club was practicing at the rink Monday afternoon.

The Ladies' Benevolent Society will meet in the parlors of Unitarian Chapel Jan. 29th, afternoon and evening. Supper will be served at 6:30; all are invited.

The Silver Harp Parlor Club will hold its next concert and prize dance at Town Hall, Wednesday evening, Jan. 28th. Music will be furnished by Hatch's orchestra.

One of our older residents, says he cannot remember a time for sixty years, when the trees have been clad in ice for more than forty-eight hours, as has been the case this week.

Miss Skinner, whose readings have given great satisfaction in Lynn and Salem, gave readings at the concert in the Second Congregational church, South Peabody, last evening.

We are in receipt of a beautiful pen calendar executed by C. A. Burdett, of the Burdett Business College. It is a work of art and a testimony to the skill and enterprise of the proprietors.

A man named Treadwell fell from one of the Naumkeag electric cars last Saturday evening and was somewhat injured, while standing on top of the car, greasing the trolley wire to keep the ice off.

Edward Sweeney was arrested for drunkenness Tuesday evening, by Officer Sweeney, and fought him hard. Officer Mack came to his assistance and the fellow was finally lodged in the station house. Wednesday morning he was fined $10 for second drunk and $15 for assault on Officer Sweeney. He went down for five months.

A western editor who had been obliged to suspend his paper for a long period on account of illness, came out the other day with glowing headlines: "I am perfectly well! Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup did it all."

Three L. & B. R. R. punks filled with a jolly company of shoemakers came over to town for a social time and supper in Temperance Hall Tuesday evening. About one hundred ladies and gentlemen were present.

Miss Mary Motley of English street, started Thursday for Spokane Falls, Washington, to join her brother Eugene and her mother. A pleasant party was tendered her on Tuesday evening, and her friends presented her with a watch and chain.

J. B. Thomas and family left Wednesday evening for Norfolk, Va., where they will board the "Talisman," and spend the next three months cruising in southern waters, visiting the West Indies and prominent places on the southern coast.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Carroll have this sympathy of the community in the death of their 17-months-old son, Willie T., who died Tuesday afternoon, after a long and wasting illness, from marasmus. He was their only son and it was hoped that he would be spared to them.

Reference to the announcement in another column of IVERS & POND, will be of interest to all who desire what is almost as indispensable as a sewing machine, a good piano; at the terms on which they supply one of the noted instruments, and such that all may be accommodated.

The Essex Electric cars were stalled on the Square for half an hour Wednesday forenoon, in consequence of a belt breaking at the Salem Electric Light Station, that communicated power to the dynamo supplying the current. It was a very large belt, and took some time to replace it.

Among the graduates in the three-year course at Harvard this year, according to the university catalogue just issued, are Francis A. Lane, William J. Sheehan and John E. Webster of this town. Mr. Sheehan is a graduate from Boston College and the other two from the Peabody high school.

The number of boxes in the Post Office has decreased 900 since the free delivery system went into effect. Only 300 call and lock boxes are now left, which shows the free delivery system is appreciated. It has facilitated the getting of mail by those whose arrivals are so large as to necessitate the rental of boxes.

Probably no house in this or any other country of the old world has reduced to a system the manufacture and sale of furniture to a more advanced stage of perfection than can be found at Paine's Furniture Co., 48 Canal St., Boston. It is marvellous how such fine goods can be produced at so little cost.

A co-operative, No License meeting was held in the South Church, on Wednesday evening. The plans for the temperance work were discussed to considerable length. No definite action was taken. The meeting was adjourned until Wednesday evening, Jan. 28th, at 7:30 o'clock at the town house.

The entertainment to be given by Union Post 50, G. A. R., at the Institute on Thursday evening Jan. 30th, promises to be largely attended. The original Fiske University Jubilee Singers will appear with a varied program of plantation and other popular songs, which will be rendered in their usual taking manner.

Dr. N. W. Bean of this town, narrowly escaped a serious railroad accident on Tuesday. He was driving on Caller street, as a passenger train passed over the crossing. He just passed in safety before the swiftly moving train, and jumping and capturing the horse's head, averted the impending calamity.

The finance committee appointed at the last annual town meeting to report at the next annual meeting recommendations for the ensuing year, was found to contain three vacancies. John P. Fernald has removed from town and S. S. Littlefield and Col. C. T. Batchelder were ineligible under the new orders and by-laws by reason of their holding town offices. The vacancies were filled by the appointment of W. P. Clark, George F. Sanger and George J. Winchester.

The committee now stands as follows: Nathan A. Bushby, Stephen Mills, W. P. Clark, B. F. Southwick, W. W. Reed, Geo. F. Sanger, Geo. S. Winchester. They will be called together soon to organize, as according to the new town orders they are to report in print at the next annual town meeting. W. P. Clark, we understand, may decline to serve.

MRS. BRACKETT.

ALMOST A MIRACLE!

Read and Remember!

MRS. BRACKETT IS THE WIFE OF THE REV. DAVID BRACKETT, PASTOR OF THE FIRST F. BAPTIST CHURCH, OF THORNDIKE, ME., AND A LADY HIGHLY ESTEEMED BY ALL WHO KNOW HER. SHE SAYS:—

BROOKS, ME., Oct. 22, 1890. Gentl.—When I commenced the use of DANA'S SARSAPARILLA for Rheumatism, I had lost the use of my right arm. THE SHOULDER JOINT WAS VERY TENDER AND VERY STIFF. I could not sew, and could not get my hand to my head. I had a great deal of pain in the chest, especially around my lungs. My skin was yellow and rough, and I was tired all the time.

I have now taken four bottles, and the pain and soreness are gone. Complexion natural, and tired feeling fast leaving. I sleep well nights, and the STIFF JOINT IN THE SHOULDER IS FAST RESUMING ITS NATURAL ELASTICITY. I can sew or do any work as usual.

I am still using the SARSAPARILLA, and expect to entirely recover from the effects of the rheumatism that has troubled me so long. I think DANA'S SARSAPARILLA IS DEATH TO RHEUMATISM.

Yours truly,
MRS. D. BRACKETT.

The only SARSAPARILLA guaranteed to absolutely cure Diseases of the Stomach, Liver, and Kidneys, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Sick Headache, Muscular Rheumatism, Distress, Female Weakness, Enervation, General Debility, Eruptions of the Skin, Pimples, Boils, Tumors, Scrofulous Affections, Cancerous Humors, Salt-Rheum, Syphilis, Catarrh, Ringworm, Carbuncles, Ulcers, and Sores, Malarial Poison, Pain in the Bones.

Fellowship Meeting.

The third in the series of Fellowship Meetings was held in the South Church Tuesday, commencing at 4 o'clock. Mr. Hall, the pastor, gave an address of welcome; Rev. De Witt S. Clark preached an inspiring and helpful sermon, upon "Praying in the Holy Spirit." A light supper was served at 6 o'clock, giving an opportunity for a very social hour. One hundred and twenty-five partook.

The evening session opened with a series of song, led by J. K. Cole, with Mr. Frank Upton at the organ. Rev. Mr. Brodie of Salem, gave the first address of the evening, upon "How are we to receive to ourselves the Spirit of God?" Rev. C. B. Rice of Danvers followed, upon "The evidences of the Spirit's presence." Several members of the different churches represented, took part by prayer and remarks.

The Farmer's Institute will be held next Friday at Town Hall, Georgetown.

Have you examined the Misses' and Children's Samples at Keefe's at 6 Caller St.

Lenard Stanley and Miss Carrie Palmer were united in marriage, on Jan. 22, by Rev. Israel Ainsworth.

Keefe is selling a lot of Misses' and Children's Boots and Shoes at 50 cents, at 6 Caller St.

Edmund Boynton Fuller, the new city solicitor at Haverhill, is a native of Georgetown, where he was born March 3, 1859; he read law with Moody & Bartlett, and was a clerk in the Attorney General's office when Judge Sherman was its head.

Rev. Fayette Nichols has resigned the pastorate of the Maple street M. E. church at Lynn, or more properly speaking, has requested to be transferred to another parish.

During the 304 days the Lynn public library was open last year, the reference books consulted were 18,730, and there were delivered for home use 101,071 volumes. The library now contains 43,294 bound volumes and 3568 pamphlets.

J. Merrill Currier of Lawrence who was thrown from his wagon Jan. 14, died on Monday morning.

Joseph W. Stocker of Beverly has been commissioned as inspector of customs for Beverly and Danvers.

Aldermen T. D. Pelton of Gloucester who mysteriously left home four months ago, returned on Sunday.

EDITORIAL BRIEFS.

THE PLAN adopted by Gen. Miles, of sending an Indian delegation to Washington, to adjust the difficulties between the warring tribes and the Department, is a very crafty one. It not only tends to inspire confidence, but the delegates become hostages, and thus the plan works well as a deterrent measure. The wisdom of his plan has been amply testified by their peaceful conduct since the embassy left for the nation's capital.

THE NEW immigration bill now before Congress, in addition to the provisions of the present law, excluding paupers, convicts, idiots and lunatics; inhibits persons likely to become paupers, polygamists and those convicted of crimes involving moral turpitude, and provides further that any person whose transportation has been paid for by another, or who has been assisted to immigrate, must show affirmatively and satisfactorily that he is not within the proscribed class. The object of the latter provision being, to prevent the immigration of persons who have heretofore been sent hither by the guardians of the poor of foreign countries.

Congress has been tardy, and no doubt inspectors of immigration have been derelict in the execution of such laws as have already been enacted, and it is to be hoped this bill either in its present form, or with such salutary amendments as may be tacked on, may soon become a law, and its enforcement by those having that duty committed to their charge be vigilantly prosecuted.

Doubtless many impositions will fail of detection, but by vigorous, energetic work on the part of the government officials, the importation of the class that fill our penitentiaries and almshouses, will be minimized.

The future of the Republic depends upon the proper regulation of immigration and franchise laws, and the sooner those laws are ameliorated, the better for our national welfare.

This country has always been considered an asylum; but as we gather the spirit of our forefathers, it was to make America an asylum for the oppressed, not for paupers, drones and felons, and if that spirit has been mistaken in the past, it is meet to remember that "it is never too late to do good," and with this motto in mind, hasten to correct the errors that time has brought us to consider as axioms.

AN ARTICLE will probably be put into the town warrant, to see if the town will make the necessary appropriation for purchasing a Road Roller and Rock Crusher. The outlay will probably be about seven thousand dollars, and although this may seem to some, at first thought, a large expenditure, every thinking voter of the town must see upon reflection, that the apparatus will pay for itself in time.

Every year, in some places oftener, Mr. Besse is obliged to dress over the highways with gravel, or a mixture of this with broken rock; but before doing so, owing to the nature of the material used, and for the reason that no means are at his command to roll down his roads properly, he is obliged to scrape off each time, the dressing previously put on. By the use of broken rock, rolled down with a steam roller, a hard compact surface could be made, that would stand for a long time, with an occasional dressing of gravel upon the hollow spots that necessarily appear from time to time on any road, and while those who have occasion to drive through the thoroughfares of the town town would appreciate the improvement, an actual saving of money in the highway department would result.

Scarcely a town the size of Peabody can now be found within the Commonwealth, but has its roads rolled in the manner proposed. Not a word of complaint has ever been heard in any of these municipalities, after the equipment has been fairly installed and an opportunity given the citizens to see the work done by the ponderous machine. Nobody wants to go back to the old time country road, who has ever experienced the pleasure of riding over a road made by the steam roller. No pedestrian will consent to wallow through the mire and slough holes incident to hand made roads, who has ever traveled the hard rolled streets of modern times. There is another consideration that should not be overlooked. The gravel pits are becoming exhausted, and it will be necessary to haul gravel from greater distances as time goes on; but on the other hand, there is an abundance of rock, which, without a stone crusher, is almost useless, could be utilized to save the gravel and improve the structure of the roads, if it could be properly broken.

We hope the subject will be thoroughly ventilated at the annual meeting, that the voters may learn all the advantages, so that when the vote is taken, they may be enabled to vote understandingly.

THE ELECTIONS BILL.

THE BOSTON Herald in a stinging editorial Wednesday morning deprecates the retrograde step it fancies will be taken by Vice-President Morton in ruling in favor of the "previous question" upon the Elections Bill, in consequence of an undue pressure brought to bear by Senator Hoar. It thinks, or affects to think, the action of the Vice-President, in casting the deciding vote when the Senate was "tied" upon the motion to resume the Elections or "Force Bill," as it is called by its enemies, is an evidence of weakening of backbone, and talks loudly about "cloture," (it's English, you know), or gag law, as we call it in America.

It seems to us that suggestions of gag law, are hardly pertinent in the present juncture; for it will be remembered, that it was by chicanery, and political trickery, that the Elections Bill was set off, on the side track, to make room for the rapid transit of the greatest political fraud that has been before Congress for many years. Vice-President Morton had called a member to the chair while debate was in progress, when he had every reason to believe nothing was to be done by the temporary presiding officer but listen to the debate, but no sooner had the Vice-President left the senate chamber than a motion to give the Silver Bill precedence was interjected despite the protestations of senator Hoar. The motion was entertained and all efforts of the few friends of the Elections Bill to save it proved fruitless against the surging tide of Silver men, both republicans and democrats.

There are times when extreme measures must of necessity, be resorted to, and it seems to us that no emergency could afford a more complete justification for adopting strong measures, than the present imperilled situation.

The political corruptions and intimidations of the Southern democracy, must be checked by some means, and no better way has been suggested, than the provisions of the Elections Bill. The Republican party has the burden of suppressing the Southern election frauds. They must not fail to accomplish the work before them and if Vice-President Morton takes that "step" from his ruling last Friday, that "debate is not in order on an appeal from the decision of the chair," to ruling the "previous question," he will, instead of "sinking his convictions and lending himself to Hoar's disreputable game," as the Herald puts, immortalize himself and place his name in the fore front of the champions of liberty, freedom and equality.

PROBATE COURT.

Wills of the following persons were proved on Monday: Nathaniel Burnham of Essex; Alfred Clark, Salem; Catherine Chapman, Salem; David Lowd, Peabody; Mary Morse, Salem; Samuel G. Rea, Salem; Terrence J. Smith, Salem; Mary G. Stone, Newburyport; Daniel Flagg, Lynn; A. Sumner Howard, Danvers.

There were 13 letters of administration granted.

Inventories of the following estates were filed: Eliza G. Winchester of Beverly, $254,697.67, of which $61,010 was real estate, and of this, two houses, Nos. 136 and 138 Beacon street, Boston, valued at $30,000 each, and $12,000 in jewelry, plate, furniture, pictures and statuary; Dudley L. Pickman, of Salem, $286,956.93 in trust for Catherine Fay and others, all of which was personal property and included among the larger items 150 shares of Shawmut National Bank stock at 130, $19,500, 600 shares of Lake Superior Iron Co. at 67, $42,200, 250 shares Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. R., $26,500, and 312 shares of the Champion Iron Co., $24,966; James Barr of Salem, $6117; Eunice Barr, Salem, $6075; Mary Morton, Salem, $1820.92; Thomas Sheehan, Georgetown, $4149.08; Mary A. Bisbee, Newburyport, $23,591.87; Sarah W. Creese, Lynn, $2375; Cyrus Cheever, Saugus, $58,208.83.

ESSEX COUNTY.

The Salem Gazette raises the query, whether under the decision of the Supreme Court in the Peabody case, the town of Danvers will not be obliged to ask for authority from the Legislature, to legalize the continuance of its plants.

A petition was presented for that purpose two years ago, and was the only one of a large number that received a favorable vote in the lower branch. The petition, it will be remembered, was denied by the Senate, and it looks as if the question of the Gazette was very pertinent.

Hog cholera has made its appearance among the swine of F. W. Lyford and John Swinerton, of Danvers.

A man went into the Salem Police Station last Monday evening and demanded that four coffins be sent to his home. On being asked why he wanted them he replied that he had killed his wife and two children with a bread knife and that he would himself be dead before morning. The officers placed him in a padded cell and on his person was found a bank book issued by the Boston Five Cents Savings Bank, and bearing the name "Abram Rubens, 35 Arlington street, Chelsea." He had a basket filled with food, and was apparently crazy. He was evidently about 35 years of age.

Capt. C. W. Osgood's resignation, which was forwarded by Lieut. Col. J. Frank Dalton to headquarters marked "Disapproved," has been returned indorsed "Not accepted." Capt. Osgood will therefore remain with the Salem Cadets.

Joseph W. Stocker of Beverly received a commission Saturday from the Secretary of the Treasury appointing him Inspector of Customs for Beverly and Danversport.

Rev. Dr. Daniel Dorchester, Superintendent of Indian schools, who has been in Boston of late, has been suddenly ordered to the West. He has left for the scene of the Indian disturbances.

Nathaniel Holder celebrated his 80th birthday, Monday evening, Jan. 19, at his residence, corner of Tapley street and Pine Grove avenue, Lynn. He is hale and hearty, and is seen every day upon the street, with a firm step and a kind word and pleasant smile to those he meets. He was at this time presented with a very handsome crayon of himself by his children. There were present 40 children and grandchildren, 11 being absent. Three children and 11 grandchildren have died.

There are 450 men idle in Lynn in consequence of the morocco dressers strike. The situation is practically unchanged. A mass meeting was held last Monday, when a vote was taken upon the expediency of declaring the strike off, but the proposition was voted down by 375 to 7.

A session of the insolvency court was held in Salem, Tuesday before Judge Harmon.

A first meeting was held in the case of Rich & Gibson of Swampscott, and James Broden of Boston was appointed assignee.

A second meeting of creditors was held in the case of Edward W. Archibald, shoe manufacturer, of this city, and the claims of about 100 operatives were proved. Archibald formerly occupied the Salem Building association's factory on Canal street.

Final composition meetings were held in the cases of Orrin, E. Welch, John P. Peabody of Salem, and Wm. S. Drew.

C. H. Goulding

Has been established a long time in town, and acquired a wide-spread reputation for honesty and fair dealing. Everybody who has ever traded at his store, knows that he keeps a large and well assorted line of Furniture, which he sells at prices as low as any metropolitan dealer. He is doing a good business in upholstering, shade and carpet fitting. If there is anyone in town who has never visited his establishment, we advise him to call without further delay.

"It is not madness that I utter, bring me to the test." I have said and I am prepared to stick to it, that this suffering world need no longer sigh with pain, since it is so well known that Salvation Oil, kills it, without any trouble.

The Oyster Industry.

There are thirty oyster barges which supply the New York market. The owners of these barges employ from twenty to fifty men apiece, and each man is supposed to open from 5000 to 10,000 oysters a day, being paid at the rate of $1 a thousand. There are accordingly several millions of oysters opened daily in the markets, while cart and wagon loads of oysters in the shell are also sold for the city and country trade.

There are on an average, between fifty and seventy boats a day that come to the Christopher Street and West Washington markets. Each boat brings from 200 to 600 baskets, each basket averaging 300 oysters. Most of the oysters sold in the market are sold by count. The oyster openers, ranging in long lines, are seated on wooden benches that extend the entire length of the barges. Before them are piled up the oysters to be opened, in heaps of 500. These they drop into pails capable of containing seven gallons of oysters and two of ice. As soon as a pail is filled it is closed, sealed, and ready to be packed off West.

Until within a few years ago Chicago was the greatest Western market for the oyster. To-day Kansas City and St. Louis are the largest consumers. Oysters are now also sent to San Francisco, where it is said they arrive in fine condition.

When a reporter expressed his astonishment at the quantity of oysters used, a dealer said: Why, bless your soul, we would dispose of three times that number. You must not forget that there is an immense amount of oysters canned and that these are sent to all parts of the world. Why in China, India, Australia, let alone in all the European countries, they have American oysters.

Is there any profit in oysters? Why, certainly, and a big one. I sell these oysters—the best—at 90 cents a basket, and all are counted. According to the size of the oyster is the number, but take them all around they cost $4.50 a thousand, or two for a cent. These oysters are sold in restaurants and hotels, averaging less than a dozen a plate, at from 25 to 30 cents a plate. Now make your calculation on one basket alone, and you will see there is money in the oyster.

Earth Quakes.

A returned traveler said to a St. Louis reporter the other day: A peculiar thing about living in Central America is the ease with which you become accustomed to the earth-quakes. They do not come without giving due notice. You are sitting in a piazza of a hot afternoon chatting with your friends, when suddenly the sky seems to grow hazy, the crows stop cawing and the buzzards quit fighting in the street. There is a general rush, and, though you may not know what is the matter, you cannot help feeling uneasy. The old natives say 'we are going to have a little shake,' and then the house begins to rock, the tumbler fall off the table, and you feel deadly sick at the stomach, and the thing is all over; the sky clears, the crows begin their noisy screams and the buzzards resume their quarrel over the street offal. There is something expressively terrifying, however, about the trembling of the earth; the slightest oscillation will awaken the population of the whole town, and arouse a drunkard out of the deepest stupor, but unless some considerable damage is done, everybody goes to sleep again as a matter of course.—Atlanta Constitution.

P. W. Annis

Calls your attention to-day, by an advertisement in another column, that he has separated from his former partner, and now instead of Curry & Annis at the Railway Granite and Marble works—the yard off Central street, near the B. & M. freight yard; he will serve the public with that degree of satisfaction as to work and price, that has heretofore been given by the old firm. It is a great convenience to have a granite and marble worker in town and we should see to it, that he receives a good share of patronage.

JANUARY SALE.

The few remaining days at our Reduction Sale will be full of interest to all who care to get good goods at small cost. There is a general break in lots and prices in every department, yet the variety is still large. Clearing out our Stock Room brings to light immense numbers of little lots in nearly all lines.

A great impetus was given to sales yesterday by the new mark downs in Dress Goods; taking a third and a half off such fabrics is enough in itself to make a big stir even though the rise in the tariff is not considered. But it must be considered by everybody who goes to buy. It bears heavily and directly upon these Woolen Dress Stuffs which cannot be bought in a regular way except at a large advance. But we are not considering any advances. Throughout our store, something in every department is being offered at a great reduction upon old prices—reductions which everybody can recognize, and which numbers are taking advantage of to their profit.

The demand for Ladies' and Children's Cloaks has exceeded anything we have ever known.

What is being said about our Linen Housekeeping Goods and Hamburgs would be our best advertisement, but our natural modesty makes us hesitate to repeat the praise. At the lowest calculation, every buyer of these goods saves one dollar out of four and buyers increase daily. The demand for those strictly All Wool Blankets, at $5.00 per pair increases also. These are pretty good samples of what we are doing in all grades.

In the Corset Department, there isn't the slightest abatement. We've been busy there since the commencement of this sale, and our Cotton Underwear prices are subjects of comment the city over.

A CITY LUXURY.

Just as the city looks to the country for most of the luxuries used on its tables, so the country must turn to the city for those conveniences which are justly termed luxuries for the hard-working housewife. City housekeepers have learned to realize that to save time is to lengthen life.

SAPOLIO!

is one of the best known city luxuries and each time a cake is used an hour is saved. On floors, tables and painted work it acts like a charm. For scouring pots, pans and metals it has no equal. IF YOUR STOREKEEPER DOES NOT KEEP IT YOU SHOULD INSIST UPON HIS DOING SO, as it always gives satisfaction and its immense sale all over the United States makes it an almost necessary article to any well-supplied store. Everything shines after its use, and even the children delight in using it in their attempts to help around the house.

LITERARY NOTES.

As a sort of supplementary chapter to his "Looking Backward," Mr. Edward Bellamy has written an article for the February issue of the The Ladies Home Journal, under the title of "Women in the year 2000," in which the famous Nationalist will sketch woman, marriage, courtship etc., as they will be regarded in the year 2000.

The most beautiful frontispiece ever produced in an American magazine, appears in the January number of Cosmopolitan. It is a reproduction in colors of Francois Flameng's famous picture "The Cake Seller," and can scarcely be distinguished from the imported photograph which is exhibited in the dealers windows, at a price of $7 a copy. It is one of the most charming of subjects, and is well worth framing and preservation. The Cosmopolitan has become noted of late for its frontispiece and this very much excels its previous efforts.

The February number of "The Season" just received, is full of interesting matter. The newest and strictly original designs commend themselves to all lovers of the beautiful, both in dress and artwork. Plate 864 gives two handsome costumes for the promenade and evening; 865 has seasonable outdoor costumes; one colored plate gives four fancy costumes, original, beautiful and of unique and stylish effect. Throughout the entire book will be found numbers of handsome cloaks, wraps, costumes of promenade, for evening and home wear; complete outfits for children, the latest designs in millinery, lace work, embroidery, moseiac and Berlin embroidery, fancy wood carving, canvas and wool work, knitting and painting, with a large number of new and pretty novelties in art work of every description. This journal excels all others in the styles, quantity and quality of its illustrations. No lady should be without it who desires to dress well and to beautify her home. Yearly subscription, $3.50. Single copies, 30 cents. International News Company, 83 & 85 Duane Street, New York.

Mary E. Wilkins whose stories on account of their truthful delineation of human nature, are enjoyed by people of every degree of cultivation, will contribute to the next number of Harper's Bazar, another one of her characteristic New England sketches, entitled "The Proud Lucinda."

Harper's Young People for January 29, contains the opening chapters of a charming historical romance entitled "Men of Iron," written and illustrated by Howard Pyle. The story is full of romantic adventure, and the details of the manners and costumes of the time have been carefully studied, so that the story and illustrations present as true a picture of that early period as modern research can discover. The same number of the Young People contains the concluding chapters of "Campmates," Kirk Ma roe's interesting and popular story of the plains.

Frederic Remington, the artist, has just returned from the scenes of the Indian disturbances in the West, bringing with him a number of sketches illustrating recent incidents and events on the frontier. Several of these sketches, including a view of the battle-ground at Wounded Knee Creek and the beginning of the fight, together with a descriptive article by Mr. Remington, will be published in Harper's Weekly issued January 21st.

We are in receipt of the Visitor published by O. W. H. Upham, of Salem. Its pages are always interesting, containing much valuable reading matter, as well as some beautiful colored art productions. It can be ordered direct, or bought at Holly & Co's local news store.

Demorests' comes to us this month laden with a great variety of hints for those who wish to dress stylishly or well. The patterns and colored fashion plates are as numerous and interesting as usual.

The second number of the LEATHER MANUFACTURER, a monthly devoted to the interests of leather manufacturing in its various branches, has been received, and like the first, yet improving upon it it is laden with stories of timely and valuable information. We would recommend our readers, those who are engaged in any department of tanning or carrying to examine a copy. It is published by the Analyst Publishing Co., 19 Park St., New York, at $3.00 per annum.

The latest and one of the best novelties for 1891 is an elegant Carnation, growing on long stems, a free bloomer with large flowers, of an exquisite shade of pink, something entirely different from anything in Carnations. This flower is destined to become a great favorite among the florists, as the ladies prize it very highly for corsage bouquets and decorative purposes generally. The endorsement of the old firm of James Vick, Rochester, N. Y., who introduce this plant, is enough to assure the public that it is all they claim for it. The price is only 50 cents each, three for $1.25, six for $2.25, doz. $4.00; but a better way would be to send 10 cents for Vick's Floral Guide and the 10 cents can be deducted from the first order forwarded for seeds.

If you have not read BLACK BEAUTY yet, do so by all means. This interesting volume is unique in its inception, brilliant in execution, and teaches lessons of humanity to the brute creation. The publishers are having it translated into five foreign tongues, not for profit; but to aid their general work of prevention of cruelty to animals.

Naumkeag Clothing Co.

The largest Clothing House in Essex County. This firm opened their Salem Branch Store in the summer of 1878, and since that time, they have been characterized by enterprise and fair dealing. Although their store as originally arranged, was by no means small, it has steadily expanded until to-day it ranks as a vast emporium. The recent fire at their establishment, has been an inconvenience and temporary impediment to their large business; but like Phoenix, they rise triumphantly, and the public may look for still further progress hereafter. We hardly need mention their numbers, 177-179-181 and 183 Essex street, Salem.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL.

When Jean Coquelin, the only son of the great actor, made his recent debut on the classic boards of the Comedie Francaise the father is said to have been much more overcome by stage fright than the son was. The house was crowded, and the young actor was enthusiastically applauded.

To-day closes the engagement of the "Crystal Slipper."

Monday the Haakon Volter and Martineti Company will occupy the stage of the Boston Theatre.

At the Grand Opera House next week, Charles T. Ellis in the great success, "Casper, the Yodler" will be the attraction.

At the Globe Theatre, on Monday, "Dorothy" will be presented.

The Hollis street Theatre will be closed Monday evening owing to delays incident to the reproduction of scenery and properties burned at the Fifth Avenue Theatre. On Tuesday, Fannie Davenport, supported by Melbourne MacDowell will present Sardon's "Cleopatra." Ticket sale commenced briskly Thursday morning. Matinees will be given on Saturdays only. The engagement is limited.

Next week will be the last of the engagement of the Palmer's Company, at the Tremont Theatre. Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, "Capt. Swift" will hold sway, and the rest of the week will be given to "Jim the Penman."

"Ship Ahoy" is having a good run at the Park Theatre. It is full of mirth and well worth seeing.

BOSTON MUSEUM.

One may always be sure of an equivalent for his money at this time honored and almost favorite place of amusement. Though he be uninformed of the programme of the day he may enter this cosy play house, and confidently expect artistic and satisfactory work by this unequalled Stock Company. The play now running at the Museum fully sustains its high average. The Solicitor has received general and merited praise for its laughable situation and novel and varied action, but to our mind the delicious little Skit, Betty's Finish, that opens the bill is the more highly finished performance; and acting of Miss Miriam O'Leary as Betty, a dramatic portrayal not easily equalled. The matinees afford excellent opportunities to Peabody patrons of this good old resort.

An Aged Vice-President.

Notwithstanding his advanced age, Hannibal Hamlin, the oldest Vice President living, still walks the street with a swinging gate, that betokens a remarkable vigor. His usual attire is the old black swallow tail coat of ante-bellum days, and the "stock and dicky" of the olden time, which has been his constant apparel since the time when he held the second place in the Government of the Nation. His venerable head is ever adorned, when on the street, with a silk hat as in days of yore. The sight of his sturdy figure is like an emblazoned page of history, that bridges the broad gulf that separates the thrilling incidents of the Nations past from these "piping times of peace."

I am not in it, remarked the poor woman as she gazed fondly on a seal skin sack in the shop window.

George L. Duval, who has recently returned to New York from Chili, says that feeling ran very high in that republic between the adherents of the executive and legislative branches of the government. The cause of the difficulty is undoubtedly the urgent desire of the people for a change in the election laws which will give them greater freedom in the exercise of the franchise. This the president opposed, not from any unworthy purpose, Mr. Duval says, but because he wished to adhere to precedents established by his predecessors. An outbreak was predicted, but, relying on the sound sense of the Chilean people and their well-known patriotism, Mr. Duval says he always felt that an amicable adjustment would prevent any revolution. He looked upon the security to life and property in Chili as good as with us.

The Chilean iron-clad Almirante Cochran has seized the cargo left by the steamer Santiago at Iquique, Peru. The Cochran's commander has given notice that he will blockade Iquique on the 20th. The Peruvian government has received a telegram from its consul at Iquique stating that the various consuls are going to protest against the threatened blockade. Private cable dispatches received at London from Iquique contain the information that the blockade extends to Coquimbo. The Chilean war ships Almirante Cochran and Magell are engaged in the work of operating the blockade. All the telegraph wires to the north of Valparaiso have been cut.—Springfield Republican.

The early residents of California were largely runaway sailors. Many if not most would change their names. For instance, Gilroy's ranch where the town of Gilroy is now located, was owned by an old resident under the assumed appellation of Gilroy. Of course, vessels touching upon this coast were liable, as they were everywhere, to lose men by desertion, especially if they were maltreated. Such things have been so common that it is not difficult to believe that those who left their vessels in early days on this then distant coast had cause for so doing. To be a runaway sailor was no stain upon a man's character. It was no uncommon thing, after my arrival here for sailors to be skulking and hiding about from ranch to ranch till the vessel they had left should leave the coast.

Californians would catch and return sailors to get the reward which, I believe, captains of vessels invariably offered. After the vessels had sailed and there was no chance of the reward the native Californians gave the fugitives no further trouble.—Century.

THE SECRET OF SUCCESS.

William T. Lee, druggist, believes that the secret of success is perseverance. Therefore he persists in keeping the finest line of perfumeries, toilet articles, cosmetics, drugs and chemicals on the market. He especially invites all persons who have palpitation, short breath, weak or hungry spells, pain in side or shoulder, oppression, night mare, dry cough, smothering, dropsy or heart disease to try Dr. Miles' unequalled New Heart Cure, before it is too late. It has the largest sale of any similar remedy. Fine book of testimonials free. Dr. Miles' Restorative Nerve is unsurpassed for sleeplessness, headache, fits, etc., and it contains no opiate.

M. Vielle, prominent as an inventor of smokeless powder, by means of a delicate process of registration finds that the pressures at the moment of burning the powder do not shed themselves uniformly over the gun throughout its length, but that a wave of pressure starts at the seat of the powder and transmits itself.

George Bancroft was born at Worcester, Mass., October 3, 1800. He entered Harvard in 1813 and graduated in 1817. Almost immediately he went abroad, where he remained for five years, studying at Gottingen and Berlin, and travelling through Germany, Italy, Switzerland and Great Britain, when he made the personal acquaintance of many of the leading European scholars. He received the degree of Ph. D. at Gottingen in 1820, and returning to America in 1822, was for a year Greek tutor in Harvard. In 1823, in conjunction with Dr. Joseph Cogswell, he founded the Round Hill School at Northampton, Massachusetts. The same year he published a volume of poems, and in 1824, a translation of Heeren's "Politics of Ancient Greece." He was at this time meditating and collecting materials for his "History of the United States," the first volume of which appeared in 1834. In 1835 he removed to Springfield, Mass., where he resided for three years and completed the second volume of his history. In 1838 he was appointed Collector of the Port of Boston, a position which he held until 1841, being also a frequent speaker at political meetings and still keeping up his historical labors. The third volume of his history appeared in 1840. In 1844 he was democratic candidate for Governor of Massachusetts but was not elected. In 1845 he entered Polk's Cabinet as Secretary of the Navy and also served for a month as Acting Secretary of War. In 1846 he was sent as Minister to Great Britain, where he successfully urged upon the British Government the adoption of more liberal navigation laws and was especially earnest in vindicating the rights of persons naturalized as citizens of the United States. During his residence in Europe he made use of every opportunity to perfect his collection of documents relating to American history. He returned to the United States in 1849, took up his residence in New York, and set about the preparation of the remainder of his history. The fourth and fifth volumes were published in 1852; the sixth appeared in 1854; the seventh 1858; the eighth in 1860; the ninth in 1866; and the tenth and last 1874. This brings the narrative to the close of the Revolutionary war and completes the body of the work. He has been, however, engaged upon supplementary volumes, two of which issued in 1882 under the "History of the Foundation of the Constitution of the United States." After his return from Europe he for many years devoted himself wholly to literary labor. In February 1866, he delivered before Congress an address in memory of Abraham Lincoln. In May, 1876, he was appointed Minister to Prussia; in 1883 he was accredited to the North German Confederation; and in 1871 to the German Empire. He was recalled from his mission at his own request, in 1874. During his mission to Germany several important treaties were concluded with the various German States, relating especially to the naturalization of Germans in America. He was a member of numerous learned societies both at home and abroad. In 1855 he published a volume of "Miscellaneous," comprising a portion of the articles which he had contributed to the North American Review. He resided at Washington, D. C. passing his summers at Newport, R. I., the great American historian who died at his home in Washington last Saturday.

Served Him Right.

Twenty years ago William Doësworth, a wealthy citizen of Ohio, married a Hamilton, O. heiress and arranged to spend the honeymoon in the east. Instead of taking a train the bumpy groom arranged for relays of coaches between Hamilton and the City of Brotherly Love. The affair was talked of all over the country, and reports of the novel trip published in the newspapers of this country and Europe. The groom created a furor by spending money lavishly, and lighting $1 cigars with $5 and $10 bills.

The other morning the happy groom of twenty years ago was a prisoner on the yellow bench in the Police Court on a charge of disorderly conduct. He was fined $5 and costs, and for want of one of the bills with which he formerly lighted his cigars he was sent to the workhouse.—Cincinnati Cor. Chattanooga Times.

NEWSPAPER ANNUAL.

Contains a carefully prepared list of all Newspapers and Periodicals in the United States and Canada, arranged by States and Towns in alphabetical order. Under this head is given the name of the paper, the issue, general characteristics, year of establishment, size, subscription price and circulation, also the names of Editors and Publishers, and the street address (when known) in all cities having a population of 50,000 and upward.

It contains a list of all Newspapers inserting Advertisements, arranged in States by Counties, with the distinctive features and circulation of each paper.

Also complete lists of all the Religious, or Agricultural Periodicals, of Medical, Commercial, Scientific Educational, or any other of the class publications, as well as of all Publications printed in foreign languages, and a vast amount of general and statistical information of practical value to almost every business man.

It gives a description of every place where a Newspaper is published, compares location, distance from some prominent point, railroad, water, and stage communication, telegraph, express and banking facilities, advantage of location nature of the surrounding district, and its productions, agricultural, or otherwise, leading manufacturers, educational, and other public institutions.

Also a carefully-prepared description of every County in the United States and Canada, setting forth its location, area adjoining navigable streams, the character of its surface, the nature of its soil, whether an agricultural, manufacturing, or mining country, and if agricultural its County-seat and population. A much more elaborate descriptive heading, is appended to each State, Territory, and Canadian Province.

These headings are subject to constant and careful revisions. The growth and development of the various sections is noted and embodied in them from year to year, thus forming a valuable compendium of the physical features and the agricultural and manufacturing resources of the country.

It gives the Population of every State, Territory, County and County-seat, of all the large Cities and Towns, and of almost every place in which a Newspaper is published, a very large proportion of the population is from the United States Census of 1890.

It also gives the number of votes polled in each State, Territory and County by the Republican, Democratic, Greenback and Prohibition parties at the Presidential Election of 1888.

It enumerates the various Press and Editorial Associations throughout the United States and Canada together with lists of their Officers.

Among its exhaustive and interesting tables are those showing the Cities, Towns, and Villages of the United States having a population of five thousand and upward, arranged in alphabetical order; with the population according to the Census of 1890, where known, with parallel columns giving the population in 1880, how many Counties there are in each State; in how many towns of each State papers exist, and how many of these towns are County-seats, and how many Newspapers there are altogether in the country at large, or in any of its great sections, or in any State, Territory, or Canadian Province, how many there are of each issue, with a comparative statement of the increase in 1890 over 1889.

Treasury Surplus.

Secretary Windom is authority for the statement that the growing treasury surplus cannot now be used in the purchase of 4 per cent. bonds for the reason that it will be needed to meet pension payments due next month aggregating $25,000,000. The available cash surplus is now $18,000,000, but by continued excess of receipts over expenditures will probably reach the required amount by the time indicated. Secretary Windom is of the opinion that the business of the country would be improved by making these pension payments monthly instead of quarterly, as at present, and he has made a recommendation to that effect to the proper congressional committees. If this is done, he says, it will do away with the present necessity of keeping a large sum of money in the treasury vaults for three months, when it might just as well be in the hands of the people entitled to it.

NOTICE OF BOARD OF HEALTH.

Sec. 10 Chapter 252. Laws of 1887.

With a board of cattle commissioners, appointed in accordance with the provisions of chapter three hundred and seventy-eight of the acts of the year eighteen hundred and eighty-five, is in existence, and makes and publishes any regulations concerning the inspection, cure or treatment of animals infected with, or which have been exposed to any contagious disease, such regulations shall supersede those made by boards of health, and boards of health shall carry out and enforce all orders and directions of said commissioners to them directed.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

STATE CATTLE COMMISSION.

SECRETARY'S OFFICE.

DEPT-AM, MASS., Jan. 3, 1891.

The Cattle Commissioners of Massachusetts, in accordance with the requirements of the Public Statutes, hereby publish the following rules a regulation for the suppression of contagious diseases among domestic animals.

RULE 1. Whoever has knowledge of, or has good reason to suspect the existence of a contagious disease among any species of domestic animals in this State, whether such knowledge or suspicion is obtained by personal examination or otherwise, shall forthwith give notice thereof to the board of health of the city or of the town where such diseased or suspected animals are kept.

RULE 2. The board of health of a city or a town having received notice of a suspected case of contagious disease among any of the domestic animals in their city or town, shall forthwith make an examination thereof personally or by a competent person appointed by them for that purpose, and, if satisfied there are good reasons for believing that contagion is present shall cause the suspected animals to be securely held by the owners or other reliable persons and shall immediately inform the Cattle Commissioners.

RULE 3. An order, written or verbal, to securely hold such suspected animals in isolation shall be binding on the owner of the city or town, or a single member of the Cattle Commission.

RULE 4. Persons having the care or custody of suspected animals, whether such animals be held on property or otherwise, and having received notice for their isolation, shall neither sell, swap, trade, give or in any way dispose of such animals, nor drive or work or move or allow them to be moved away from the place of isolation, nor allow other animals not already exposed to come in contact with them, until permitted so to do by the Cattle Commissioners.

RULE 5. In cases of suspected contagious pleuro pneumonia among cattle, or swine, plague or cholera among swine, the entire herd or flock shall be secured under strict isolation with other animals of the same species that have not been exposed to the suspected animals, and owners of other herds which may have been exposed and afterwards moved should be immediately notified and warned of the existing danger.

GLANDERS.

RULE 6. Horses or mules suspected of having the disease known as glanders orarcy may only remain in the custody of their owners, and in the stalls or on the premises previously occupied by them, when the judgment of boards of health such owners can be relied on with confidence, and when such stalls or premises are deemed suitable places for holding such diseased or suspected animals till taken in charge by the Cattle Commissioners.

RULE 7. In accordance with the spirit and intent of the foregoing, in all cases of suspected infectious diseases among cattle coming to your notice, you will be careful to instruct owners to cause the separation of their suspected animals from the remainder of the herd, and cause their isolation, and allow the unsuspected animals to be managed in all respects as if no disease had been present.

PENALTIES.

The statutes provide that any person who fails to comply with a regulation made or order given by the Cattle Commissioners, or boards of health in the discharge of their duty is punishable by a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars or by imprisonment not exceeding one year; and any city or town whose officers refuse or neglect to carry into effect the provisions of chapter 252 of the Acts of 1887 relating to the publication of regulations, the isolation of suspected animals, and the carrying into effect all proper orders from the Cattle Commissioners, shall forfeit a sum not exceeding five hundred dollars for each day's neglect.

Much interest has been manifested in fraternal society circles as to what the official figures for the past year as to the condition of the Ancient Order of United Workmen in this State would show, on account of the unusually heavy death rate, 27 assessments having been levied in 1890 as compared with 21 in 1889.

An important meeting has just been concluded at the office of the Grand Recorder at Dunkirk, N. Y. The books were examined and balances struck, the result being considered especially satisfactory. During the year, 2,866 new members joined, as compared with 3,662 in 1889. The amount collected for the beneficiary fund in 1890 was $838,501, as compared with $654,446 collected in 1889. This makes a total of nearly $5,000,000 paid out since the establishment of this Grand Lodge jurisdiction in 1877.

The proper documents for the presentation of a claim for relief from the Supreme Lodge were prepared and will be presented at the meeting of the Supreme Lodge Relief Board, which will be held in Detroit, tomorrow. The amount of the claim will be in the neighborhood of $132,000. It is understood that Pennsylvania will also make application for relief.

It has been demonstrated by intelligent experts, headed by the United States Gas Commissioners, that the vital principle in the department of our domestic economy is to secure the maximum of light at the minimum of cost. The greatest invention that has been devised in this line is the Wells-Bach Incandescent Gas Light, the principles of which are as follows: The heat is applied to an incombustible mouth made of the oxides of rare earth.

The gas when used is made non-luminous by being mixed with about 50 per cent. of air by a Bunsen burner, which gives a pale, almost invisible bluish flame with no light, which cannot be made to smoke or form lamp black under any conditions which it may be placed.

The cost of the light is eight-tenths of one cent per hour with gas rates at $2 per 1000 cubic feet. These lamps consume less than five feet of gas and give an average of fifty candles each.

The candle power of burners in general use consuming as small an amount of gas as 4 2-10 feet per hour give a light of less than fifteen candles.

The new light will more than displace three ordinary burners, each consuming 4 2-10 cubic feet of gas per hour.

This burner, as well as all the latest devices in which gas is consumed, including the Lungren & Gordon Regenerative Gas lamps are on exhibition at the warehouses of the Gas Appliance Exchange, 134 Congress street, Boston. —Financial & Commercial News.

HANDY RESTAURANTS.

CONVENIENCES FOR WOMEN WHO GET HUNGRY SHOPPING.

Places in Fashionable Stores Where Lunches Are Served to Buyers at Moderate Prices—It Is Something of an Innovation, but Has Become Popular.

Several years ago a big retail dry goods house tried the experiment of providing a restaurant for its customers. It took up a large section of one floor, and was fitted with polished hard wood tables. A space was reserved on the upper floor for the kitchen, and an army of girls was employed to act as waiters. The experiment was a success almost from the start, as the members of the firm knew it would be.

Prior to that time customers had been interrupted frequently in the midst of their shopping by the necessity of going out to lunch. As there did not happen to be a good restaurant in the vicinity, this always meant a considerable loss of time, and, as a rule, the shopper would not return that day. If she desired to do any other shopping she would go to some store more convenient to the restaurant where she lunched.

By opening a restaurant in the store, therefore, the firm was enabled to keep its customers, and the latter were not interrupted so much in their buying. Furthermore, many persons came to the restaurant and were induced to purchase by the sight of the things around them, so that the direct profits of the restaurant were only a small portion of the entire profits that came from it in indirect ways.

The restaurant itself was an attraction. It was large and airy, and a cheerful place to sit in. Shoppers who were tired out from standing around bargain counters or walking from one place to another found it very pleasant to come here and rest. It often happened that the lunch was considerably prolonged by the chatting of friends who met at the tables. The food and the way in which it was prepared did credit to the place, and the prices compared favorably with the prices of the other articles for sale there.

PROFITS FROM THE START.

The restaurant had not been long in existence before the firm concluded to secure still further profits from it. They did this by establishing in a separate room a restaurant for their employees. The same kind of food that was served in the public restaurant was served to the employees, but at reduced prices. As nearly as could be figured the employees obtained their lunch at cost. The only proviso made by the firm in regard to this was that those who took advantage of their restaurant would not be allowed to leave the establishment until the day's work was over. The employees were not compelled to patronize the restaurant, and if they wanted to go elsewhere were allowed the same time as usual; but it was soon shown that the firm had made no mistake, because only a small number of the employees went outside.

A number of other dry goods houses have established restaurants. One of these is very excellent, and compares favorably with first-class restaurants elsewhere. The bill of fare is elaborate, the service is very good, and every attempt is made to please. At the same time the prices are below those charged for similar service in regular restaurants.

A reporter visited a number of these restaurants the other day. The one last referred to was found to be the most attractive. It is a large room on the second floor of the building, away from the noise of trade, and is very nicely fitted up. There is a velvet carpet on the floor, and the furniture is all appropriate. A magnificent carved oak sideboard stands in one corner of the room, and is made brilliant by handsome utensils of chased and engraved silver and elaborate pieces of cut glass. The tablecloths are of the finest linen. All the china and silverware compare in quality with those found in any first-class restaurant. There is only one man in the restaurant and he is the cashier.

MODERATE PRICES.

The manager is a woman and the waiters are all young girls. The person who selected these evidently had an eye to the aesthetic, as they are all pleasant to look at. They wear uniform black dresses, with pretty white lace caps and aprons. The reporter was looked at with surprise when he came in, and the manager came up to him at once and informed him that gentlemen were not allowed there unless accompanied by ladies. An exception was made in his case, however, as he was simply looking for information.

An idea of the prices can be obtained from this list of extras on the bill of fare: Chicken soup, 20 cents; lobster à la Newburg, 30 cents; lamb chops, breaded, with green peas, 35 cents; chicken croquettes, with cream sauce, 40 cents; roast beef, 35 cents; roast veal, stuffed, 35 cents; roast turkey, with cranberry sauce, 50 cents. A notice was appended to the bill of fare to the effect that no extra charge would be made when one portion was served for two. The importance of this was apparent when it was found that the portions were unusually large, and that one was always large enough for two. Leading out of the restaurant was a handsomely fitted writing room for the benefit of its patrons. Handsome polished hard wood tables and pretty little fancy seats were provided, together with all the little accessories necessary for comfort.

One of the restaurants had a parlor adjoining it for the accommodation of customers. The prices at this restaurant were considerably below those of the first. Roast turkey was put down at 30 cents and roast chicken at the same. The other extras were: Celery, 12 cents; Tokay grapes, 10 cents; pears or oranges, 5 cents, and cranberry sauce, 7 cents. All these restaurants do their cooking in the store building.—New York Sun.

BEFORE THE SHRINE.

I built a shrine and set my idol there,
And morn and noon and night my knees I bent,
And cried aloud until my strength was spent,
Beseeching his cold pity with my prayer,
Sometimes at dawning, when the day was fair,
A ray of light to his stern visage sent
The semblance of a smile. "Does he relent,"
I cried, "this strong god Love, whose high priest Is Despair?"
But noon came on, and in its full clear light
I saw his lips, as ruthless as of old;
And his eyes mocked me like relentless fate,
Till I was fain to hide me from his sight;
Then one swept off from him his mantle's fold,
And lo! my idol was not Love, but Hate.

A HUT IN THE PRAIRIE.

I checked my horse, and after one long, straining look around owned to myself that I was lost. I had suspected the fact some time since, but had stubbornly fought down the suspicion, though my horse evidently realized it. With patient endurance he plodded along, resignation plainly expressed in the droop of his tail and ears. A Texas prairie is a beautiful, soul inspiring sight on a bright day, when the sky is an inverted bowl of turquoise, and the wind comes sweeping over the grassy wastes as fresh and sweet as the bloom on a baby's cheek, but there can be no greater sense of desolation born of nature than that aroused by this same prairie when it lies black and bare to the chill October wind, which has plucked the glory of Indian summer from earth and sky.

I felt this as I gazed about me, disconcerted and even a trifle anxious, for the sun had set some minutes before in a cloud heap, which, closing over it like a rebel horde depositing its king, overran his monarchy with its blood red standard. In place of the ranch, the hearty welcome, pleasant words, bed, supper and fire I had expected to reach by sunset, there was nothing to be seen before, behind, on either hand, but the dead level of the plain. There were paths in plenty; in fact, the trouble was there were too many—all narrow and winding, for whose meandering there seemed not the slightest excuse, except the general tendency to crookedness most things, animate and inanimate alike, possess. But it would have taken the instinct of a bloodhound or a trailing Indian to have said which paths had been made by horses' feet or those of cattle. It was certainly beyond my powers to decide, and in addition to their doubtful nature they had a most perplexing way of running into each other, crossing and recrossing, going off at a tangent and frequently wandering off and getting lost altogether. So I soon dismissed the problem as hopeless of solution.

Now that the sun was gone, I found my knowledge of the points of the compass gone with it. As I sat perplexed and worried the gloom of twilight gathered fast and the chill of coming rain smote me through and through, while in the distance there was the roll of thunder. Glancing up I saw that the masses of cloud had closed together in a curtain of gray mist. My horse strode on of his own accord, and hoping that his instinct would lead us to some house I let him have his will. Presently it began to rain, a sort of heartbroken, passionless weeping, but with a steady determination to persevere all night, that awoke graver apprehension in my bosom than any amount of blustering, showery downpour could have done. This fine still rain was accompanied by a low sighing wind that added its desolate note to the general dreariness of the hour. Of course I did not mind a little rain, but the prospect of spending the entire night exposed to it was anything but agreeable, and I grew really violent in denunciation of the folly which had led me, an utter stranger in the country, to attempt to find anything less than a volcano in active eruption on a bald prairie.

The Texans are a fine people, in some—in many—respects the most admirable of hosts, but individually and collectively they lack any appreciation of distance. This is due of course to their having so much space around them, but to a stranger ignorant of the extent to which the phrases "a little piece out" and "just outside o' town" can be stretched this contemptuous regard of miles is a little misleading. But in the face of that dreary, monotonous moaning of rain and wind even my anger at my own folly could not burn long, and though chilled to the bone and tired and hungry I plodded on dully, grateful that no night, even the longest, could last forever. It was now quite dark, and very dark at that, though at short intervals close to the horizon a faint gleam of lightning showed, too distant to cast brightness on my path and only sufficient to intensify the blackness about me.

All at once I saw a man walking about fifteen feet in front of me. Yes, I know I said it was intensely dark, but all the same, I repeat it, I saw a man walking in front of me, and furthermore I could see that he was a large man, dressed in rough but well fitting clothes; that he wore a heavy red beard, and that he looked back at me from time to time with an expression of keen anxiety on his otherwise rather fixed features.

"Hallo!" I cried, but as he did not halt I concluded he did not hear me. As a second hail produced no result I spurred my weary horse up to overtake the stranger. But though the gray responded with an alacrity most commendable under the circumstances, I soon found that this strange pedestrian did not intend to let me catch up with him. Not that he hurried himself. He seemed without any exertion to keep a good fifteen feet between us. Then I began to wonder how, with intense darkness shutting me in as four black walls, I was yet able to see my strange companion so clearly, to take in the details of his dress, and even the expression of his face, and that at a distance more than twice my horse's length when I could hardly see his head before me. I am not given to superstitious fancies, and my only feeling was of curiosity. When after attempt after attempt to overtake the stranger had failed, I took mercy on my jaded horse, and resolved to follow my unsocial guide, as he must have some definite destination.

We went on in silence for nearly half an hour, when as suddenly as he had appeared he was gone. I looked around for him, half afraid from his instant and complete disappearance that I had been dreaming, when I perceived that I was close to a small, low building of some sort. I reined in and shouted several times, but not the slightest response could I hear, and at last I rode boldly up and tapped on the wall with the butt of my riding whip. Then, as this elicited no sign of life, I concluded that I had stumbled on some deserted house, or that it was the abode of my eccentric friend; so dismounting and tying the gray I resolved to spend the rest of the night under a roof or to find some good reason for continuing my journey. I felt my way along the wall till I reached a door, and trying this and finding that it yielded to me I stepped inside, striking a match as I did so. Fortunately I carried my matches in an air tight case, and as it was dry the one I struck gave me a light at once. I found myself in a large room, close to a fireplace, over which a rude shelf was placed, and on this mantle I saw an oil lamp, to which I applied my match as I looked about me.

On the hearth was heaped a quantity of ashes, and over these crouched a child, a little girl of 5 or 6. At the other end of the room, which was plainly and scantily furnished, lay a man across a bed, and as I raised the lamp I saw that he was the same I had been following, but there was something in his attitude and face that struck me as peculiar, and I was about to go forward and look at him, when the child, who had at first seemed dazed at the light, fairly threw herself upon me.

"Have you anything for Nelly to eat?" she said, and then began to cry. "Oh, Nelly so hungry!"

I ran my hand into my pocket and drew forth what had been a paper bag of chocolate candy, but was now a pulp of unappetizing mass. I must confess to a childish fondness for sweets, which I usually carry in some form about me. I handed the remains of my day's supply to the child, and then walked over to the bed. Yes, it was the same man, red beard, rough clothes, but setting off the magnificent frame to perfection; the same man, but dead, long dead.

I took his hand only to find it stiff and cold, while his face had the dull gray aspect never seen in the newly dead. As I stood gazing down on him a little hand touched mine.

"Nelly so hungry!" said the child. "Have you eaten all the candy?" I asked her.

"Yes, yes! But me hungry, for me had no dinner, no brekks, no supper, and papa won't get up."

The house, which consisted of the large room, a smaller kitchen and a shed, where I found a quantity of hay and fodder, seemed quite bare of food, but by dint of searching in the hay I discovered a nest, which Nelly informed me was there, and in it two fresh eggs. These I boiled for her. When she had finished I soothed her to sleep on a bed I made for her before the fire. Then after I had put my horse in the shed room and fed and watered him I performed as well as I could a service for the dead.

When day dawned I was able to discern at some distance from the house a line of telegraph poles, and taking the child with me I followed these to the nearest town, where I notified the authorities of the death.

The dead man's name was Frederick Barnstable. He was an Englishman, so I found, a recent arrival in those parts. His daughter was restored to her family across the water, and is now a pretty girl of 17. I have never told this story before, but I am ready to take an affidavit to its truth. It all happened about thirty miles from Dallas.

Do the Deaf Dream of Hearing?

Dr. J. M. Buckley, an expert in matters pertaining to the deaf and dumb, has the following curious note to contribute concerning the dreams of persons born deaf:

In visiting institutions for the blind and the deaf I have made inquiry, and have never found an instance of a person born deaf, or of a child who lost his hearing before he was 4 years of age, dreaming of hearing. Among the results of recent inquiries I present the following from the principal of the State Institution of the Blind and Deaf at St. Augustine, Fla.:

"I have closely questioned the deaf children here as to whether they have ever dreamed of hearing, and the invariable answer is 'No.' I have asked the same question of upward of fifty deaf persons with the same result, except where the person interrogated had lost his hearing after learning to talk. These last mentioned are all grown persons of some education who understood the question fully, and are very positive that they had never dreamed of hearing more than a rumbling sound."—St. Louis Republic.

Some People Never Learn.

It is surprising how some people will continue to use things in daily life without any attempt to learn how properly to use them. There is, for instance, the man who can never learn to sharpen his razor, the woman who winds her watch the wrong way, the people who do not know that the time of starting the principal trains on the different railroads and the time of closing the mails is advertised in the newspapers, the people who blow out the gas, the folks who jump the wrong way from a moving car, the unfortunates who are always getting left or suffering injury or losing property because of unfamiliarity with things they ought to know.—New York Sun.

The conveniences of modern life are so many that it ought to be a part of everybody's education to have at least a general knowledge of how to use them. You should know how to take care of your umbrella and your eyeglasses, to keep your clothing in order, to fight off the insects that will overrun any house without precaution, to meet the emergencies that daily arise in civilized life.

CAME BACK AFTER DEATH.

Here's a Ghost That Evidently Liked Work Connected with a Drug Store.

A curious thing is said to have happened at Crossen, Silesia, in the year 1659. In the spring of that year one Christopher Monigh, a drug clerk (an apothecary's servant, as the old account says), died and was buried with the usual services of his church. A few days after his death a shadow exactly like his in face, clothes, stature, mein, etc., appeared in the drug shop where he had been employed before his decease. In the shop he would walk about, sit himself down, take boxes, pots, glasses, etc., from the shelves, always returning them to their exact places.

Later on he began to try the quality of the medicines and to weigh various drug stuffs in a pair of scales used for that purpose; would pound drugs in a mortar with a "mighty noise," and even serve people who came on business to the shop; in a word, do all that a servant in such a capacity could do. He looked very ghastly upon those who had formerly been his fellow servants, they being afraid to say anything to him. The owner of the drug shop was sick at the time, and this phantom servant soon began to cause him a deal of trouble, performing all sorts of tricks on the invalid, such as pulling down the bed upon which he lay, burning sheets, coverlets, etc., and at one time even going so far as to throw the lamps in the fire as often as they were brought into the sick room.

During all this time he had never been seen in the streets or heard to speak. Finally, one day he put on a cloak that hung in the shop and walked out into the streets, minding no one and turning neither to the right nor to the left. Nearing the churchyard where his mortal remains had been deposited, he met a maid servant with whom he had formerly been on speaking terms; accosted her, only to see her fall in a swoon. This single instance is the only one in which he is said to have spoken during the six weeks he was terrorizing all that portion of Silesia. When the girl fainted the gallant phantom essayed to help her to her feet, and placed in her hand a paper written in blood red ink telling the location of much buried treasure. That night Princess Elizabeth Charlotte, the then chief magistrate of Crossen, determined to put an end to the ghostly raids of the drug clerk. She ordered the grave opened, and the corpse, grave clothes and the coffin burned.

This weird proceeding was carried out to the letter, and nothing of the ghost clerk was ever seen afterward, although exact pictures of him appeared in every window pane in the drug shop building. Some of these pictures, which much resembled sand blast work, faded in a few months, but two of them, in an attic window where the clerk lived prior to his death, were plain to be seen up to the time the building was destroyed by fire in 1741. No explanation of these mysterious shadows has ever been given.—St. Louis Republic.

Cats Enjoy Fun.

The sportiveness of kittens is exuberant and makes them the most delightful of pets. Lindsay's remark is superfluous, except that it has to be made for the formal completeness of his treatise that dogs and cats take part in the fun and frolic—sometimes rough and boisterous enough—for their child playfellows. They give every evidence, in fact, that such fun and frolic are the most enjoyed features of that period of their lives. As the animal matures it becomes more sedate, and even assumes a meditative air, but the taste for sport does not die out till infirmity begins to wear upon it.

A cat mentioned in The Animal World would allow itself to be rolled up or swung about in a tablecloth, and seemed to enjoy the fun, and Wood's dignified Pusset would let his friends do anything they pleased with him—lift him up by any part of the body, toss him in the air from one to another, use him as a footstool, boa or pillow, make him jump over their hands or leap on their shoulders, or walk along their extended arms with perfect complacency. At the same time he was keenly sensitive to ridicule, and if laughed at would walk off with every manifestation of offended dignity.—W. H. Larrabee in Popular Science.

Scotch Thrift.

An Englishman, an Irishman and a Scotchman, making a tour around the city a short time since, were observed looking through a confectioner's window at a beautiful young woman serving in the shop. "Oh!" exclaimed Mr. Patrick, "do let us be after spending half a crown with the dear craytur, that we may look at her conveniently, and have a bit of chat wid her." "You extravagant dog," said Mr. Bull. "I'm sure one half of the money will be sufficient; but let us go in, by all means; she's a charming girl." "Ah, wait a wee," interposed Mr. McAndrew; "dinna ye ken it'll serve our purpose equally well just to ask the bonnie lassie to gie us twa sippets for a shilling, and inquire where's Mr. Toompson's house, and sic like. We're no hungry, and may as well save the siller."—Birmingham Mercury.

A Monstrous Tide.

The Bay of Fundy forms a cul-de-sac at which the Atlantic ocean seems to have taken a special spite, and at regular intervals pours into it an enormous amount of water. Take the harbor of St. Johns as an illustration of what this mighty tide must be. In most parts of the world a tide of ten feet is considered something abnormal, but at St. Johns it rises twenty to twenty-four feet in good weather. In stormy weather the monotony is varied by the high water mark being pushed up even ten or fifteen feet higher.—St. Louis Republic.

What One Boy Accomplished by Reading.

I knew a boy, a scrap of a lad, who almost needed a high chair to bring him up to the general level of the dining table, who liked to read the encyclopedia. He was always hunting round in the big books of the encyclopedia—books about his own side—for what he wanted to know. He dug in it as another boy would dig in the woods for sassafras root. It appeared that he was interested in natural history and natural phenomena. He asked questions of these books, exactly as he would ask a living authority, and kept at it till he got answers. He knew how to read. Soon that boy was an authority on earthquakes. He liked to have the conversation at table turn on earthquakes, for then he seemed to be the tallest person at the table. I suppose there was no earthquake anywhere of any importance but that he could tell where it occurred and what damage it did, how many houses it buried, and how many people it killed, and what shape it left the country it had shaken.

From that he went on to try to discover what caused these disturbances, and this led him into other investigations, and at last into the study of electricity, practical as well as theoretical. He examined machines and invented machines, and kept on reading, and presently he was an expert in electricity. He knew how to put in wires and signals and bells, and to do a number of practical and useful things, and almost before he was able to enter the high school he had a great deal of work to do in the city and three or four men under him. These men under him had not read as much about electricity as he had.—Charles Dudley Warner in St. Nicholas.

Abstract Numbers.

It is not easy for children to conceive of numbers apart from sensible objects. For this reason our elementary books in arithmetic present pictures of the articles named. The child learns to add and subtract simply by counting. Such a practice has its place in instruction, but is apt to be encouraged too far. The result is the ridiculous habit of counting one's fingers in the work of arithmetic. The Wallachian peasant is said to perform all multiplications above four times four by this method. It is evident from the word which we use for the several figures, digit, that they originally represented so many fingers.

The circumstance affords a reason for the decimal system of counting. The highest number that could be expressed by a show of fingers was ten. We know that an early system of counting was by fives, or by the single hand. Perhaps our duodecimal system of counting by twelve, or the dozen, grew out of the practice of counting the two hands together with the ten fingers.

The score, or twenty, was a primitive assemblage of fingers and toes. It came into use at a time when people went barefoot. The French use this method in forming their tens; four twenties is French for eighty. The word "score" came from the practice of notching a stick when one had counted to twenty. In the Maya dialects of Central America the word for twenty is the same as for man. It represented his value in mathematical calculations.—Youths' Companion.

Military Reservation in Early Kansas.

All along the outer margin of the reservation were grouped the camps of emigrants; not many of them, but enough to present a curious and picturesque sight. There were a few tents, but most of the emigrants slept in or under their wagons. There were no women or children in these camps, and the hardy men had been so well seasoned by their past experiences, journeying to this far western part of the territory that they did not mind the exposure of sleeping on the ground and under the open skies. Soldiers from the fort, off duty and curious to hear the news from the outer world, came lounging around the camps and chatted with the emigrants in that cool, superior manner that marks the private soldier when he meets a civilian on an equal footing away from the haunts of men.

The boys regarded these uniformed military servants of the government of the United States with great respect, and even with some awe. These, they thought to themselves, were the men who were there to fight Indians, to protect the border, and to keep back the rising tide of wild hostilities that might, if it were not for them, sweep down upon the feeble territory and even inundate the whole western country.—Noah Brooks in St. Nicholas.

Girl Queens of Europe.

During the present century three girl queens have, before the advent of Queen Wilhelmina, almost simultaneously ascended the throne of a European nation: Maria da Gloria of Portugal, Isabella of Spain and Victoria of England. The two first had the misfortune of attaining to the regal power while still mere children. There has been a wide difference between the histories of the spoiled daughter of Spain and the headstrong Portuguese damsel and that of the grand and conscientious maiden of 18 who was called upon to reign over Great Britain. By her close affiliations, through her sister, the Duchess of Albany, to the English court, Queen Emma will probably profit by the example set by the Duchess of Kent in the education of her daughter.—Cor. Philadelphia Telegraph.

Waves 350 Feet High.

The waves that hurl themselves against "Lot's Wife," one of the Mariana islands, drench it to its topmost pinnacle, about 350 feet above sea level. A tremendous surf sometimes runs at Baker island, even without any strong wind, or perhaps the wind blowing from a contrary direction. An unbroken wall of water twenty-five feet high and one-quarter of a mile long rolls in, threatening to deluge the island, and affording one of the grandest sights imaginable. These waves are said to be due to the southwest monsoon blowing strongly in the China seas, many miles away.—Chambers' Journal.

It is forty years since the first National Woman's Rights Convention was held in Worcester, in 1850. During these forty years, by means of this great movement in the interests of women, changes have been made vastly improving their condition. Their varied occupations, their improved means of education, the amelioration of unjust laws—all make the world a different world for women from what it was forty years ago. The Massachusetts Woman's Suffrage Association is to celebrate this fortieth anniversary at Tremont Temple, in Boston, on Tuesday and Wednesday, January 27 and 28. Eminent speakers will be present at this historic celebration.

Among the speakers will be Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, Lucy Stone, Mary A. Livermore, Susan B. Anthony, William Lloyd Garrison, Col. T. Wentworth Higginson, Helen Campbell, Mrs. Charlotte Emerson Brown, president of the Federation of Women's Clubs, Dr. Emily Blackwell, Hon. Wm. Culbertson, and Mount Holyoke College by Prof. Eastman. Senator Wymont, and Hon. A. D. White of Cornell University are also expected.

The following resolution was passed by the W. C. T. U. at its meeting last Friday.

Whereas a finely executed life-size crayon portrait of Miss Mary J. Floyd has been hung in Franklin Hall, the W. C. T. One hundred and twenty-five years ago Blackstone gave a definition to a principle which had been recognized in the science of jurisprudence for ages, as follows: "A law is a rule of action prescribed by the Supreme power of the State, commanding what is right and prohibiting what is wrong." This definition is accepted by the legal profession wherever the English language is spoken. It has been oft-times claimed that neither legislatures nor the vote of the people can make liquor licence constitutional. The Supreme Court of the United States in the recent California case made a declaration as to the common law status of the saloon, quite in harmony with Blackstone's definition, and the assumption that a licensing law which bargains away public morals was constitutionally void. The Court said: "There is no inherent right in a citizen to sell intoxicating liquors by retail. It is not a privilege of the citizen of a State or a citizen of the United States. It is a question of public expediency and public morals." Legislation which gives authority to moral evils, has lost its essential worth and become an incubus on the back of humanity. That "the public welfare is the supreme law" is a legal truth which all should learn.

Death of a Respected Citizen.

Stephen Fernald, who for several weeks has been confined to his house on Franklin street, by a severe and painful illness, passed away yesterday afternoon at 3 o'clock. He has been in ill health for a long time. In fact ever since the time of the accident he met with some two years ago, by his horse running away on Lowell street.

He was born at Kittery, Maine, on the 14th of September 1808, and receiving a common school education, was apprenticed to Nathaniel Young of Dover, N. H., in whose family he resided during the term of his indenture, which was of the regular old-fashioned type, and learned the business of tanning and currying thoroughly, remaining with his master until he reached the age of 21. He then went to Amesbury and worked in that town and Salisbury for two or three years, part of the time on his own account and part of the time for others.

In 1832, he removed to Peabody, where he worked some for others and finally commenced doing business upon his own account in a small way, which he continued a short time and then formed a copartnership with Hiram Plumer, father of George Plumer of this town, which continued fifteen years, the firm doing business in a shop near the Hardy tannery, at first, and afterwards in the shop on Spring street, in which he continued business after its dissolution, until about the time of the war, when he was associated with C. J. Bishop & Co., of Boston, and traveled through the West, soliciting consignments of stock. Later, he formed a partnership with George Daniels, who had been associated with Bishop & Co., and this firm continued until the Boston fire in 1872, when they were burned out, and sustained quite a loss. After the dissolution of this copartnership, which took place just after the fire, he retired from active business, although many of the Western firms persisted in sending consignments to him for two or three years, but that trade was finally turned over by Mr. Fernald to the firm of Jas. O. Safford & Co., and since that time he has done no business. He was widely known as a man of high integrity, and his loss will be deeply felt by a large circle of business and social acquaintances. About two years ago, he lost his wife, to whom he has been wedded 53 years, and no doubt the deep grief caused by that bereavement has tended to undermine his health. He leaves one son, John P. Fernald, formerly editor and proprietor of this paper, to mourn his sad death. The only other immediate kin are his brother, Cyrus Fernald of Kittery, Maine, Luther Fernald of this town, Mrs. Cephas Church of Winchester and Mrs. Mary A. Wardwell of Litchfield, N. H., brothers and sisters, all younger than the deceased. Miss Annie Tibbets, a niece of the deceased wife, has been an inmate of the family for many years and has regarded him more in the light of a parent than an uncle, and her grief must be very deep. The funeral will take place Monday, afternoon at 2 o'clock from his late residence.

SALEM, Jan. 1, 1891.

One year ago we issued our last club check; we then decided it was hardly a straightforward way of doing business to charge one class of customers five dollars per dozen for pictures and another class but little more than half as much for the same thing. Instead of adopting the motto of most photographers, viz., anything is good enough for club work—we have made our club work equal to our best.

We believed it was a good business principle to charge all our customers the same price for the same thing, and by adopting this course and charging for our work what we believed it was worth, and trying to make it worth as much as any, we should gain their respect and good will.

Our business the past year having been much the most satisfactory of any year in Salem, proves that our judgment was not at fault. We are so well satisfied with the course we took that we shall pursue the same during '91 and shall not cater to that class who are satisfied with anything if it is cheap.

The demands upon our time in the way of large portraiture, particularly freehand crayons—have the past year been so great that we have decided to introduce colored pastel portraits, and we had made by Mr. E. L. Hanlon of Boston, than whom there is no more skillful artist in his specialty in America, a complete line of samples of those very beautiful pictures.

Remember that no better work than this can be produced in this country, and the price is but little more than is charged for the ordinary grades. Call and see these pictures if you are interested in fine portraiture.

An alarm of fire was rung in from box 15 on Thursday evening, quickly followed by a second alarm, in consequence of a fire at the barn of M. N. N. who occupies the brick house on Sylvan street near the Danvers line. The department responded promptly, hose one being well on its way before the first alarm ceased striking. As the hook and ladder truck drawn by four horses, swung into Central street, on the firemen who was attempting to go on, was thrown to the ground. He was not injured however, and proceeded to the scene of conflagration. The barn was totally destroyed before the department arrived.

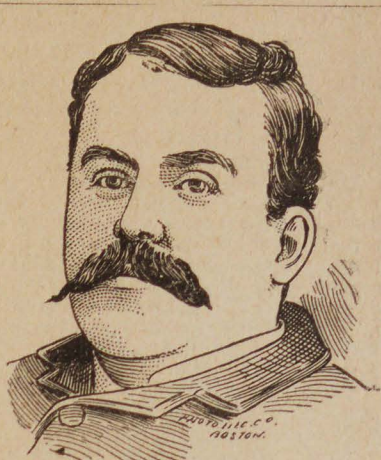

Geo. H. Powell of the Press will soon remove to Chicopee Falls, Mass., where he has signed a contract for five years as advertising manager of the Overman Wheel Co., the largest bicycle makers in the world. By the contract Mr. Powell will be unable to devote any efforts to outside advertising as has been his custom for some time past. The above company is to be congratulated on its selection. Mr. Powell has all the qualifications for a first class agent and advertisements set up under his direction cannot fail to catch the eye of all lovers of the results of printer's ink, type and paper. Mr. Powell will be missed here, but all will be pleased to accord him many hearty wishes for his future successes that seem bound to come.—Salem Call.

The selectmen have had a difficult task to fill the finance committee. One after another has resigned or notified the board that he was ineligible on account of holding some minor town office. The duty of calling that committee together devolves upon the chairman of the selectmen, and accordingly Mr. Goulding called the committee to order on Tuesday evening but found two vacancies caused by the resignation of F. E. Farnham, Esq., and the ineligibility of W. W. Reed, who is trustee of Cedar Grove cemetery. Strong pressure has been brought to bear upon Mr. Farnham to induce him to serve upon the committee, but having served several times including last spring, he feels that he has contributed his share of time to the town in that direction for the present. The meeting was adjourned until Tuesday next at 7:30 o'clock when it is hoped that the regular business can be commenced.

Daniel Haskell, a well-known and aged citizen of this town, died at the residence of his son, Robert, on Douglass street, Wyoma, at 4 o'clock Tuesday afternoon. The deceased was a trader, and followed that occupation throughout his life, which covered a period of nearly fourscore years, he being 78 years of age at his death. He belonged to a hardy New England family, being born in Windham, N. H., and several brothers and sisters survive him, who have attained old age. Mr. Haskell was stricken with paralysis last March and has been unable to get around much since then. He went to his son's house about six weeks ago, but his illness grew worse and finally resulted in his demise. He leaves three sons and a daughter to mourn his loss.

The deceased met with several serious accidents at different times during his life and narrowly escaped death, but his strong constitution pulled him through every time. He possessed considerable property, much of it accumulated by shrewd and sharp trading and frugal habits of life.

Suffering for years with severe attacks of neuralgia, I tried a number of so called remedies without any good results. Finally I tried Salvation Oil, and to my surprise and delight on using one bottle my suffering ended. I cheerfully recommend it to all sufferers. Mrs. Laura Lehman, 535 W. Baltimore St., Baltimore, Md.

One Bottle

Effects a Radical Cure.

May 25, 1890.

DANA SARSAFARILLA CO.—
Gentle: I wish to testify to the value of your Sarsaparilla. For some time past I have been troubled with my kidneys, being obliged to use the vessel many times during the night, and in the morning the urinal deposit would have a dense, milky appearance, besides leaving a brick-colored stain on the vessel, which would require scrubbing to eradicate. About three months ago I met your agent, Mr. Simpson, who advised me to try a bottle of your Sarsaparilla, and after much urging I did try it, and am forced to say that the result is truly wonderful. I am no longer obliged to get up in the night, my urine has no sediment, and I feel that the ONE BOTTLE which I have taken has effected a RADICAL CURE. I cheerfully recommend DANA'S SARSAFARILLA to all persons afflicted as I have been.

Yours respectfully,

Geo. F. Marshall,

Lewiston, Me.

Formerly Custom-house Officer, Portland, Me.

The only Sarsaparilla guaranteed to absolutely cure Diseases of the Stomach, Liver, and Kidneys, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Sick Headache, Muscular Rheumatism, Diarrhea, Female Weakness, Emaciation, General Debility, Eruptions of the Skin, Pimples, Boils, Tumors, Scrofulous Affections, Cancerous Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Syphilis, Catarrh, Ringworm, Carbuncles, Ulcers, and Scars, Malarial Poison, Pain in the Bones.

Destroyed by Fire.

An alarm from box 28 was sounded yesterday forenoon at 10 o'clock caused by a fire in the old factory of Merritt Cook on Foster street, occupied by J. J. Cunney, as a morocco factory. The fire started in the hot room and burned fiercely for some time. The department responded promptly and had a hard fight to subdue the flames. The building was erected 36 years ago, by B. M. Hills, for Mr. Cook, and was used by him as a currying shop until about five years ago, since which time it has been occupied by various firms for morocco dressing. The building was insured for $1500—$1000 in the So. Danvers Mutual and $500 in the Royal Insurance Co., the latter through the agency of O. B. Chadwick & Co. The machinery belongs to Mr. Cook and was also insured at Chadwick's agency, in the Hartford Insurance Company for $400. The damage to building and machinery is estimated at $600.

Mr. Cunney has been engaged in business here but a few months, coming to this town from Lynn. His insurance on stock was placed through the agency of P. F. Tierney of Salem and amounted to $3000. His loss is estimated at $5000.

The building from Foster street presents no appearance of fire ravages, the fire being confined almost entirely to the interior of the second story.

Had the fire started in the night time no doubt the entire building would have been destroyed.

Co-Operative Temperance Committee.

The adjourned meeting of the co-operative temperance committee was held at the Town House on Wednesday evening. Further discussion followed upon the plans for carrying on the NO-LICENCE campaign this spring. The check list was examined and is to be divided up and placed in the hands of the committees for solid work. It is desired that all interested in the cause of temperance and the welfare of the town, will assist in pushing the work. Voters in the suburban districts, those beyond the influence of the noxious traffic should put their shoulder to the wheel and make the no-license contest an assured success, which it cannot be without their assistance and support.

DANA'S "ABSOLUTELY CURES DISEASE!"

GRIFT AT MAMMOTH.

All of the Victims Believed to Have Been Found.

PREPARATIONS FOR BURIAL.

Eighty Bodies to Be Buried in a Trench
Long—Cause of the Explosion
May Never Be Known.

YOUNGWOOD, Pa., Jan. 29.—The bodies of 107 victims of the explosion in Mammoth mine No. 1 have been recovered, and seventy-nine have been identified and buried. The work of the rescuers was continued until noon yesterday. Then Superintendent Keighley came out of the mine and said: "We can find no more bodies. I think we have them all, with perhaps the exception of one or two."

General Manager Lynch thereupon began preparations for the largest funeral which ever occurred in this section. The victims belong to the Catholic church, and Fr. Lambing of Scottsdale and Fr. Symiel, the Hungarian priest, arranged the details of the funeral. Fr. Lambing telephoned to Scottsdale and ordered graves prepared for 30 bodies. This necessitated digging a trench 6 feet deep, 7 1/2 feet wide and 250 feet long.

It has been learned that hundreds of safety gauze lamps were provided for the miners by the company, but they were never used, as they were regarded as unnecessary. In their stead the men wore the familiar little open flame lamps on their hats.

Fire Boss Sneath had worked in mines in Great Britain and this country for thirty years. When the miners went to work on Tuesday morning they found the indication of the fire boss' visit and his endorsement of his belief in the safety of the mine.

On Monday there were thirteen miners at work in the part of the mine affected by the explosion. It is not known exactly how many were there on Tuesday.

The last examination of the Mammoth mine by the state inspector was made on Jan. 16. It shows that at the inlet, which is the slope a mile or two away from the shaft, there was 55,000 cubic feet of air entering. The general condition of the mine was marked fair. The report was signed by William J. Jenkins, inspector of the second bituminous district.

Superintendent Lynch said the Mammoth mine was long thought to be the safest mine of the twenty-nine operated by the Frick company. All the lights were open, and the gas was an unexpected thing.

An official of the Frick company said: "It may never be known how or why the explosion occurred. The accumulation of fire damp was probably the cause. There is a theory that a pocket of natural gas was reached, and the operation of the ventilating fans now prevents any accumulation of it. The disaster has some remarkable features. It was as deadly, as sweeping and as complete as the sinking of a ship, without small boats, in mid-ocean."

There were some sad scenes during the day. When the bodies had all been prepared for burial, Coroner J. B. Wakefield of Jeannette impaneled a jury. The bodies were viewed, and after a brief consultation with the jury, the coroner adjourned the inquest until 10 o'clock on Feb. 5.

IN THE INTEREST OF ART.

Proposed Establishment of Institutions for the Benefit of Needy Students.

NEW YORK, Jan. 29.—The Tribune says: John Armstrong Chanler is diligently at work furthering his plan for establishing funds to educate needy art students. His idea is to establish institutions of art all over the country, each of which shall raise money to pay the expenses of poor persons studying art abroad. He has already collected over $25,000 for the Institution of Art of New York and hopes that that sum will be considerably increased by subscriptions. Mr. Chanler will start for Boston to-morrow and will seek to arouse the wealthy patrons of art there to the good points of his plan and to induce them to organize an institution of art. After his campaign in Boston Mr. Chanler will go to Chicago and other places in the west.

In fact, his present intention is to visit every state and territory in the union to explain the details of his scheme.

PEPPER 101, INGALLS 58.

The Senator-Elect from Kansas Said to Be an Advocate of Low Tariff.

TOPEKA, Kan., Jan. 29.—The joint convention of the legislature to elect a United States senator to succeed John J. Ingalls was held here. Lieutenant Governor Felt took the chair. The roll of both bodies was called and resulted as follows: William Pfeffer 101, John J. Ingalls 58, Blair 3, Morrill 1, Kelly 1. The chair then declared William Pfeffer senator-elect to succeed John J. Ingalls. The result was received with applause from the Alliance members.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29.—President Livingston of the Georgia Alliance, who is also a member of the next house, says Pfeffer will have to stand by the Ocala platform. Livingston claims that Pfeffer is an advocate of low tariff.

Frederick Hale's Case.

PITTSFIELD, Mass., Jan. 29.—Frederick A. Hale of Hinsdale, who killed his brother Henry in a family quarrel last May, was arraigned for trial in the superior court, charged with manslaughter. He pleaded guilty of assault and battery and the plea was accepted by the district attorney. This is the celebrated Hinsdale fratricide case, in which the matter was followed by suicide of the father. Hale was tried at the July term last year, but the jury disagreed. Hale will be sentenced later.

McAuliffe Will Meet All Comers.

NEW YORK, Jan. 29.—Billy Madden recently issued a challenge backing Joe McAuliffe to fight Jim Corbett or any one else for $500 a side. Madden was on hand at The Police Gazette yesterday ready to post the money, but no Corbett representative appeared. Madden said he would back McAuliffe against any man in the world, not barring Sullivan, although he admits that John L. is out of the fighting business.

Smuggled Tobacco Seized.

HAVANA, Jan. 29.—The police were recently informed that large quantities of tobacco were being smuggled into this city from Key West and a watch was set upon the steamer Arkansas. This resulted in the seizure of ninety-one baskets, most of which contained tobacco, the whole weighing about one ton. These baskets are used for exporting fruits to Key West and are supposed to come back empty.

IN THE NEXT CAGE.

How a Shouter for a Side Show Amused Himself in the Postoffice.

In a hilarious mood a tall man with a theatrical makeup entered the postoffice. It was early morning and the corridors were almost deserted. As he slowly passed through the building on the ground floor he gave evidence that he was or had been a shouter for the side show of a circus. There was mischief in his eye as he glanced toward a window behind which a clerk sat.

"In this cage," he exclaimed in deep, sonorous tones, as if addressing an audience of curious and expectant people, "you will find that melancholy beast the laughing hyena. This animal roams about the prisons in the night, and there he laughs and laughs and laughs, but what on earth he is laughing at nobody has been able to find out."

"Pass along, pass along, but do not press against the ropes. You have ample time to view all the curiosities before the great show begins."

Scores of clerks, attracted by the unusual noise, hurried to the little windows and peered out their heads. This pleased the tall man immensely and he laughed immoderately.

"In the next cage," resumed the orator as he proceeded on his way, "is the far famed Rocky Mountain goat, which leaps from peak to peak and skips from crag to crag, ever and anon uttering that plaintive cry, 'Baah baah!'"

Then another hand was thrust out of an opening, and the tall man, with a sweeping wave of the hand said, "Thank you, sir; that will do."

"In the next cage," continued the mirthful man, "you will perceive the gigantic rocodile, who, when he eats, eats seventeen different kinds of food, always concluding his repast by devouring a bale of hay."

"Thank you, thank you, sir; you are behaving nicely, nicely."

"Pass along, pass along, ladies and gents; but bear in mind and remember you have ample, ample time to see all the curiosities before the show in the great pavilion opens."

Gradually the tall humorist made his way around the corridors, his voice losing none of its volume or strength. Meanwhile the commotion in the postoffice department was increasing. Every window was occupied by one or more clerks, with bulging eyes and necks craned to catch a glimpse of the daring, practical joker. Everybody had a chance to see him, for he did not deny himself to anybody. This is what one group heard as he came into view:

"In the next cage are the mighty boa constrictors, whose bite is worse than death and whose strength is crushing. In the smaller cages on the right are other rare reptiles brought from remote tropical regions, where one day they lived and flourished. Twice a year these snakes shed their skins. They feed upon birds, frogs and guinea pigs."

By that time the loungers in the building were enjoying the sport highly, but how the clerks felt is not known.

As the stranger neared the last door at the upper end of the Broadway side he turned toward another "cage" and exclaimed:

"In the next cage you will see Old Tom feeding the Polar bear his daily meal of broken ice. This ice is expressly imported by us from the arctic regions at enormous expense and at—"

At that moment the watchman made his presence known, and the joker was forced to cease joking; but as he went out of the door he fired this shot, which was evidently intended to hit the watchman:

"Little Jocko will now ascend the ladder, turning a complete somersault at each and every round."

Then the swinging doors closed behind him and he was lost to view.—New York Herald.

What to Do.

"Boys," excitedly exclaimed the managing editor, rushing into the local room of a Chicago morning paper late one night in 1888, "here's the chance of your life to distinguish yourselves—forty men and women burned to death in an asylum fire in D—"

Want two of you to go there on a special train and cover the thing as completely as possible until we get a relief down to you."

The only men on duty at that hour were a couple of recent arrivals from "Lunnon." They were whirled down to the train and put on an especial car. Away went the train through the night to the scene of the disaster.

"I say, Cholley," No. 1 broke out after a short interval of silence, "did you hear him say he expected us to distinguish ourselves? Wonder what he intends to do by us when we get back?"

"I heard one of the boys, don't ye know, saying that the health of the editor wasn't good. They may want a successor to him."

While they pursued this interesting topic the train pursued its course, and two hours later the young Englishmen, after much consultation, started toward Chicago a telegram reading like this: "Dear Mr. Editor: We are here."

The answer came back shortly, "Find out where the fire is hottest and jump in."—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Working Into the Spring.

Housewife—Will you clean off this snow for a quarter?

Boy—Yes'm.

Housewife—Well, after you have cleaned off the front walk, and steps I shall want you to make a nice path down to the well and through the orchard, clean off the cellar doors, and then bring up the water from the well and a few buckets of coal from down stairs.

Boy—And then, ma'am, I suppose you'll want to have your grass cut?—New York Sun.

Good Grounds.

"Do you think you will gain your law-suit?" asked Gus Smith of Col. Yerger, who had been run over by a fire engine and was suing the city of Austin for damages.

"Yes, I think I'll come out ahead."

"Has your lawyer given you grounds to think so?"

"No, but I have given him grounds to think so. I've deeded him two lots on Austin avenue as a fee."—Texas Sittings.

Lack of Confidence.

Miss Noveltie—You say that De Wagstick was a great poet, but ruined by his modesty?

Miss Passionpen—Yes, he would write the most soul inspiring verses, but his extreme diffidence did not give him the necessary confidence, and he used to sign Swinburne's name to them.—New York World.

They Are a Necessity.

STRICT PARTY VOTE.

The Senate Passes the Apportionment Bill.

A LABOR MEASURE DISPLACED

By the Army Appropriation Bill—Boston Business Men Before the House Coinage Committee—Rumors Concerning Reciprocity Denied by Mr. Blaine—Mr. Roosevelt's Defense of the Civil Service System.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—In the senate the consideration of the apportionment bill was taken up as the unfinished business, and Mr. Edmunds addressed the senate, calling attention to the fact that the bill took no cognizance whatever of the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the constitution—that, in case the right of suffrage be denied or abridged in any state, the representation of that state shall be diminished accordingly.

The senate then began to vote on the amendments proposed by the minority, the first being to increase the representation of Arkansas from six to seven. The amendment was rejected—yeas 33, nays 33.

The next amendment was to increase the representation of Minnesota from seven to eight. Rejected—yeas 31, nays 32.

The next amendment was to increase the representation of Missouri from 15 to 16. Rejected—yeas 30, nays 33.

The next amendment was to increase the representation of New York from 34 to 35. Rejected—yeas 30, nays 33.

Mr. Davis then withdrew the amendment, fixing the total number of representatives at 390. Mr. Berry offered an amendment fixing the total number at 350, and giving an additional member to Arkansas, Minnesota and New York. He desired to have it voted on as one amendment. A division of it, however, was insisted on by Mr. Hale. Mr. Hale then moved to lay the amendment on the table; and that motion was agreed to—yeas 33, nays 29.

Mr. Vest stated he could not vote for the bill because a large fraction of population in the state of Missouri, Minnesota, Arkansas and New York was left entirely without representation.

Mr. Gorman also opposed the bill because, in his belief, a reenumeration should have been made in the city of New York—there was a deficit of some 200,000 in the census returns as taken—and because he believed that that state and the states of Kansas, Minnesota and Missouri should have an additional representative. He thought that in fairness to all the apportionment should have been left to be made in the next session.

Mr. Morgan spoke of the necessity of a specific declaration in the bill that the number of presidential electors in 1892 shall correspond with the number of representatives fixed in the bill. The country had had enough of trials and troubles and difficulties in connection with presidential elections to admonish congress to exercise the most extreme care in the matter.

The bill was then passed exactly as it came from the house—yeas, 37; nays, 24 (a strict party vote).

The senate then, on motion of Mr. Blair, took up the house bill providing for the adjustment of accounts of laborers, workmen and mechanics arising under the eight-hour law. It having been thus made the "unfinished business," Mr. Blair consented to have it laid aside temporarily so that the army appropriation bill should be taken up and proceeded with.

Mr. Gorman, however, objected to that arrangement being made, and then Mr. Allison, who had made the request, withdrew it and moved (as a privileged matter) that the army bill be taken up. The motion was agreed to, thus displacing the eight-hour bill from its advantageous position as the "unfinished business." The consideration of the army appropriation bill was then proceeded with.

CIVIL SERVICE SYSTEM

Defended from Statements Made by Superintendent of Census Porter.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—Commissioner Roosevelt and Superintendent Porter of the census bureau were in attendance at the meeting of the house committee on reform in the civil service. Mr. Porter had made some statements at a previous meeting which Mr. Roosevelt had construed into an attack upon the civil service commission's methods, and he was armed with a type-written statement in reply. Mr. Porter sat by to prepare himself for the rebuttal.

Mr. Roosevelt opened with an energetic defense of the merit system of appointment as opposed to the non-competitive system of examinations practiced by Mr. Porter. He quoted from the report of the committee a statement to the effect that these non-competitive examinations, while preventing the appointment of the most incompetent persons, did not secure the appointment of the most competent. Mr. Porter's plan, he said, was nearly, but not quite, as bad as the old spoils system. He was not arguing to show that the census office should be placed under the civil service (although that was his private opinion), but simply to demonstrate that Mr. Porter's plans had not been applied to all of the departments. It was necessary to do this, for, owing to Mr. Porter's prominence, his plan would be used a prop by the advocates of the old spoils system.

Mr. Porter interrupted to state that he had no such intention; that the census office was a temporary affair and his system was intended only to meet its needs. Mr. Roosevelt, continuing, declared that Mr. Porter's system of promotion (based in a large measure upon political influence) furnished one of the strongest arguments in favor of the commission's merit system of promotion. He denied that the civil service rules encouraged the growth of barnacles in the government service, and entered into a long argument to meet Mr. Porter's assertion that the commission's system of appointment did not result in securing effective servants. He pointed to the fact that two-thirds of Mr. Porter's men, after passing his examination, had failed to pass the commission's examination or had passed at much lower ratings.

Mr. Porter admitted that he had intended to refer only to the persons who had passed the copyists' examination (who were found to be deficient in arithmetic) and not to persons selected on the clerk's roll, who were always found to be competent.

Mr. Roosevelt accepted Mr. Porter's explanation. He said that he had never made an attack on any department. "But," said he, "if any department, from that of the postmaster general to Mr. Porter's, makes an attack upon the commission, I am always ready."

RECIPROCITY WITH CANADA.

Mr. Blaine Contradicts a Rumor and Expresses His Views on the Subject.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—Representative Baker of New York addressed the following letter to Secretary Blaine:

It is reported in the newspapers of Canada and along the northern border of my state, where my constituents are deeply interested in the subject, that negotiations are going on between the country and Great Britain with a view to partial reciprocity with Canada, including natural products only and not manufactures; and it is stated that Sir Charles Tupper is on his way here as a commissioner to negotiate for such modification to our tariff. I would be very glad if you would enable me to answer my constituents.

Secretary Blaine made the following reply:

I authorize you to contradict the rumors you refer to. There are no negotiations whatever on foot for a reciprocity treaty with Canada; and you may be assured that no scheme for reciprocity with the Dominion, confined to natural products, will be entertained by this government. We know nothing of Sir Charles Tupper's coming to Washington.

FREE COINAGE.

Massachusetts Argues Against It—A Disinterested Party Speaks for It.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—The committee on coinage held another meeting. The delegation from Massachusetts opposed to free coinage received a hearing, after which Mr. Gibson, a Wall street broker and also a member of the Statistical society of London, was heard for about twenty minutes. Representative Walker of Massachusetts introduced Mr. Gibson. He said he had never dealt in silver, and did not in favor of his interest. He had studied the matter of free coinage as an economic position, and in a trip abroad last summer had taken particular pains to inquire of mint officials in London, Berlin and Paris concerning the quantity of bullion and coin on hand. The information he had received thoroughly convinced him that no evil results would result from a policy of free coinage.

THE GREAT BLIZZARD.

Western Union Company Still at Work Patching Up Broken Wires.

NEW YORK, Jan. 31.—The Western Union company had only two wires working between New York and Philadelphia yesterday, but four have been gained, making six in all. W. C. Humstone, superintendent of the eastern division, asserted that the storm has played greatest havoc with the wires between New York and Philadelphia, and that wires to the south and west of the latter city came next in amount of damage done. Mr. Humstone said that the company had large forces of men at work, and hoped soon to be able to report a far better state of affairs. Messages are still taken "subject to delay," and the delay is sometimes very great. Washington messages come in slowly.

The first communication with New York by wire from Newark since the storm of Saturday night was had yesterday, when both the Western Union and the Postal companies succeeded in opening one wire. Chief Benner of the fire department reported that communication by fire telegraph had been established between fire headquarters and fifty companies, and that the work of completing other connections was being rapidly pushed.

Massachusetts Legislature.

BOSTON, Jan. 30.—In the senate a petition was received for a committee to negotiate for the purchase of the sword of George Washington, for which $20,000 was refused thirty years ago. The New York and Boston island petition was admitted under a suspension of the rules.

Among the house petitions was one for the establishment of a minimum wage for all trades, and, in the orders, one for the establishment of a commissioner of highways and bridges.

An Ugly Mute.

FALL RIVER, Jan. 30.—A deaf mute named Patrick O'Brien arrived in this city from New York, and became crazy drunk. He caused a great disturbance at the works of the American Printing company, and Officers Elsbree and Devine were detailed to arrest him. When they laid hands on him he began a vicious fight and bit both officers savagely. He was arraigned in court, and under promise of leaving the city at once the case was adjourned.

Capital Stock Reduced One-Half.

NEW HAVEN, Jan. 30.—At the meeting of the directors of the Second National bank, it was decided to reduce the capital stock from $1,000,000 to $500,000. When the Elm City bank became the Second National bank in 1861, its capital was increased from $500,000 to $1,000,000. Now the stock is to be reduced to its former figure by paying back to the stockholders $50 per share.

BERLIN, Jan. 30.—Professor Guttmann, lecturing before a number of physicians of this city, said that he had treated 164 patients according to the Koch system of inoculation, of which number fifty-one were in the first stages of the disease and showed marked signs of improvement. Of the remainder sixty-four were improving.

No Change in Price.

NEW YORK, Jan. 30.—The anthracite sales agents met and agreed to an output for February of 2,000,000 tons, against about 2,000,000 last year and about 3,000,000 tons this month. Present prices are to remain unchanged. Another meeting will be held Feb. 12.

NOTICE OF BOARD OF HEALTH.

The Board of Health of the Town of Peabody, hereby publishes in accordance with the laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, the Rules and Regulations of the Cattle Commissioners.

Wm. S. CORNELL, Board
GEO. M. F. ST. M. D. Board
J. OMAS J. F. LEBLANC, Health.

Jan. 24, 1891.

Sec. 10, Chapter 272, Laws of 1887.

When a board of cattle commissioners appointed in accordance with the provisions of chapter three hundred and seventy-eight of the acts of the year eighteen hundred and eighty-five, is in existence, and makes and publishes any regulations concerning the extinction, cure or treatment of animals infected with, or which have been exposed to any contagious disease, such regulations shall supersede those made by boards of health, and boards of health shall carry out and enforce all orders and directions of said commissioners to them directed.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

STATE CATTLE COMMISSION.

SECRETARY'S OFFICE.

DREHAM, MASS., Jan. 3, 1891.

The Cattle Commissioners of Massachusetts, in conformity to the requirements of the Public Statutes, hereby make and publish the following rules a regulation for the suppression of contagious diseases among domestic animals.

RULE 1. Whenever knowledge of, or has good reason to suspect the existence of a contagious disease among any species of domestic animals in this State, whether such knowledge or suspicion is obtained by personal examination or otherwise, shall forthwith give notice thereof to the board of health of the city or of a town, or to a person appointed by them for that purpose, and, if satisfied there are good reasons for believing that contagion is present shall cause the suspected animals to be securely held by the owner or other reliable person, and shall immediately inform the Cattle Commissioners.

RULE 2. The board of health of a city or a town having received notice of a suspected case of contagious disease among any of the domestic animals in their city or town, shall forthwith make an examination thereof, or personally or by a competent person appointed by them for that purpose, and, if satisfied there are good reasons for believing that contagion is present shall cause the suspected animals to be securely held by the owner or other reliable person, and shall immediately inform the Cattle Commissioners.

RULE 3. An order, written or verbal, to securely hold such suspected animals in isolation shall be issued by the board of health of the city or of a town, or by a single member of the Cattle Commission.

RULE 4. Persons having the care or custody of suspected animals, whether such animals are their own property or otherwise, and having received an order for their isolation, shall neither sell, swap, trade, give or in any way dispose of such animals, nor drive or work or move or allow them to be moved away from the place of isolation, nor allow other animals not already exposed to come in contact with them, till permitted to do by the Cattle Commissioners.

PLEURO-PNEUMONIA. HOG CHOLERA.

RULE 5. In cases of suspected contagious pleuro-pneumonia, or hog cholera, or swine plague, or cholera among swine, the entire herd must be secured against communication with other animals of the same species that have not been exposed to the suspected animals, and owners of other herds which may have been exposed to the same, shall immediately inform the board of health of the city or town, or the Cattle Commissioners.

GLANDERS.

RULE 6. Horses or mules suspected of having the disease known as glanders or farcy may only remain in the custody of their owners, and in the stalls or on the premises previously occupied by them, when in the judgment of the board of health such owners can be relied on with confidence, and when such stalls or premises are deemed suitable places for holding such diseased or suspected animals till taken in charge by the Cattle Commissioners.

RULE 7. In accordance with the spirit and intent of the foregoing, in all cases of suspected contagious diseases among cattle coming to your notice, you will either instruct the owners to cause the separation of the suspected animals from the remainder of the herd, and cause their isolation, and allow the suspected animals to be managed in all respects as if no disease had been present.

PENALTIES.

The statutes provide that any person who fails to comply with a regulation made or order given by the Cattle Commissioners, or boards of health in the discharge of their duty is punishable by a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars or by imprisonment not exceeding one year; and any city or town who fails to comply with the provisions of chapter 272 of the Acts of 1887 relating to the publication of regulations, to the isolation of suspected animals, and the carrying into effect all proper orders from the Cattle Commissioners, shall forfeit a sum not exceeding five hundred dollars for each day's neglect.

OLD OCEAN'S RAGE. BRUSSELS MOURNS.

Crew of the Montreal Will Probably Never Forget It.

STORM OF SIXTY-SEVEN DAYS, ALL CLASSES SHOW SORROW.

During Which the Vessel Was Buffeted Half Way Across the Atlantic—Nothing but Shreds of Canvas, and the Men Half Starved—Other Disasters.

NEW YORK, Jan. 29.—The steamship Philadelphia of the Red Line, arrived from Lagnayra and brought the news that the bark Montreal, which left Windsor, N. S., for St. Simon Island, Ga., on Nov. 18 last, and which was given up at Lloyds as lost, is still afloat and making her way to port.

Last Saturday the steamship sighted a bark with signals of distress flying and with canvas spread with rents running through it from yard to yard. Capt. Chambers bore down on the distressed vessel and learned from her commander, Capt. Dexter, that he was short of provisions, had very little water, and that the vessel, for the sixty-seven days she was at making the short journey from the Nova Scotia port to the Georgia port, encountered every class of storm, hurricane and cyclone.

The bark was still sound in hull, but everything loose on deck was swept away and there was nothing but shreds of canvas to sail her. Five times she was blown across New York harbor. The week before Christmas the captain was 430 miles east of Sandy Hook and he made an effort to get to it, but storms and the gulf stream drove him away. On Christmas day there was a barrel of pork and a few barrels of flour and three tins of water in stock and all hands had to be put on short rations.

On the third day of the new year Capt. Dexter sent word of his hands aloft to furl the torn topsails, as he feared another hurricane. One of the sailors fell from the mainmast yard to the deck and was instantly killed.

The vessel was battered around in the hurricane that struck them and was driven half way across the Atlantic. Since then she had been bating up to her port, but sighted no vessel or steamship in the meantime until she met the Philadelphia.

Capt. Chambers of the Philadelphia sent a good store of beef, pork, bread and water to the famished crew, and also a supply of canvas. He offered assistance in towing the vessel to port, but Capt. Dexter said that with his supplies he believed he would be able to make a successful ending to his unprecedented long voyage.

LONG TIME OVERDUE.

Fears That the Edmund Has Met With Disaster—Wreck of the Burpee.

HALIFAX, Jan. 29.—A special from Digby says that little hope is entertained for the safety of the brigantine Edmund A. Capt. Crowell, from St. John, N. B., Nov. 27, for Barbados, lumber laden. She has not been heard from since sailing, and is believed to have met with disaster. She registered 160 tons. The crew were all foreigners.

The schooner Isaac Burpee, Capt. Haley, from New York, Jan. 15 for St. John, N. B., is a total loss with her cargo of coal, on the rocks a mile above Petit Passane in the Bay of Fundy. She was driven ashore on Sunday night in a gale. The crew were saved with their effects. The Burpee was 170 tons. She was insured for $25,000.

The new three-masted schooner Albertine of Windsor sailed for Little Glace Bay about Dec. 25 or New York with coal and has been given up as lost.

Sunk off Delaware Capes.

LEWES, Del., Jan. 29.—The British steamer Macedonia, from Philadelphia for Hampton Roads, came in collision with a three-masted schooner ten miles off Delaware Capes, sinking her. Her captain's son was drowned, and the captain was badly injured. The Macedonia passed up for Philadelphia with the survivors on board. The Macedonia has a hole stove in her bow.

CLASSED AS OUTLAWS.

Gen. Miles Hasn't a Very Exalted Opinion of Indians Who are with Him.

CHICAGO, Jan. 29.—When asked as to the final disposition to be made of the Indians now at Fort Sheridan, Gen. Miles said: "That is a matter to be determined in the future. Now that Sitting Bull and other chiefs are killed and I have most of the others here, the Indians are left, you might say, without a leader, and there is no danger of further outbreak on the reservations. These men whom I brought to Chicago are a crowd of outlaws. Three hundred of the Indians were sent to Fort Sully. The others are all under control of military authority and back on their reservations where they belong or on their way there."

A CARELESS FLAGMAN

Almost Causes the Killing of a Carload of Passengers.

JERSEY CITY, N. J., Jan. 29.—A horse car carrying fourteen passengers, besides the conductor and driver, had a very narrow escape from being run down at the Newark avenue crossing of the Pennsylvania railroad. The driver had barely time to put on the brake and turn the team aside when a train rushed past. One of the horses was dashed against the iron pillar of the new elevated railroad, but the car escaped damage, and the passengers made a simultaneous and frantic dash for the door, and several were severely bruised in the crush. The flagman was wholly to blame for the blunder.

Two Cents a Pound Is Correct.

NEW YORK, Jan. 29.—The United States board of general appraisers rendered a decision upon a test case as to the proper classification of goat hair under the tariff act of Oct. 1, 1890. The decision sustains the collector at St. Albans, Vt., who levied a duty of 12 cents a pound, under paragraph 377 of schedule K of the new act.

Australia Speaks Up.

LONDON, Jan. 29.—The colonies of Australia have asked the home government to accord them the privilege possessed by Canada of negotiating commercial treaties with foreign countries under the sanction of the foreign office.

Lymph and Blood Poisoning.

LONDON, Jan. 29.—A young English lady, suffering from consumption, who was treated by the Koch method for two weeks, has since died of blood poisoning.

THE NORTH SALEM TRAGEDY.

A Former Employee of Reed Tells Conflicting Stories—Murphy and Wood are Held for Murder.

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., Jan. 29.—The examination regarding the murder of Elbridge G. Reed, the milkman, at North Salem, on Thursday night last, was resumed at the court house before Coroner Taylor. The first witness called was Smith, who formerly worked for Reed on the farm and who claimed that Reed owed him $40. Smith was arrested by a Haverhill officer and brought to this city by Capt. Ryan.

He told conflicting stories regarding his working at Reed's farm and also as to his acquaintance with Murphy and Wood, and the entire morning's session was consumed in listening to his story. It is the opinion of officers conducting the case that Smith knows more about the matter than he is willing to divulge, and in all probability he will be detained, as was Frank Magee, who, after testifying, was held in $200 bonds for his appearance at the April term of court as a witness, and in default of bail was committed to jail.

Capt. Ryan of the Haverhill police was the next witness. He testified to the affair being reported to him by Officer Caswell, who met Barry on Washington square after he returned from North Salem. Capt. Ryan has also in his possession the confession made by Wood after being arrested by the Haverhill officers. This confession, which has been fully published, was introduced as testimony.

The jury rendered a verdict that Elbridge G. Reed came to his death at North Salem at the hands of Daniel Murphy and Frank Wood and that they be held as principals, while Mrs. Reed was an accessory after the fact was committed.

The prisoners, who are now confined in jail here, will be given a hearing in the police court next Saturday morning.

HERE'S A SENSATION!

A Statement That Hon. H. E. Taubeneck Was a Convict in Ohio.

COLUMBUS, O., Jan. 29.—Last week, William Dyer of the Ohio penitentiary, received a letter from Illinois, accompanied by a photograph of Hon. H. E. Taubeneck, a prominent member of the Illinois legislature. The photograph was recognized by officers and prisoners as that of W. H. Rodgers, who was received at the penitentiary from Wayne county in 1885, for forgery. He was paroled Aug. 7, 1888, on the strength of what has developed to be forged letters from the judge who sentenced him, and from Fred Woods of Indianapolis, who claimed he committed the crime for which Rodgers was convicted, and from P. E. Laughlin of Youngstown, O., who was to give him employment. He left the state as soon as he was released and has not been heard of since.

The description of Taubeneck and Rodgers tallies exactly as to build and complexion, and even to the fact that they each write with their left hand.

FEASTING ON HUMAN FLESH.

Famished Wolves Thinning the Population in a Portion of Manitoba.

WINNIPEG, Jan. 29.—Rev. J. Settee, missionary among the Indian tribes around Lakes Winnipeg and Manitoba, states that camps of Indians hunting on the east side of Lake Winnipeg, not very far from Blood Vein river, near Dog Head, were visited by a pack of wolves, about 100 in number. They attacked the camps and killed many Indians and devoured them. One Indian ended and killed twenty wolves, another Indian climbed up a tree with his gun and shot down twenty. One mounted a stake, which was not very high, and the wolves reached him and ate him. There is a great panic among the Indians in that quarter. They say that there are no deer, consequently the wolves are mad with hunger.

ALARM CLOCK SAVED THEM.

Seven Persons Have a Narrow Escape from Death by Suffocation.

NEW YORK, Jan. 29.—An alarm clock set for 5 o'clock yesterday morning saved seven persons from death. Policeman Lober and his wife and three children lived on the first floor of a two-story house, and Charles Schrotter, a contractor who was fitting up a store in the basement, left two charcoal stoves in full blast over night to dry the plastering. The fumes and gas rose through an imperfect door to the rooms above, so completely overcoming the sleepers that, when the clock went off and partly aroused Miss Lober, she got up with difficulty. The other members of the family and the Schrotters were partly unconscious, and it took some time, with a doctor's assistance, to bring them to.

Boston and Maine's Capital Stock.

AUGUSTA, Me., Jan. 29.—The railroad committee gave a hearing to William L. Putnam of Portland, attorney for the Boston and Maine railroad, appearing in favor of an act allowing the road to increase the capital stock. The committee decided to report "ought to pass" on the bill, and such report will be made by Mr. Ayer of Oakland.

Rather Heavy Sentences.

PATERSON, N. J., Jan. 29.—The Clifton race track managers, George Engeman, John Engeman, William Engeman, A. H. Battersby and Charles Sars, were each sentenced by Judge Dixon to serve a term of one year in the state prison at hard labor and to pay a fine of $500 each for maintaining a disorderly house at Clifton.

THE WEATHER INDICATIONS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29.—Forecast for New England: Increasing cloudiness; with rain or snow; southeasterly winds; stationary temperature.

COMMERCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

Latest Quotations of the New York and Boston Stock Markets—Jan. 29.

The New York stock market was active, comparatively speaking, and prices continued strong. The Santa Fe copper mine is looking promising again. A few Boston men advanced the bid for a round lot. The stock has had a considerable rise of late on the improved prospects.

EDITORIAL BRIEFS.

THE LEGISLATURE will be called upon this season to repeal the law requiring licensed liquor dealers to sell their beverages at tables, in connection with food. Since this law was dug out from beneath the rubbish of time, a year or so ago, it has been nothing but an eyesore and a shuttlecock. An attempt was made to enforce its provisions in Boston and elsewhere, but it reflected so much odium upon the authorities, that it was deemed advisable to let it severely alone.

Plainly, if the law remains upon the statute books, and is not enforced, it can be of no use to the cause of temperance. If it is used occasionally, it becomes a mere means of vengeance, a vehicle to vent the spite of any individual who may choose to employ it, which is not and never has been the object of penal legislation. To permit it to stand upon the books unenforced, except in the way alluded to, is tantamount to enacting special penal legislation; a thing that would neither be tolerated by the people nor sanctioned by the courts, and the sooner such unsavory statutes are expunged from our system of jurisprudence, the better for the welfare of the state. A few laws of obsolete character still remain upon the statute books, which, as long as they remain quiescent, are of no particular harm, but, we question if it would not be better that all such laws were eradicated. There is no objection to the continuance of a law simply because there appears to be no use for it, but where a law must manifestly work an injustice if enforced, in the ordinary cases and has no particular value except in extreme cases, of which the self-constituted prosecutor and not a dispassionate tribunal is to be the judge, it is meet that the legislature interfere and repeal the obnoxious statute, and if any special legislation to meet extreme cases is necessary and proper, let the General Court enact such law and in so doing leave the discretion, if there is to be any, to the courts.

In the case in question, there can be no dispute that the law is so obnoxious in its provisions, that a general enforcement would be a certain guaranty of its repeal by the next legislation after such a movement was set on foot, meantime many unfortunate individuals, those generally having least means to prolong litigation, would be obliged to suffer while richer neighbors would undoubtedly escape.

As an act of advancement in civil government, we believe the law referred to should be repealed, and if while the legislature is devoting its thoughts to liquor laws, an act enabling personal search can be granted us to aid in suppressing the illicit sale of alcoholic beverages, a gain will truly be realized to the cause of temperance and good morals.

OUR SCHOOLS.

OLD PARSON MILTON, of Newburyport in his pulpit anathemas used to say: "There is no standing still in sin, you must grow better or worse." He might have added, "There is no standing still in anything." For the law of life is constant effort or retrogression. This law applies with great force to educational matters, and only by constant effort, by frequent investigation of the latest and best methods of instruction, and by judicious criticism can any community keep near the van of educational progress. The two great immediate educational wants of Peabody we hold to be, a truant school and a superintendent. Notwithstanding the assumption of a certain paper in a neighboring city that Lynn is the only place in the county that really needs and asks for a truant school, we think that it will be conceded by every one who is, or has been connected with our public schools, that to Peabody such an institution is an absolute necessity. The matter of expense, which has been made so much of by the opponents of the school, is but a small one and there is no room for the charge of extravagance that has been properly applied to some recent county expenditures. The mere fact of the existence of such a place will, in a great measure, accomplish its purpose and the commitments to it, from our town, would probably not exceed one or two annually. Nothing else that could be done at so small an expense would so lighten and make effective the labors of our teachers. There being little chance for argument against the first of our propositions, we come to the other, concerning which there may appear to be more room for difference of judgment. We say may "appear" for we believe that no person who has given careful attention to the working of our school system, will deny that the work of the school committee, however conscientious and capable its composition is, and must be unsystematic, desultory and inefficient to a great degree. Its work may be compared to that of a six horse team each animal pulling independently and without concert. No member can give more than a small fraction of his time to the work and that only at the convenience of his private business, and organized work is almost impossible. To cut off two unnecessary years from the school course after the Board had decided that such a reduction was a necessity, was a work of several years. Only by a competent superintendent can the school system be managed in a thorough and business-like manner. He can and ought to know the work and standing not only of classes but of individual pupils as compared with that of other schools and of other towns. He should be able to keep our schools well abreast of the swift wave of educational progress of the age. The committee man knows that he and his coadjutors cannot do these things and frequently resigns or refuses re-election solely for this reason. Now an excellent opportunity is offered of dividing the expense of a superintendent with our neighboring cities or towns, his work must necessarily be much more effective than that of the best committee, at an expense but little greater, and we believe our citizens will act for the future welfare of their children if they will make the change.

ESSEX COUNTY.

The crew of the schooner Henrietta which arrived in Gloucester Sunday night, have reported the story that Capt. Charles Keene, her commander, sailed away and left a helpless wreck, the Albertha, off Monhegan. It looks as if the story might have been fabricated as spite. The captain claims the crew wanted him to take the disabled craft and claim salvage, which was neither practicable or necessary, and that the craft sailed up into a bay he was unacquainted with, when he did not dare follow. The true facts will probably be learned later, if the disabled craft or the crew ever reach shore.

Schooner Edith Rowe, of Gloucester, went ashore at Burin, N. H., Sunday night. She is a total wreck.

The Thompson Electric Welding Co., is to erect a new building for its government work.

Charles Creighton of Lynn, escaped from the Ipswich house of correction on Monday.

James W. Robinson of Beverly and Michael Connors of Danvers met with a sleighing accident in Lynn Monday night. The sleigh was wrecked but no one was injured.

The Emerson Club of Salem, held a meeting at the Universalist church, Tuesday evening. A musical and literary entertainment was the order.

The annual meeting of the Stephen Abbott Association, owners of the Cadet armory, of Salem, was held this week. The reports showed the organization to be in a good condition. The old board of officers was re-elected.

The annual meeting of the Bertram Home for Aged Men was held in Salem Tuesday. The report states that the institution has been filled to its utmost capacity all the year, and more room is greatly needed to accommodate many deserving cases. W. G. Webb is president, E. D. Kopes vice-president, and N. H. Millett, clerk and treasurer.

The Newburyport Standard reaches us every day. It is full of news, and has a good general appearance. It has reached its 25th issue, being started on January 5th, 1891.

The Lithoid Works at Newburyport, have shut down. They will probably remove their plant to Springfield.

Amesbury has been quite free from tramps since adopting the plan of sawing wood to pay for keeping.

Henry Porter of Bradford, head brakeman on the Boston & Maine, was thrown against a switch bar and had the flesh scraped off his arm from elbow to shoulder last Saturday.

The county commissioners have made up their estimates for the county tax to be awarded by the General Court. The total is $222,890 as against $205,000 the amount regularly fixed each year for some time past. The increase is said to be due to the insertion of an item of $20,000 for the reduction of the county debt. This same thing was done last year, but there came an unanticipated request from Lynn for the extension of Washington street as a county road to Nahant, and as Lynn had not had any assistance from the county for its roads for forty years previous, the money was cheerfully granted, but it wiped out the laudable attempt to reduce the debt. A similar case occurred the year before when there was an item inserted for a reduction of the indebtedness, and Lawrence came down for $27,000 for its bridges.

Charles J. Brockway, a leading merchant of Newburyport in former years, died at that city last Saturday, at the age of 85 years. He had been connected with the house of Wm. Bartlett, who died just 50 years ago.

Mayor Rantoul has been before the Committee on Mercantile affairs the past week, asking for general legislation, to enable Salem and other municipalities to remove poles from the highways, regardless of vested rights. The hearing was continued until Feb. 10.

At the special town meeting to be held in Manchester next Monday evening, the committee on water supply will report that an aqueduct water supply can be obtained from Sawmill Brook; and water works complete, with duplicate pumps, stand pipe, hydrants, etc., can be constructed for $114,000.

The first Jewish wedding that has ever taken place in Haverhill occurred at the Jewish Temple on Sunday afternoon at 5 o'clock, when Samuel Weinstein and Miss Fannie Slonimski were married by Rabbi Marcus before two hundred spectators. Following the ceremony a wedding reception and ball occurred.

Rowley has voted not to accept the Australian system of balloting for town officers, on the ground of its additional expense, which by the way is the only well founded objection to that system. Like other good things, it costs something to adopt it.

At the Ipswich town meetings on Monday evening the legislative act, relative to the town's water supply failed to receive the two-thirds vote required for its acceptance—the vote being 182 for and 174 against.

The annual report of Salem Hospital shows the following admissions during the past year; Salem 245, Peabody 12, Beverly 11, Danvers and Marblehead 5 each, Lynn 3, other Massachusetts towns 16, and other States 5. They are of the following nativity: Ireland 92, Salem 61, other Massachusetts towns 59, other States 31, Nova Scotia 27, Canada 9, New Brunswick and Scotland 4 each, England and Sweden 3 each, Germany, Norway and Italy 2 each, and Austria, France and Russia 1 each.

W. K. Bigelow, of the well-known firm, Almy, Bigelow & Washburn, Salem, starts for a month's trip to Florida next week.

Ex-Governor J. Q. A. Brackett is said to be a candidate for the Boston postoffice. The story as told is to the effect that the politicians, seeing, as they believe, no probability that either of the candidates now in the field was going to be acceptable to Senator Hoar, concluded that in order to displace General Corse some such man as Mr. Brackett must be taken up. Word to this effect, in fact, came on from Washington, and an effort, it is said, will be made to have the ex-governor go into the contest, in which case it is considered absolutely certain that his appointment will be at once recommended to the president.

Last week the semi-annual graduation of the State Normal School at Salem, took place. The following are the graduates to whom diplomas were granted: Alice M. Abbott, Newmarket, N. H.; Florence J. Alley, Cambridge; Alice B. Bodwell, Salem; Jane R. K. Brown, Tyngsborough; Jennie R. Brown, Pigeon Cove; Lizzie Campbell, Danvers; Fannie C. Carleton, Beaver Brook; Ellen B. Collier, Somerville; Mabel E. Cutts, Kittery Point, Me.; Alice S. Graham, Manchester; Mary A. Grant, Salem; Florence C. Haskell, Manchester; Louise F. Heinritz, Holyoke; Annie G. Hughes, Boston; Lillie S. Keniston, Everett; Alice M. Layton, Salem; Hattie M. Legro, Malden; Susie L. Lord, Salem; Jessie W. Low, Essex; Ellen G. Moriarty, Salem; Nellie M. Parsons, Saugus; Bertha J. Patten, Lynn; Emma Ruddock, Groveland; Eva G. Simpson, Gloucester; Emma L. Stetson, Salem; Jennie E. Sutherland, Salem; Mary E. G. Walsh, Salem; Mary H. Wilkins, Middleton; Abigail F. Wilson, Peabody, and Hattie B. Witherell, Lowell.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL.

Rich & Harris's, Haulon, Volter and Martinetti English Pantomime and Novelty company have had a perfect ovation at the Boston Theatre the past week. Several nights standing room was all the ticket office afforded. If you want to enjoy a hearty laugh send early for tickets next week.

"Ship Ahoy" still continues to draw at the Park Theatre.

The popularity of "The Solicitor" at the Museum is unabated. Don't fail to see the popular comedy before it is too late.

At the Grand Opera House next week, James B. Mackie in the New York Musical Burlesque, "Grimes Cellar Door," will be the attraction. Matinees will be held Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday at 2 o'clock.

At the Hollis Street, Fannie Davenport is drawing immense houses as she always does. Her presentation of Cleopatra is a marked success, even when compared with her former attainments.

Monday, the Globe's curtain rises upon Rose Coughlin in a new play, entitled "Lady Barter." Sales commenced this week briskly.

Next Saturday at 1 o'clock begins a Grand Operatic Festival Matinee at Music Hall. Subscription sale of seats commenced Wednesday.

Charles H. Hoyt's latest offering to the public, "A Trip to Chinatown," which he is pleased to designate 'a musical trifle' is one of the best and most enjoyable of his several productions. Mr. Thompson has arranged for its presentation at the Boston Theatre for a limited season, beginning Feb. 9th. Wherever it has been given, press and public have united in heartiest eulogiums, and the New York Herald says: "It is just the sort of entertainment to drive away all thought of storm, rheumatism, pneumonia and money stringency. Light and purposeless as a bit of down, it is blown breezily in one's face and tickles it. There is no horse play worth noticing in it, but a rippling stream of sparkling melody runs through the performance, broken continually by the sharp tones of witty lines. The first section is as bright as the eyes of the pretty girls who interpret it; the second part is loaded to the neck with specialties. The third part ends the notable performance." The Massachusetts Press Association will be guests of Messrs. Thompsons and Hoyt on the evening of Feb. 10th.

Max Maretzek's new book, "Sharps and Flats," has charmed musical New York. The gifted composer is often seen on Broadway as chipper as he was a score of years ago. Report has it that he will conduct the Italian opera at the Metropolitan Opera House under Henry E. Abbey and he could find no better man the world over.

Emma Mabelle Baker is to be the new prima donna in the re-organized Emma Abbott troupe, which will open in New York in a week or two.

Sarah Bernhardt will remain at the Garden Theatre for four weeks, before beginning her tour, and during that time she will be seen in "La Tosca," "Cleopatra," and "Joan of Arc."

"Natural Gas" opened at the San Francisco Bush Street Theatre last Monday and made an unmistakable success.

"Tote" Ducrow, the well-known clown has met a perfect whirlwind of success at Havana.

Dora Wiley, the sweet singer of Maine, has arrived in Boston from the Sunny South.

Marcus Mayer is one of the few managers in the profession who cannot be easily replaced. His withdrawal from the employ of Henry Abbey will be felt when that manager begins his tour of this country with Sarah Bernhardt. Mr. Mayer is on the tidal wave of prosperity, and despite the numerous attractions he controls, never loses his equanimity.

Modjeska will have a new piece next season on the subject of "Marie Antoinette."

Edwin Arden closes the season of "Raglan's Way" on Saturday, owing to illness.

The trustees of the Peabody Institute have opened the bids for remodeling the library. There were four bids, the lowest being about $7,000. This, with a system of steam heat, would bring the cost up to about $10,000. The board will meet to decide this matter this afternoon.

At the annual meeting of the incorporators of the Warren Five Cent Savings Bank the following officers were elected on Wednesday: President, Rufus H. Brown; Vice Presidents, Stephen Blaney, Chas. B. Farley, George F. Osborne, Amos Merrill, J. A. Lord, C. W. Osborn; Trustees, R. H. Brown, Stephen Blaney, Chas. B. Farley, Geo. F. Osborn, Amos Merrill, John A. Lord, C. Warren Osborn, Benj. S. Wheeler, William H. Little, Alex B. Merrill, Geo. S. Osborn, Mathl. Symonds, Aaron F. Clark, Albert A. Messer, John Pinder, Wm. P. Clark, Reuben G. Nelson, Albert H. Merrill, Franklin Osborn, Leverett Poor, Clerk, Albert H. Merrill.

A good deal has been said, of late years, about "unworthy pensioners" bums &c. Doubtless in an army of a million and a half of men there must have been many unscrupulous men. It would be impossible to be otherwise, and this class there were more survivors in proportion to their numbers than of their worthier comrades. But to stigmatize the veterans of the late war as a class, is rank ingratitude and injustice. The records of the struggle, and to a still greater degree its unwritten story discloses a courage, devotion to principle and patriotism, unequalled in the history of the world. We take pleasure in laying before our readers, as a bit of evidence of the truth of this proposition, some extracts from the official discharge of a worthy and unpretending citizen of our own town, who is too modest to have his name published "I certify that— participated in the following battles and skirmishes" here follow a list of forty-seven engagements, beginning with Bull Run, and including Malvern Hill, South Mountain, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Cold Harbor, Yellow Tavern, and Winchester, supplemented with the following endorsement: Character, excellent. Has been a faithful soldier during these enlistments. Always ready, sober and reliable" signed by the Captain of the Co. This veteran is a poor working man, has met with two serious accidents during the past year, breaking a leg and splintering an arm, and as yet, has never received a cent's worth of aid of any kind from the United States Government.

Jacob H. Gallinger, who has been elected United States senator from New Hampshire in succession to Henry W. Blair, was born at Cornwall, Ontario, on the 28th of March 1836. As a farmer boy he attended the common school and afterwards became a printer but while still a young man he began to study medicine. He has practised since 1853 and has obtained some eminence in his profession. Mr. Gallinger is generally recognized as a man of learning and of more than ordinary force of character and executive ability. But it is in political life that he is best and most widely known. He was several times member of the State Legislature. After a hot contest with Charles H. Burns, in 1882 he was made chairman of the Republican State Central Committee, and proved a most able manager. Two years later he was elected to the National Congress. He took a prominent part in party debates and made not a little reputation in the investigation of the government printing office in Washington. Dr. Gallinger was chairman of the New Hampshire delegation to the Republican National Convention in Chicago in 1888 and seconded the nomination of Mr. Harrison. Dr. Gallinger has always been credited with great animosity toward Senator Chandler, and in 1882 he received no votes in the Republican Senatorial caucus against Mr. Chandler, the nominee. His present victory is looked upon as a personal defeat of Senator Chandler.

Essex Congregational Club.

The Essex Congregational Club held its first meeting of 1891 on Monday evening, at Salem. Supper was served by Caterer Killam, promptly at 6 o'clock, 188 members being seated at the tables. The divine blessing was invoked by Rev. A. W. Moore of Lynn.

At the close of the banquet, Miss Lillian Walker rendered most acceptable piano music.

The annual reports were presented, Secretary Clark's, as usual abounding in witty points. Treasurer Hayward's report shows a balance of $68.87 on hand. It was reported that the smallest attendance during the year was 146, and the largest 343. Mr. Clark, for the executive committee, gave one of his characteristic bright sketches of the year's doings with the well grounded sarcasms woven in so neatly that even the victims could not have felt otherwise than happy over the illusions. It contained an incidental recommendation here and there and these were referred to a committee of three—Rev. E. C. Ewing of Danvers, J. K. Cole of Peabody and Rev. W. E. Strong of Beverly. The report of the lookout committee was short and to the point—they had nothing to do and did it. Mrs. Ellen Parker and John P. Tilton of Salem, and Dr. Phil. Eveleth, Danie Appleton and James M. Parker of Marblehead were elected members. The following officers were elected:

President—Rev. De Witt S. Clark Salem.

Vice Presidents—Chas. W. Page, M. D., of Danvers, Rev. A. W. Moore of Lynn.

Secretary—Rev. Sherrod Soule of Beverly.

Assistant Secretary—E. W. Nichols of Salem.

Treasurer—C. H. Hayward of Salem. Executive Committee—Rev. E. C. Ewing of Danvers, Jefferson K. Cole of Peabody, Rev. W. E. Strong of Beverly, Arthur M. Mowry of Salem.

Nominating Committee—Edward Hutchinson of Danvers, A. W. Bacheller of Gloucester, James Trefren of Lynn, Gardner P. Balch of Swampscott, Rev. Stacy Fowler of Cliftondale.

Lookout Committee—Rev. J. C. Aivord of Hamilton, Wallace P. Perry of Danvers, Fred L. Wallis of Beverly. Addresses by various members of the Club followed.

PROBATE COURT.

Wills of the following persons were proved on Monday. Samuel C. Courrier of Newburyport; John Lee, Lawrence; Emily A. Loaf, Newburyport. There were 2 administrations granted.

Inventories of the following estates were filed: John P. Andrews of Salem, $126,160 49, of which $119,660 49 is personal property; James Chamberlain, Salem, $53,785 01; same in trust for Walter Gray Phippen of Salem, $25,963 52; Elijah V. Cross, Lawrence; $12 608 37; Daniel Harrigan, Amesbury, $2764; Joseph G. Lowd, Salem, $2070.

COURT OF INSOLVENCY.

Charles J. Hollis, of Lynn, merchant has filed his voluntary petition in insolvency. He owes $3783.64. His assets are back accounts, a horse and an equity in real estate, which to a greater or less extent are exempt from attachment levy for execution, and on which there is a mortgage for $2150 to Charles E. Basford and Frank E. Perkins.

A. Sawtell & Co., of Boston, have filed a petition to place Ruth Brothers, grocers of Salem, in insolvency, upon a balance of account of $128.75.

SCROFULA

Is that impurity of the blood which produces unsightly lumps or swellings in the neck; which causes running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which develops ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or "tumors;" which, fastening upon the lungs, causes consumption and death. It is the most ancient of all diseases, and very few persons are entirely free from it.

How Can It Be CURED

By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the remarkable cures it has accomplished, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. If you suffer from scrofula, try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"Every spring my wife and children have been troubled with scrofula, my little boy, three years old, being a terrible sufferer. Last spring he was one mass of sores from head to feet. Weall took Hood's Sarsaparilla, and all have been cured of the scrofula. My little boy is entirely free from sores, and all four of my children look bright and healthy." W. B. MERRILL & MACKINTIRE, 220 ESSEX ST., SALEM.

A Warning.
Messrs. Albert Eaton and Ber Lord, clerks at Pollard & Watson's drug store, had a thrilling experience recently. The two young men went into the basement of the store to draw two gallons of citric acid from a large demijohn. A gallon tin measure was used, and the fluid quickly burned through the can and spread upon the floor. Mr. Eaton endeavored to transfer the liquid to the sink, and in so doing caused the acid to fly in every direction. In an instant the basement was filled with smoke and the young men inhaled the poisonous fumes. They both were obliged to leave off work and were seriously ill for several hours. The poisonous fumes also penetrated the store and Hotel Webster.

ARRESTED!
Charles A. Daley was arrested last evening for stealing from the store of Shiefman a bottle of Sulphur Bitters. Before the court this morning, upon being asked why he should steal, he stated that his mother had Rheumatism, and that it was the only medicine that helped her and being out of money and work was the cause of his stealing. As this was his first offence he was put on probation.—Newark News.

Painful Accident.
A painful accident happened to James Hyde, a pressman at the Lawrence American Job Office one day last week. He was running a Gordon press, where an envelope slipped between the feed board and platen, he put his hand beneath the press to catch it and his fingers were impinged by the roll. The machinery was stopped, and it was found necessary to pry up the roll before he could be released. So firmly was he bound that a piece of iron was wrenched off by the strain. He was taken to the hospital and the injured members dressed. He will lose the first two fingers of the right hand.

Burglar—Now, fork out. Gimme yer watch. Now yer pocketbook. Yer silver match safe. Now yer small change. Polite victim (an ex-merchant)—Anything else today, sir? Shall I send these?

A Newport Incident.

One of the cliff cottagers, as they are called in Newport—the cliff cottages being the most costly and luxurious marine villas in the world—was said to have told an amusing and suggestive story of his own experience.

It is the immemorial right of the public in Rhode Island to have access anywhere to the shore, that the right of every one to the common property of the sea may not be abridged. The beautiful walk along the cliff, extending through all the finest estates in Newport between the houses and the shore, is due to this privilege. The result is not altogether agreeable to the proprietors, because the excursion trains and boats are constantly bringing crowds of loiterers and pleasure-seekers, who choose for their lunch the choice spots along this promenade. One day a party of rural visitors arrived on the cottager's grounds to lunch, and not content to restrain their steps to the walk to which they had a right, they construed their rights freely, and under the guidance of an elderly dame wandered over the lawn, and approaching the house as lunch-time drew near, ascended the broad seaward piazza, and disposing themselves upon the chairs and sofas, spread their lunch upon the piazza tables and made ready for the repast.

The owner, who from within had watched the proceeding with some perturbation of spirits, then appeared, in a highly imperative mood, upon the piazza, and addressing himself to the elderly dame, who was evidently the commander-in-chief of the marauders, said, with extremely strained politeness, that strangers had an undoubted right to his house and his piazza and his tables and sofas and chairs, and he should be exceedingly obliged if they would retire immediately. As he spoke, he confronted the intruders with threatening severity of aspect. But the general commanding turned upon her benevolent spectacles, and said, with the savvy of an honest grandmother: "Why, law! you would not turn us off, would ye? Sakes alive! ye'd be welcome to eat your lunch on the piazza, or in the house, or anywhere you pleased, up our way. And she beamed upon him with such benignity that, wholly unprepared for a sunburst instead of a storm, he was speechless, and, greatly amused, withdrew from the field.—Harper's Magazine.

The Potato Festival in Bolivia.
Professor Squier tells us that he happened to visit Tiabuanaco during the annual chuño (potato) festival of the modern Indians—the vegetable, as all the world knows, being indigenous to this portion of South America, though it has been vastly improved in some of the countries to which it has been transplanted. He says that the people were dancing in the public square, in front of the cathedral, to the music of drums and tambourines, and were wearing enormous head-dresses resembling umbrellas, made mostly of feathers wrought into the form of flowers. Each group of men was accompanied by a number of female dancers, the latter wearing hats with wide, stiff brims, the crowns surrounded by fanlike representations of the rising sun, set with small looking glasses and tipped with clusters of feather flowers. All the women wore sky-blue dresses, and over the left shoulder of each was tied a scarf of hand-woven wool, striped with brilliant colors.

I WILL NEVER!
Allow myself to suffer again what I have suffered for the last year. That vile disease, Dyspepsia, gave me no comfort. I could not eat nor enjoy anything. The doctors amounted to nothing; nothing seemed to relieve me, until I used a bottle of Sulphur Bitters. Four bottles made me well.—Joseph Batchelder Mast r of Schooner C. A. Baker.

The chuño festival is participated in by all the Indians far and near and is a curious mingling of the rites of the heathen incas and the ceremonies of the church. Though antedating the christianization of the country it is carried on today under the control of the priests who, through the three hundred and fifty years that have intervened since the conquest, have always found it expedient to retain some traces of the ancient customs.—Washington Star.

A thief who was sent to prison in Ohio was pressed to confess the particulars of his crime, but he replied: The man who confesses to anything is a fool. No matter how guilty he is or what proofs he may bring, he has only to deny his guilt and a fair share of the public will sympathize with him.

HAND OF DEATH Beckons Secretary Windom to the Other World.

WAS APPARENTLY ENJOYING GOOD HEALTH

And Had Just Concluded a Speech at the Dinner of the New York Board of Trade—Scene of Gladness Suddenly Changed to One of Grief—How the News Was Broken to His Bereaved Wife and Daughters—President Harrison and Members of His Cabinet Unite in Praising the Endearing Qualities of Their Friend—The Statesman's Career.

NEW YORK, Jan. 30.—Death sat unseen at the banquet of the Board of Trade and Transportation at Delmonico's last night, but before the evening passed, claimed its victim—William Windom, secretary of the United States treasury. When Mr. Windom's death was announced the gathering was at once adjourned.

The dinner began at 6 o'clock and was over soon after 9 o'clock, when Secretary Windom was introduced as the first speaker. He entertained his audience of 300, including many prominent men, with an elaborate oration outlining the financial policy of the government, and sat down amid loud applause. Judge Arnoux then arose, and was in the midst of a speech introducing Secretary Bayard, when some one cried out "Look at Secretary Windom."

The speech was broken short, and every eye was turned on the gentleman. He had collapsed in his chair and was falling to the floor. His face was ghastly and a cry of horror arose among those about him. There was an immediate rush toward Mr. Windom's chair, but several doctors who were guests at the dinner surrounded the prostrate man and drove the others back. They were Drs. S. A. Robinson, Durant, Whitney, Fisher and Bisop. Dr. Robinson bent down and, making close examination, discovered that Mr. Windom's heart was still beating. By his order the dying secretary was carried into a room adjoining the banquet hall, and there placed on a table.

Messengers were hastily dispatched for electric batteries and as many as four were applied to his body, which was rapidly growing cold. It was at exactly 10:05 p. m. when this occurred and for fifteen minutes the electric shocks were applied incessantly but without success. At 10:11 p. m. Judge Arnoux came out of the room and announced to the diners that Secretary Windom, whom they had had the pleasure of hearing only a few minutes before, had breathed his last.

"He is dead!" was the fearful announcement that was sent through the gayly decked ball room. The words went to the heart of every man who heard them. Could they believe it? The brilliant orator of a few minutes before, aglow with enthusiasm, predicting his future policy in the treasury, was only a mass of clay. His voice was forever silenced, and his last words were for his country.

A silence fell upon the men who were only a few minutes before clamoring for news of Mr. Windom. Judge Arnoux, in retiring, had announced that Mr. Windom had only fainted and it was not thought that his illness was as serious as it proved to be. The secretary had succumbed to an attack of the heart. He had been for a long time a sufferer from heart disease and only last Monday was visited by a shock which, however, passed away without causing him much inconvenience.

When it was officially announced that the secretary was dead, Secretary Tracy at once went to the nearest telegraph office and sent a message to President Harrison informing him of the sad event and requesting him to communicate with Mrs. Windom and have her start on the 11:10 train for New York.

The body was removed to the apartment in the Fifth Avenue hotel which the secretary had lately occupied. It was watched over during the night by Collector Erhardt, Private Secretary Hendley, Attorney General Miller, Secretary Tracy, F. H. Thurber, E. D. Harper and Dr. Robinson.

A special train took the body to Washington this morning, a delegation from the Board of Trade and Transportation accompanying it.

THE NEWS IN WASHINGTON.

President Harrison and the Public Generally Greatly Shocked.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—The announcement of the sudden death of Secretary Windom in New York gave almost as great a shock to his official friends and associates as did the shooting of President Garfield to the members of his official household. All who heard the news were profoundly shocked. When the sad intelligence was communicated to President Harrison at the White House he was greatly distressed and almost completely overcome. He immediately ordered his carriage and went at once to the house of the postmaster general, but a few blocks away, where a cabinet dinner had been in progress and from which he had returned only a few minutes before. A reception had followed the dinner, so the guests had not all dispersed.

Mrs. Windom and her two daughters and Mrs. Colgate of New York, who is visiting them, were among those present at the reception. The president had a hurried conversation with Secretaries Baine and Proctor and the postmaster general and told them of the grief that had befallen them. They then privately informed Mrs. Colgate of Mr. Windom's death, and she, without exciting the suspicions of Mrs. Windom and her daughters, succeeded in getting them to their carriage and home.

The president, Secretary Proctor and Postmaster General Wanamaker entered a carriage and followed. When Mrs. Windom and her daughters reached the house Mrs. Colgate gently broke the dreadful news to the bereaved widow and her daughters. Mrs. Windom was completely overcome and had to be assisted to her chamber. The shock was a terrible one. The president and the members of his cabinet who were present, extended their sympathies to the stricken family and offered their services to them.

The news of the death spread with wonderful rapidity, and although the hour was late, quite a large number of friends

John Mackay Soundly Thrashes a Man Who He Claims, Circulated False Stories About His Wife.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 28.—John W. Mackay makes the following statement in regard to an encounter yesterday in the Nevada bank with C. W. Bonyng, a capitalist, formerly a member of the San Francisco Stock Exchange and in late years a resident of London:

"Long ago I suspected that Bonyng was the instigator of certain attacks on Mrs. Mackay which appeared in certain papers in New York and London. Having procured that proof that this was true I determined to punish him the first time I met him. Yesterday, when entering the president's room in the Nevada bank by the back door, of which I, as director, have a key, I saw Bonyng sitting at a desk with Mr. Hellman. As I entered Bonyng turned and saw me. He had a malignant look on his face and made a threatening movement. I struck out with my right arm and hit him in the left eye. Then I hit him again and called upon him to put up his fists and fight like a man. Instead of doing so, he fell and clasped me about the knees like a coward. Blood, which was flowing freely from his nose, poured all over my pantaloons and upon the floor. My clerks then rushed in and removed him. The sound thrashing he received he well deserved for circulating those stories about Mrs. Mackay. I'm not so handy with my fists as I used to be twenty-five years ago, but I have a little fight left in me yet, and I will allow no man to malign me or mine."

Mr. Mackay was around as usual, none the worse for the affray, while Bonyng was confined to his room, nursing his black and swollen eyes and several contusions elsewhere on his face.

HOW WE SUFFER.

The Man Who Wants to Know-You-Know and His Victims.

I never read of a railroad or steamboat disaster without secretly hoping that The-man-who-wants-to-know-you-know is numbered in the victims. I don't say anything against a person storing his mind with knowledge, but what I object to is the way that knowledge is sometimes fired off at a man who is lame and can't make his escape.

For instance, our train going east was flagged at midnight and held for an hour because of a wreck on the road. Everybody in the sleeping car awoke, and most of the people got up and dressed, although it would have been common sense to turn over and go to sleep again. One of the passengers was a large, portly man, who had formerly driven hogs to market. By the exercise of economy, perseverance, virtue, tenderness and a dozen or so other attributes he had climbed up until he owned a slaughter house and bought the hogs which others drove. This was not only a good thing on him, but he was legally entitled to feel proud of it. He had just finished telling a crowd of passengers in a loud voice that he was figuring to buy that railroad and change the management when The-man-who-wants-to-know-you-know suddenly interrupted him with:

"Excuse me, my friend, but can I ask you a question?"

"Certainly, sir," was the courteous reply. "I was talking with a chap in the depot at Buffalo, and we couldn't exactly agree about Mohammed, the Arab. He was, as you know, originally called Halabi, and was born about the year 570. What we differed about was his birthplace; as I have it, it was Mecca; as he had it, it was Syria. What is your opinion?"

The man who had climbed up the ladder of life by virtue of his own integrity turned pale, looked helplessly around, and finally sank down a crushed and helpless victim, and he didn't even look up when an old farmer remarked to his wife:

"Good 'nuff for him. If a feller hain't studied algebra and geography what's the use of his puttin' on so much style?"

Again, there was a party of us on the promenade deck of a Hudson river steamer. The prominent one of the crowd was a pale-faced, weak eyed young man who had been all over Europe, and who had attended college long enough to learn everything worth knowing. He talked very glibly of the Stone Age, the Drift Period and all that, and as he came along to the Palisades he observed that:

"The true igneous rocks belong either to the trappean or volcanic divisions, while the mass you see before you is composed, to a very large extent, of stratified metamorphic rocks."

I looked around to see if The-man-who-wants-to-know-you-know was present. He was. He sat with his chair tipped back and his feet on the rail. His suit was a very loud check, and he had the general bearing of a man who trades in horses and buys sheepskins of farmers. He listened with great interest, and when the young man had finished he squared his chair around and said:

"Professor, you are right; you have hit the bull's eye; you know it all."

"Aw!" replied the young man. "I'm glad to have met you, because those things have bothered me, and because I want to ask you a question."

"Aw—proceed."

"You have heard of Scipio, of course."

"Aw!"

"Killed, you know, in the year 137 B. C."

"Aw!"

"Of course you have heard of Basil, surnamed the Great? Greek, you know, and born in the year 329 in Cappadocia. Pretty good fellow, I guess, but wouldn't bet on it."

"Aw! What is your question, sah?"

"I was getting to it. Suppose you owned a horse?"

"Aw!"

"No matter about the color or sex. You are awake at night by his stamping in the stable."

"Aw!"

"You go out and find him very ill. Now, sir, can you tell me how to inform myself whether he is suffering with a calcareous carbonate of soluble obliquity or is attacked with a herbivorous transition of inter-stratified exhalations?"

The young man rose up, looked around him to take a last farewell of earth, and then plunged over the rail into the river. The steamer was stopped, and every effort made to rescue him, but he did not want to be rescued. He wanted to sit down on the bottom of the Hudson and have a good long think with himself.—M. Quad in Detroit Free Press.

It Was of No Consequence.

"It occurs to me, Miss Twilling," said the young man, "that in the relations which will some day exist between us the thought of—ahem!—money might assume undue proportions. I should like to think that any discussion as to my salary would give rise to any painful scenes."

"Believe me, Henry," said the young girl, as she placed her hand gently on his arm, "that never under any circumstances would I allow such a little thing as that to come between us."—Harper's Bazar.

Blank and Blank Checks.

"Yes," said the merchant to his bookkeeper, "I always carry about me a blank check which I can fill out, wherever I may be, when I run out of cash. You should do the same."

"In my case," replied Mr. Ledger, "it would be apt to remain blank, blank," and his cake and coffee lunch began to pain him in the chest.—American Stationer.

Applied Sonambulism.

Mrs. Bendix—Yes, my husband is a somnambulist.

Mrs. Kowler—How dreadful!

"Not at all. You see, when he gets up in the night and walks the floor I put the baby into his arms and he never knows it."—New York Sun.

Circumstances Alter Cases.

Are You Married?

A Husband should make it his business to see that his home is comfortably furnished. His wife will think more of him for it, knowing that he has her welfare at heart while he is away.

Perhaps even now, the house needs another chair or two, or a new lounge, or a carpet, or maybe a few pictures to brighten it up and make it more cheerful. Look around and see, and remember that we are the people to furnish them to you at LOWEST LIVING PRICES, and on Easy Terms of Payment, if you wish it that way.

A Wife need never be without that little piece of furniture which she wants, if she would call her husband's attention to the fact, and get him to learn OUR price for it; and if money is a little tight with him, why, remind him of our easy payment plan by which he can enjoy the benefits of its use while paying for it. Look through the house, and send us a list of what you would like to have. We'll quote you prices that will surprise you.

N.B.—The fact that we are the largest house-furnishing establishment in the world is a pretty good recommendation.

WILLIAM H. JELLY, President.

CHARLES H. HENDERSON, Treas.

MR. WINDOM'S CAREER.

Member of Congress Many Years and Twice Secretary of the Treasury.

William Windom was born in Belmont county, O., May 10, 1837. He received an academic education, studied law at Mt. Vernon, O., and was admitted to the bar in 1859. In 1852 he became prosecuting attorney for Knox county, but in 1855 he removed to Minnesota, and soon after he was chosen to congress from that state as a Republican, serving from 1859 till 1869. In that body he served two terms as chairman of the committee on Indian affairs and also was at the head of special committee to visit the western tribes in 1865 and of that on the conduct of the commissioner of Indian affairs in 1867. In 1870 he was appointed to the United States senate to fill the unexpired term of Daniel S. North, deceased, and he was subsequently chosen for the term that ended in 1877. He was re-elected for the one that closed in 1883 and resigned in 1881 to enter the cabinet of President Garfield as secretary of the treasury, but retired on the accession of President Arthur in the same year and was elected by the Minnesota legislature to serve the remainder of his term in the senate. In that body Mr. Windom acted as chairman of the committees on appropriations, foreign affairs and transportation. He was appointed secretary of the treasury by President Harrison and has since served in that capacity.

WILLIAM WINDOM.

He left Washington in the morning, apparently in perfect health, to attend the banquet of the Board of Trade and Transportation at New York last evening. The news of Secretary Windom's death was first communicated to the president by the Associated Press, and he was so shocked and overcome by the sudden announcement that he was unable to say anything with respect to the loss he has suffered.

Providence Is Helpful.
PROVIDENCE, Jan. 30.—The delegation headed by Governor Davis, representing business associations, which went to Washington to represent the public sentiment of Providence relative to a new postoffice, has returned. The delegation anticipates immediate favorable action by the house upon the bill, which has already passed the senate, if it is not crowded one side by pressure of business.

Stubborn Legislators.
SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Jan. 30.—Fifty-five more ballots for United States senator were taken in joint assembly yesterday, without change. On motion to adjourn, Ginn, a Democrat, stamped his party by voting with the Republicans. It is understood he took this course to force the speaker to make him chairman of a committee.

His Room Better Than His Company.
NEWARK, N. J., Jan. 30.—Newark Lodge B. P. O. Elks, have decided to investigate charges against John L. Sullivan, and if they are found true, to expel him. It is said that many local members who were indignant at Sullivan's admission into the organization, will insist on his expulsion.

Not There at Last.
HELENA, Mont., Jan. 30.—The long dead-lock of the legislature is over. Both houses met together at noon. The Democrats have the organization and the Republicans have a majority of one. There is much rejoicing that needed legislation is now assured.

A Hundred Lives Lost.
CAIRO, Jan. 30.—Advises from Massowah, on the Red sea, state that a terrific storm, followed by floods, has caused enormous damage throughout the island of Massowah. Over 100 persons lost their lives during the storm or as a result of the floods.

THE WEATHER INDICATIONS.
WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—Forecast for Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont: Snow or rain; winds shifting to westerly; warmer in southern, stationary temperature in northern portions.
For Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut: Showers, clearing during the day; warmer; southwesterly winds; rains on the coast.
Cautionary signals are displayed from Norfolk section to Eastport.

SOMETHING OF GREAT INTEREST.
There are hundreds of our people who are suffering from lingering diseases who have not received benefit from their family physicians. Such sufferers should write a description of their cases to the famous Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., the discoverer of the renowned remedy, Dr. Greene's Nervura, and successful specialist in the cure of all forms of nervous and chronic diseases. He can be consulted free of charge—that is a full description of the case should be written him and he will return his diagnosis of the case, whether curable, and advice in regard to treatment, without charge. In his carefully considered answer he will fully explain your disease and give you a perfect understanding of all its symptoms, free of any expense.

Dr. Greene devotes special attention to treatment through letter correspondence, and his success in the cure of this class of diseases by his harmless vegetable remedies, is without a parallel. As consultation is thus entirely free, sufferers in our vicinity should seize the opportunity which affords an almost certainty of being cured.

An article on "Washington and Biltmore Clubs," written by Henry Loomis Nelson and accompanied by numerous illustrations, is the subject of a four-page Supplement to Harper's Weekly published January 28th. Similar articles on the clubs of Philadelphia, Boston and New York have before appeared in the Weekly.

The next number of Harper's Bazar, published January 30th, will contain an interesting comedy in one act, entitled "The Reporter," written by W. G. Van Tassel Sutphen, and admirably adapted for parlor theatrical entertainments.

LITERARY NOTES.

The Boston Primary Union of Sunday school Teachers will hold an Institute at Berkeley Temple, Boston, commencing Monday, Feb. 2nd, at 2 30 o'clock. Interesting and helpful addresses on the best method of teaching and training the younger scholars will be delivered by practical, progressive teachers. Supper will be served at 6 o'clock, under the auspices of the Congregational Superintendents' Union, followed by addresses at 7 p. m. by Dr. Gunbart, of Roxbury and lesson teaching by Miss Harlow, of Lowell. The public are cordially invited to attend both sessions.

Scribner's Magazine for February will contain the following interesting reading: David Livingstone. Frontispiece, Engraved by Gustav Kruell.

The second edition of "The City Directory" will be issued from the Tremont on and after next Monday evening to regular subscribers, by the firm of Russell's Comedians, the well-known publishers. The noted house of Abbey & Schofield has consented to take charge of the distribution, and will make every effort to give all entitled thereto a perfect copy of the work. All the best of the matter of the original work by the original artists, has been retained, while the additions are encyclopaedic in their character and universal in their scope, with a main tendency, however, to fun. When the reader or the new "City Directory" has absorbed all the fun desired, he will only be obliged to turn to the second half of the work to find more fun. The subjects of music, dancing, extravaganza and fun have been elaborated and exhaustively treated, while in the appendix will be found a few pages devoted to fun.

Russell's Comedians can only remain with the Tremont patrons for two weeks and it behooves all to secure seats in advance. Places can be now secured at the box office for the first week of the presentations of this unaltered farce-comedy "The City Directory."

The Talleyrand Memoirs.

The appearance of these Memoirs has been long looked forward to, not only for the light it will throw upon the events of one of the most interesting of historical epochs, but for the personal opinions and experiences which they are known to contain. Talleyrand, made a prince of the empire of Napoleon, in turn leader of the clergy of France and excommunicated by the Pope, the president of French assembly, ambassador to England, friend to kings and minister, and three times foreign minister of France, was without question the ablest diplomat of an age when the art of diplomacy was at its height. Upon his death in 1838 Talleyrand forbade the publication of his memoirs within thirty years, and in 1866 or 1868 Napoleon III., for political reasons, secured the suppression until 1890. The series of extracts from the memoirs now being published in The Century Magazine, is the first glimpse of this remarkable autobiography that has been accorded to the public. It is announced that second instalments of the Memoirs—(to be printed in the February Century)—will deal exclusively with what is perhaps the most interesting portion of the reminiscences—the personal relations of Talleyrand and Napoleon Bonaparte.

DANA'S IS GUARANTEED TO CURE!

A MYSTERY EXPLAINED.

The papers contain frequent notices of rich, pretty and educated girls eloping with negroes, tramps and coachmen. The well-known specialist, Dr. Franklin Miles, says all such girls are more or less hysterical, nervous, very impulsive, unbalanced; usually subject to headache, neuralgia, sleeplessness, immoderate crying or laughing. These show a weak nervous system for which there is no remedy equal to Restorative Nervine. Trial bottles and a fine book containing many marvelous cures, free at William F. Lee's, who also sells, and guarantees Dr. Miles' celebrated New Heart Cure, the finest of heart tonics. Cures fluttering, short breath, etc.

A NATIONAL EVENT.

The holding of the World's Fair in a city scarcely fifty years old will be a remarkable event, but whether it will really benefit this nation as much as the discovery of the Restorative Nervine by Dr. Franklin Miles is doubtful. This is just what the American people need to cure their excessive nervousness, dyspepsia, headache, dizziness, sleeplessness, neuralgia, nervous debility, dullness, confusion of mind, etc. It acts like a charm. Trial bottles and fine book on "Nervous and Heart Diseases," with unequalled testimonials, free at Wm. F. Lee's. It is warranted to contain no opium, morphine or dangerous drugs.

REMARKABLE FACTS.

Heart disease is supposed to be incurable, but when properly treated a large proportion of cases can be cured. Thus Mrs. Elvira Hatch, of Elkhart, Ind., and Mrs. Mary L. Baker, of Ovid, Mich., were cured after suffering 20 years. S. C. Linburger, druggist at San Jose, Ill., says that Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, which cured the former, "worked wonders for his wife." Levi Logan, of Buchanan, Mich., who had heart disease for 30 years, says two bottles made him feel like a new man. Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure is sold by Wm. F. Lee. Book of wonderful testimonials free.

TRY DANA'S SARSAPARILLA!

A Reminiscence of Lincoln.

On the day following the resignation of Mr. Chase, the President sent the nomination of Ex-Governor Tod, of Ohio, as Secretary of the Treasury to the Senate for confirmation. There is no occasion now to inquire after his motives. Undoubtedly his first thought was of an Ohio man, his opinion being settled that it was better not to select a Secretary from any of the Atlantic States. The nomination was not well received, and it was a relief to his friends when, during the evening, Mr. Tod, by telegraph, peremptorily declined it.

Before sunrise the next day I was again sent for. I rode to the White House in the dawning light of an early summer morning, and found the President in his waistcoat, trousers, and slippers. He had evidently just left his bed, and had not taken time to dress himself. As I entered the familiar room, he said, in a cheerful, satisfied voice:

"I have sent for you to let you know that we have got a Secretary of the Treasury. If your sleep has been disturbed, you have time for a morning nap. You will like to meet him when the department opens."

"I am indeed glad to hear it," I said.

"But who is he?"

"Oh, you will like the appointment, so will the country, so will everybody. It is the best appointment possible. Strange that I should have had any doubt about it. What have you to say to Mr. Fessenden?"

"He would be an eminently proper appointment," I answered. "The chairman of the Senate Committee on Finance; perfectly familiar with all our financial legislation; a strong, able man, and a true friend of the Union. He is also next in the direct line of promotion. But he will not accept. His health is frail, and his present position suits him. There is not one chance in a thousand of his acceptance."

He will accept; have no fear on that account. I have just notified him of his appointment, and I expect him every moment.

At this moment the door suddenly opened, and Mr. Fessenden almost burst into the room, without being announced. His thin face was colorless; there was intense excitement in his voice and movements.

"I cannot! I will not! I should be a dead man in a week. I am a sick man now. I cannot accept this appointment, for which I have no qualifications. You, Mr. President, ought not to ask me to do it. Pray relieve me by saying you will withdraw it. I repeat, I cannot and I will not accept it."

The president rose from his chair, approached Mr. Fessenden, and threw his arm around his neck.

It may seem ludicrous, but as I saw that long and apparently unstiffened limb winding like a cable about the small neck of the Senator from Maine, I wondered how many times the arm would encircle it. His voice was serious and emphatic, but without any assumption of authority, as he said:

"Fessenden, since I have occupied this place, every appointment I have made upon my own judgment has proved to be a good one. I do not say the best that could have been made, but good enough to answer the purpose. All the mistakes I have made have been in cases where I have permitted my own judgment to be overruled by that of others. Last night I saw my way clear to appoint you Secretary of the Treasury. I do not think you have any right to tell me you will not accept the place. I believe that the suppression of the rebellion has been directed by a higher power than any represented by us, and that the Almighty is using His own means to that end. You are one of them. It is as much your duty to accept as it is mine to appoint. Your nomination is now on the way from the State Department, and in a few minutes it will be here. It will be in the Senate at noon, you will be immediately and unanimously confirmed, and by one o'clock to day you must be signing warrants in the Treasury."

Mr. Fessenden was intellectually a strong man, one of the last to surrender his own judgment to the will of another, but he made no effort to resist the President's appeal. He cast his eyes upon the floor, and murmured, "Well, perhaps I ought to think about it," and turned to leave the room.

"No," said the President; "this matter is settled here and now. I am told that it is very necessary that a Secretary should act to-day. You must enter upon your duties to-day. I will assure you that if a change becomes desirable hereafter, I will be ready and willing to make it. But, unless I misunderstand the temper of the public, your appointment will be so satisfactory that we shall have no occasion to deal with any question of change for some time to come."

At this point the conversation terminated, and all the persons present separated. The result is well known. Mr. Fessenden's appointment was entirely satisfactory, and the affairs of the Treasury went on so smoothly that no change in the financial policy of Secretary Chase was attempted; and from this time until the resignation of Mr. Fessenden there was no further friction between the Treasury Department and the Executive.—Harper's Magazine.

The May Flower.

BY MRS. L. H. SIGOURNEY.

A speck amid the Ocean,
A leaden bark draws near,
Through her rent sails, the bleak winds moan,
All heavily and drear;
No light upon the headlands
Illumes her untired way,
No pilot glides with fearless helm,
Like sea-bird o'er the spray.

Slow, toward a sterile region,
With pain she seems to steer,
No hoarded treasures in her breast,
To grasping avarice dear.
Yet many a noble galleon,
Where Indian jewels sleep,
Might pave old Ocean's glittering floor,
Without a loss so deep.

No broad flag proudly wavers
Forth from her riven mast;
But many a princely argosy
Might feel the wrecking blast;
Or, crushed by battle thunders, sink
'Neath whelming waters dark,
Yet leave no chasm on history's page,
Like you forsaken bark.

Oh, May-flower! stricken May-flower!—
So scourged by winter's wrath,
What bearest thou to this chilling clime,
Along thy billow path?
And the May-Flower boldly answer'd
As toward the shore she drew—
"Seed for a nation of the free—Unbleaching souls, and true!"

Hoarse voices from the wilderness Spoke out when storms were high—
"Were there no graves beyond the main,
'Till here ye come to die?"
But sweetly on the Sabbath breeze
An answering anthem peal'd—
"Our leader is the Lord of Hosts—
Our fortress and our shield."

Down sank the ancient forest,
And up the roof tree sprang—
The tall corn ripened on the lea—
The soldier's watchword rang—
Giant famine, like a hungry wolf,
Was stouly held at bay.
And the mother still'd her wailing babe,
With England's holy lay.

Rich was each lowly cabin,
In the strong trust of prayer—
A heaven born gift to brave the lot
Of poverty and care.
So now, a glorious nation,
Doth stand in solemn state,
To bless that lonely May-Flower,
With all her perilous freight.

New England's lofty mountains
Bow low their lofty crest,
In homage to the swelling bay,
That gave the May-Flower rest;
In homage to the rugged rock
That stretch'd a wintry hand,
And welcom'd to its snow clad breast,
The fathers of our land.

But thou, oh, Rock of Plymouth!
Like him of old, who lent
To weary and wayfaring men,
The shelter of his tent.

Looked out beyond the homely garb,
With clear prophetic eyes,
Nor through their stranger vestments saw
The angel in disguise.

SALEM, Jan. 1, 1891.

One year ago we issued our last club check; we then decided it was hardly a straightforward way of doing business to charge one class of customers five dollars per dozen for pictures and another class but little more than half as much for the same thing. Instead of adopting the motto of most photographers, viz., anything is good enough for club work—we have made our club work equal to our best.

We believed it was a good business principle to charge all our customers the same price for the same thing, and by adopting this course and charging for our work what we believed it was worth, and trying to make it worth as much as any, we should gain their respect and good will.

Our business the past year having been much the most satisfactory of any year in Salem, proves that our judgment was not at fault. We are so well satisfied with the course we took that we shall pursue the same during '91 and shall not cater to that class who are satisfied with anything if it is cheap.

The demands upon our time in the way of large portraiture, particularly freehand crayons—have the past year been so great that we have decided to introduce colored pastels of Boston, and we had made by Mr. E. L. Hanlon of Boston, than whom there is no more skillful artist in his specialty in America, a complete line of samples of those very beautiful pictures.

Remember that no better work than this can be produced in this country, and the price is but little more than is charged for the ordinary grades. Call and see these pictures if you are interested in fine portraiture. W. G. HUSSEY, 202 Essex st., Salem.

TOWN MEETING.

The Small Town Hall accommodated a goodly number on Monday evening to hear the report of the electric light committee and vote upon the petition to the legislature for authority to install an electric light plant.

Hon. B. F. Southwick was elected moderator.

C. C. Dodge took the floor, and presented a resolution, prefacing his motion with an argument, in which he criticized the decision of the Supreme Court, stating that the South Carolina Supreme Court upon a case precisely similar as to precedents had decided directly opposite and reiterated many of the statements made at the previous meetings that have been devoted to the subject.

The resolution is as follows: Resolved, That a committee of five be chosen and authorized to petition the legislature at its present session for the passage of an act which shall enable the town to manufacture electric light for use in lighting the public streets and buildings of the town and for sale by the town to private persons and corporations and for authority to purchase, or acquire, and hold all buildings, plant, appliances or property which it may desire to use therefore and that said committee be authorized to employ counsel to represent the town in the matter, if deemed necessary.

A long discussion followed, in which the whole matter was rehearsed and twisted and turned until everybody present became weary. The necessity for a plant was fully argued to the total disregard of the main question, which was the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. Spaulding was in excellent spirits; as well he might be—He was the victor in the battle that had just been fought and the present move was simply a change of front on the part of his adversaries, which of itself was a confession of defeat. He said he would not have given a cent at any time for assurance of a decision of the Supreme Court. It was a foregone conclusion from the beginning. He made the claim that Danvers was not saving a "penny" but was actually paying more for light—considering what she was getting, than Salem.

On general principles he claimed that private corporations could do the business more cheaply than any municipality, and urged that the committee of the town had established the fact beyond a peradventure before the Court, that commercial lighting without the right to supply power, would not pay the town; and according to the decision, the town could not sell light below actual cost; consequently Peabody could not furnish commercial lighting. A commercial plant must be self-sustaining or it could not be run by the town. He was not favorably disposed toward electric light. He did not believe in it; but if the townpeople wanted electric light for its streets and buildings, he should favor leaving the business to a private corporation.

Mr. Dodge secured the floor again and offered the prediction that the petition would receive favorable action by the legislature and reiterated again some of his familiar arguments.

Mr. Rufus H. Brown took the position that the principle of paternalism was wrong and prejudicial to the best interests of society. This town, he said, was in no condition to spend $30,000 or $40,000 to establish an electric plant, which would cost $10,000 to $15,000 per annum, for maintenance. He was decidedly opposed to the whole plan.

William P. Clark desired that the motion be laid on the table until the report of the committee should be made, and Mr. Dodge came to his feet again and opposed the motion to lay on the table. It was lost.

Mr. Spaulding thought likely the resolution would be adopted, but he wanted the sentiment of the meeting to go on record. He therefore moved to indefinitely postpone the adoption of the resolutions. His motion failed to call forth the expression desired, as it was not seconded.

C. Warren Osborne took the floor and in a clear concise speech showed his entire disapproval of the whole scheme. He did not believe in the principle of town ownership. He thought it would be the biggest blunder the town could make to attempt such an establishment, and that, he thought, was saying considerable.

When the question was finally called for, the vote stood 84 in favor to 18 opposed, but was declared lost by the chair, as it lacked the necessary 100 votes in the affirmative. Mr. Dodge doubted the vote.

Mr. Stephen Blaney then spoke in favor of the resolution, and urged everybody who favored economy and who wanted to save their taxes to vote for the measure.

Tellers were then appointed and the vote taken; this time standing 109 in the affirmative and 21 in the negative. The objection before raised relating to votes involving expenditures of money in special town meetings being thus overcome, it was declared "a vote."

The following committee has been appointed: H. P. Reed, A. E. Southwick, C. C. Dodge, C. T. Batchelder and William F. Sawyer. They are expected to present the petition to the legislature and assist the passage of statute authorizing the town to establish a light plant.

After the vote had been taken upon the resolution, H. P. Reed submitted the following report, as chairman of the Electric Light Committee:

Your committee, elected and authorized to establish an electric light plant for the purpose of lighting the streets of the town respectfully submit the following report.

We desire first, to notice the death of one of our number, Mr. John Osborn, who died after a brief illness, September 1, 1890. In referring to his decease we cannot but recall his valuable services to the town as a member of this committee and the interested and almost enthusiastic manner in which he entered upon his duties. He took more than an ordinary interest in the question at issue and in all his labors, often performed under physical discouragements, he was observing to the smallest details and displayed an unselfish devotion to the welfare of the town.

He truly exemplified the principle that public office is a public trust and all his efforts were characterized by a conservative business ability which none but his associates could fully appreciate. In this brief tribute to his memory we only unite with our fellow townsmen in the high estimate they have placed upon his character and services and express our grief at his loss.

This committee was elected August 8, 1890, and on August 19 we completed a contract with the United Edison Manufacturing company of New York. They were to furnish three dynamos of 165 1200-candle power each light capacity, including all the electrical apparatus and outside construction, as per specifications filed with them, for the sum of $14,950. We were preparing plans and specifications for a building and steam plant when, on August 23, a notice was served on the town from the supreme judicial court, for the town to appear to show cause why an injunction should not be issued restraining the town, or its agents, from establishing such a plant, agreeably to the petition of Willard Spaulding, Willard Spaulding, Jr., Daniel Brown, James F. Flint, Edward Wilcox, Geo. W. Hackett, D. A. Sheen, Cyrus W. Hersey, Oliver D. Witter, John J. Styles and George E. Dodge.

We were authorized by the selectmen to procure counsel to represent the town. The court found that the town had no right under existing statutes to establish such a plant. In regard to the contract made with the Edison company we understand from the communication submitted herewith that they are not disposed to ask the town to fulfill the contract at the present time.

They say that as the contract was made in good faith by both parties it shall stand until such time as the town has the authority and is ready to proceed, provided nothing is done by the town to interfere with their rights. This contract with the Edison company was not complete until approved by them at their office in New York, which has been done and the contract assumed by the Edison General Electric company in New York, with our knowledge and consent.

Upon consultation with Forest J. Evans, Esq., who, with others, acted for the town in the suit just determined, in view of any possible rights which the Edison company may have under the contract, your committee are of the opinion that the town should proceed with caution before executing with any other company a contract for lighting the town by electricity or granting a franchise therefor. We submit herewith the contract made with the Edison company, a copy of the specifications and a blue print of the town.

Amount paid by the committee for sundry expenses, $3.75. There are no other contracts or bids outstanding except amount due attorneys.

Signed by the committee, H. P. REED, C. B. HADEN, C. C. DODGE, A. E. SOUTHWICK.

The following is the letter referred to above:

OFFICE OF EDISON GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY, 38 Pearl street, Boston, New England district.

JANUARY, 27, 1891.

Mr. H. P. REED, Chairman of the electric lighting committee of Peabody, Mass.

Dear sir: Replying to yours of January 14. I would say, that the Edison company has no disposition to in any way embarrass your committee, or the town which you represent, by pressing its rights under the contract executed in good faith by your committee and by our company. At the same time it would seem but fair to both parties that the contract be held in abeyance until such time as the town has the right and is ready to proceed with the installation of the plant as contracted for.

On the condition, therefore, that your town shall take no action which shall in any way prejudice our rights under the contract, we will let the matter rest as at present on the above understanding.

Yours very truly,

SIDNEY B. PAINE, District Manager.

My Case is a Miracle!

PRaise GOD, I AM WELL!!

LEWISTON, ME., Oct. 28, 1890.

DANA Sarsaparilla Co.:

Gentlemen,—For over ten years I have been a great sufferer with weakness peculiar to my sex. I would have for days at a time a terrible bearing-down feeling, accompanied by great exhaustion and severe pain in back and limbs. I would go to bed fatigued, and rise in the morning more exhausted than when I retired. Often after rising I would have a period of trembling, until at last my nerves were in a state of complete prostration. I would have little or no appetite. Almost constant headache, accompanied by strange sensations, etc. Such was my condition when I first heard of DANA'S SARSAPARILLA. Though I am but forty-three years of age, yet my hair is gray, and I look like a person near sixty years old.

While visiting my daughter, Mrs. Hardy, in Bangor, Me., she persuaded me to try a bottle of DANA'S SARSAPARILLA, and to please her I did so. That bottle helped me a little. The second one gave me a good appetite, and caused me to rest better nights. I continued to use it, and continued to improve, till I had taken eleven bottles. And, praise God, I am WELL! IT HAS CURED ME! I feel like a new person! I have increased in flesh from ninety-one pounds to a hundred and forty-six pounds, and enjoy life once more. MY CASE IS A MIRACLE, and I will do all I can to tell others.

Yours with respect,

ELIZABETH A. BROWN.

The following citizens' town committee was chosen last March: J. P. Fernald, J. J. Bartlett, S. S. Littlefield, Edward Trask, Willard Spaulding, S. C. Bancroft, D. J. Conroy. Of this committee Mr. Bartlett is deceased. Messrs. Trask and Bancroft are confined to the house by illness and the selectmen dropped Mr. Fernald from the finance committee because they supposed he had left town for good. He is back again, however, and may serve on the committee.

The Trustees of Peabody Institute decided at their meeting last Saturday to indefinitely postpone the remodeling of the library. The trustees are generally in favor of making a change, but finances will not admit of such alterations as have been contemplated. The expenses of the institution will exceed the income by several hundreds of dollars this year. The purchase of the Harris estate at $6000. has been a source of temporary inconvenience financially, as there is no return from the investment in any way.

W. P. Wilkinson was present at the meeting of the New England Veteran Firemen's Association at Providence. He reports slight progress in the business of the meeting. Most of the time was taken up in discussing what constitutes a veteran fireman. It was finally determined to leave that question to the individual associations to settle for themselves. A committee on constitution and by-laws was appointed to report at the adjourned meeting to be held in Boston, March 2. It is probable that the next muster will be held in Boston. A bid was put in for this town, but the sentiment appeared to be in favor of holding the musters in accordance with the age of the associations. If that rule is adopted Roxbury, which is in the Boston district, will have the muster this year, Wakefield next, and Peabody not until 1893. The order may possibly be changed.

THE EMPTY HOUSE.

The rain fell heavily last night—
I gazed across the street in vain,
Mad hope, to see your flickering light
Shine in the lonely room again.
A tempest shook the house last night,
The torrents beat against your room;
And not a star peeped from the height;
Your house was silent as the tomb.

I wept the hours away last night,
O night more wretched than the day!
Not doubting but with morning light
To see your face across the way.
The curtain was not drawn aside,
No face leant smiling on the sill;
The rain still fell, the bleak winds sighed,
Your house was desolate and still.

THE NEW TYPEWRITER.

Mr. Bulles, the broker, had a new typewriter. He made his head clerk try the different applicants and test their skill and engage the best one. The one the head clerk engaged was a large, impressive looking woman of much beauty and with the haughtiness of a duchess. She dressed well and richly, and her manner when sitting before her machine was that of a grand woman of society who condescended to play occasionally on the piano. She had much the air of a woman who was employing the men in the office to take care of her millions and make out her accounts. Mr. Bulles always felt as though he ought to ask her permission to smoke, and was almost afraid to ask her to take down any of his correspondence. What work he dared to give her she did as well as it could be done, so he had nothing against her except her pride. He determined finally to break down her pride. He had been uncomfortably impressed with her dignity; now she should learn what it was to feel that way toward him.

So the next morning he called her in, and after dictating a few business letters he said: "Now, on the smaller paper, please. Are you ready? Let me see." He mused as he bit carelessly at the top of his cigar and gazed out of the window.

"Dear Jim," he began. "Thanks very much, but it will be quite impossible. I have positively refused to go into political life in any capacity, and though the position of minister to so important a city as St. Petersburg to succeed Smith is highly complimentary, I could not leave New York and my work. Tell the president in the proper official language that he is very good, but that he must look for some one else. Give my best love to Mrs. Blaine, and accept my condolences at the loss of your house. Yours,

"The Hon. James G. Blaine, Washington, D. C."

The typewriter girl took this down with a calm, unruffled countenance; her severity of demeanor was absolutely unchanged. "Is that all?" she asked. "Yes," said Bulles weakly. "Yes, I believe that is all." He was not to be put down by a little thing like that, and called her in again during the afternoon and dictated the following note:

"DELMONICO'S: Will you reserve one of the largest private dining rooms for me this evening and prepare supper for 100? I find my rooms are too small, and I will have to have one of yours. Serve the same supper as ordered and prepare floor for dancing. You can go to any length in the matter of decoration, but keep the cost of the flowers down to $1,000. Yours truly,

The other note was:

"DEAR OLD MAN: I should be very glad to accept, but Tuxedo never did agree with my digestion. Certainly, you can have all the horses you want. The two leaders are in town, but I will have them sent out to you. I think the price you offer for the coach is reasonable, and I will let you have it for that, as I am going to give up coaching and get a yacht. Yours,

"DEAR MR. BURGESS: The designs arrived yesterday and were beautiful. I am sure, if looks go for anything, that she should beat anything afloat. I hope you are right in what you say about her being a better boat than the Mayflower, and I will certainly follow your suggestion and enter her when completed for the cup. Yours truly,

Mr. Bulles said: "That will do. When they are finished let me see them." He thought he detected a slight unbending in the superior manner of the young woman, but he was not too hopeful. "If those don't impress her," he said, "I'll write a letter of regret to the queen tomorrow, and one to Gladstone, telling him I can't come over this summer to spend August with him." When the girl brought in the letters, finished and ready for his signature, he tossed them carelessly aside and said: "I will sign them later, and I'll post them myself." He signed them and slipped them in their envelopes under his other papers, where the clerks might not see them, and planned more for the future. On the day following he refused three invitations to dine with distinguished people, ordered an architect to call and see him about building a country house at Newport, and wrote to order a diamond necklace.

The typewriter girl began to take a little more interest, and said "Yes, sir," instead of simply "Yes," which was something. He felt that he was getting on.

But on the fourth day she appeared with even a colder and more haughty air, and laid three letters down upon his desk. She always opened his mail for him, and divided the private notes from the business letters. "Here," she said, "are three notes which I did not know whether to hand to you or to the clerk." Bulles glanced at the bottom of one of them and read the name "Charles Burgess." The note ran:

"HENRY BULLES—Dear Sir: I am in receipt of a note signed by you and bearing the number of your office, which refers to a yacht and an imaginary correspondence which has passed between us on the subject of such a yacht. As I do not know you or anything of any such yacht I can only imagine that some one is imposing upon you, and return you your letter. Yours truly,

"CHARLES BURGESS."

Mr. Bulles grew exceedingly red and dared not look up. He wondered how far the girl had read. The second note said:

"The private dining room and supper ordered by you for Tuesday evening were prepared and in readiness for you as directed, but no one appeared. Are we to understand that there has been a mistake, or is your letter, which we have retained, to be considered in the nature of a hoax, or has some one forged your name? Awaiting your reply, etc.,

"DELMONICO'S."

Mr. Bulles sank still farther into his chair. He opened the last letter with a trembling hand. The girl still towered above him like an avenging spirit. The letter was from a friend and contained a clipping from a newspaper.

"Dear Hon," the note ran. "Have you seen this Associated Press clipping, and what in Heaven's name does it mean? Some one has evidently been playing a practical joke on you, and one that must strike you as a most unpleasant one."

The clipping read as follows:

IS HENRY BULLES INSANE?

THE WELL KNOWN NEW YORK BROKER GIVES HIS FRIENDS GREAT CONCERN.

WASHINGTON, D. C. —The secretary of state is in receipt of a most remarkable communication from Henry Bulles, the New York broker, in which that gentleman refuses to act as minister to St. Petersburg with much haughtiness. He is quite unknown to either the president or Mr. Blaine, and it is supposed here that his mind is unsettled or that he is the victim of a practical joke.

Mr. Bulles laid the clipping down and gazed desperately at the typewriter girl. "Did you post those letters?" he asked. "Yes," said the duchess severely. "I found them on your desk after you had left, and supposed you had forgotten them, so I posted them myself. Wasn't that right?"

"I guess," said Mr. Bulles, "that I won't need you any longer. You know too much."

"That," said the typewriter girl calmly, "strikes me as the very reason why I should remain. Don't you think so? You can say you have been made the victim of a practical joke, but if I lost my position I might say you had not. Don't you think you had better raise my salary a little and let me stay?"

Mr. Bulles gazed gloomily at the newspaper clipping on the desk before him.

"Yes," he said grimly, "you had better stay." —New York Evening Sun.

Peculiarities of the Gulf Stream.

This river is very warm because it comes from the Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean sea, where the sun has been heating it for a long time. Of course after it has left its southern home, and is making its journey across the Atlantic, it is gradually becoming cooler, but, nevertheless, it maintains to the shores of Europe, even well up toward the Arctic regions, a much higher temperature than that of the surrounding air or water.

It has its own finny inhabitants and other animal life; curious little fish and crabs that make nests in the floating seaweed; beautiful little jelly fish called thimble fish, floating or swimming near its surface in such countless numbers that at times the waters are brown with them; and the graceful flying fish, which dart out of the water in schools; and countless myriads of minute animal life floating about, so that when the sun is shining high in the heavens, the water seems to be filled with motes. These little things, dying, sink to the bottom, and their diminutive skeletons or shells go to form an ooze, which, if exposed to the air and to pressure, resembles chalk.

This ocean river is quite unlike the rivers of the land in point of size. The Mississippi, at a point below its lowest tributary, is about 2,000 feet wide and 100 feet deep. At places it is wider than this, but there it is shallower. The Gulf stream, at its narrowest point in the Strait of Florida, is more than 2,000 feet deep and over 40 miles wide. —Lieut. J. E. Pillsbury.

Counterfeit Currency.

"More counterfeit money is in actual circulation than people in general believe," remarked a teller in one of Chicago's leading banks recently. "Of course only the better class of counterfeiters remain in circulation, and even then do not pass undetected long. The detection of a counterfeit bill, however, does not retire it from circulation by any means. A grocer, for instance, who finds a five dollar counterfeit bill in his money drawer at night, is liable to argue that he cannot well afford to lose the amount, and also that a counterfeit which was good enough to deceive him is good enough to deceive some one else.

"The next day some customer gets it in change, and ten to one it is passed through a dozen hands before the discovery is again made that it is bogus. But its mission does not end here. Perhaps the last holder of the bill can tell who paid it to him. If so the counterfeit starts to retrace its course, but it rarely goes very far before it stops, and the whole scheme is worked over again. We frequently have counterfeit money offered for deposit. A merchant may bring in several hundred dollars, and among the bills is a single counterfeit. Of course it is thrown out as soon as it is discovered. But where does it go? Into the hands of the man that brought it in. Does he destroy it? Perhaps, if he is a scrupulously honest man." —Chicago Mail.

Old English Customs.

Railway ticket offices still retain the old name of "booking office," which was appropriate enough in the coaching days, when the names of intending passengers were literally booked.

Another curious survival is the practice of eating game and venison "high." We never eat poultry or beef and mutton "high," but game and venison used to be sent long distances and be a considerable time on the road, so that they could not be received in a fresh state. Hence it became customary and even fashionable to eat them "high," and the practice has endured to the present day. Then there is the old fashioned greeting, "God be with ye." Perhaps not all know that the meaningless words "good-by" are a compression of the above pious wish. —London Tit-Bits.

Portraits of Christ.

There is no portrait of Christ which can be pronounced authentic. The Jews were forbidden by their law to make likenesses, and so art, as we understand the world, scarcely had among them an existence. There are, however, two portraits which have the merit of extreme antiquity, and were both probably made at some time in the First century. The one is cut on an emerald, the work purporting to have been done by command of the Emperor Tiberius. The jewel was preserved in the treasury of Constantinople, but in some way fell into the hands of the Turks before that city was taken by them, and about 1483 was given by the sultan to Pope Innocent VIII as a ransom for the sultan's brother.

The other portrait is on a fine brass medal discovered in Anglesea, Wales, in the year 1702. The workmanship is that of the First century, and a Hebrew inscription on the reverse declares the portrait to be that of the prophet Jesus. The two portraits bear a close resemblance, but it is altogether probable that both are ideal, and that each followed the description of Christ given in the well known but not well authenticated letter of Publius Lentulus. The napkin portrait called St. Veronica's is much more modern, and is probably a copy of the emerald likeness. —St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A Rare Case.

I found Capt. Miller, of the navy yard, wreathed in smiles when I saw him in his office at the Lyceum.

"I have just had an amusing experience," he remarked. "I am accustomed to being run down by politicians who want places for their proteges and by place seekers themselves. But today, for the first time in my life, I have been waited on by a man who wished to notify me that he had given up his job. He is from the Sixth Assembly district, New York, and was employed in the construction department at $2.50 a day. He was appointed about three months ago.

"In tendering his resignation he said he could do better in private employment at $1.25 than as a government workman at twice that amount. What with political assessments, entertaining his party friends, purchase of tickets of one kind and another, and other pulls on his purse, he found little of his wages left for family expenses. I, of course, accepted his resignation, at the same time jocularly informing him that he ought to be exhibited in a dime museum." —New York Star.

Strange Lapse of Memory.

Cases of forgetfulness on matters of interest are on record. While Dr. Priestley was preparing his work entitled "Harmony of the Gospels," he had taken great pains to inform himself on a subject which had been under discussion relative to the Jewish Passover. He wrote out the result of his researches and laid the paper away. His attention and time being taken with something else, some little time elapsed before the subject occurred to his mind again. Then the same time and pains were given to the subject that had been given to it before, and the results were again put on paper and laid aside. So completely had he forgotten that he had copied the same paragraphs and reflections before, that it was only when he had found the papers on which he had transcribed them that it was recalled to his recollection. This same author had frequently read his own published writings and did not recognize them. —Boston Herald.

Texas Again to the Fore.

The Uvalde Reflector says that a party out hunting in that county had along a liver colored setter dog, which found a snake of the rattler species, and that the snake swallowed the dog. The hunters killed the snake with a Gatling gun, cut him open with a butcher's cleaver, and that the dog jumped out all right, except losing his bark; that the snake was two feet thick and thirty-six feet long, and had ninety-two rattles and a button, and the editor says it sounds a little improbable, and it may be. But out on the San Antonio river, in 1853, Col. Rip Ford, Bill Pitts and others killed a rattler with an acre of burnt woods and four live Indians in it, and no one then thought it improbable. —New Birmingham (Tex.) Times.

A Rheumatic Superstition.

Rheumatism is caused by the deer or by the measuring worm, the idea being suggested in the latter case by the manner in which the measuring worm arches his body in walking, which is supposed to be like the contortions of a rheumatic patient. On no account must the patient eat a squirrel or touch a cat, since the manner in which these creatures arch the back indicates an affinity with the disease. Nor must he eat the legs of any animal, since, as every one knows, the limbs are most frequently affected with rheumatism, and by eating the legs of an animal the "disease spirit" residing there might be taken in. —Youth's Companion.

One Way of Revenge.

There is a gentleman in the Australian house of representatives renowned for incisive sarcasm who takes out his note book and quietly but obviously sketches a political opponent whom his observations have infuriated; and these angry faces, readily recognized, somehow find their way into the illustrated periodicals sooner or later—a method which, if it does not turn away wrath, at least serves frequently to repress its outward and visible manifestations. —All the Year Round.

All His Fancy Painted.

Judge (to colored prisoner, charged with stealing poultry)—What is your business? Prisoner—I am a chicken fancier, your 'onah. Judge—So I fancy—sixty days. —Texas Siftings.

Statistics show that ninety-five out of a hundred men fail in business sooner or later, and the cases in which a firm sees fifty years of business life are extremely rare.

"Get another dozen lamp chimneys."

"What! are they all gone?"

"Yes."

"I'm going to try a sort I've been reading about, if I have to send to Pittsburgh for 'em. Macbeth & Co.'s 'pearl-top.'"

"They say their chimneys don't break."

"Another humbug, probably."

"Don't Muggins keep 'em?"

"I'm going to see. Give me a postal card. I'll have that chimney, anyhow."

Muggins got 'em for him, and did a thriving chimney business for several weeks, till everybody got 'em; and somehow his trade has increased all round ever since.

ORDERS AND BY-LAWS

OF THE

TOWN OF PEABODY.

PEABODY, MASS., March 24th, 1890.

The undersigned committee, chosen to revise the By-Laws of the town of Peabody, have attended to the duty assigned them, and respectfully report the subjoined draft of Orders and By-Laws which they recommend for adoption.

SIDNEY C. BANCROFT, AMOS MERRILL,
FREDERIC G. PRESTON,

Committee.

ORDERS.

ARTICLE 1. Town Meetings, how notified.

All warrants for Town Meetings shall be served by posting up an attested copy thereof at each of the post-offices and public meeting houses in the town, seven days at least before the time of holding said meetings.

ARTICLE 2. Adjourned Meetings, notice of.

When any Town Meeting shall be adjourned to a time certain, except from day to day, by reason of the regular business of the meeting being unfinished, the Town Clerk shall cause notices of the time and place of holding such adjourned meeting to be duly posted in some public places in the town, which notices shall also state briefly the business to come before such adjourned meeting.

ARTICLE 3. Government of Town Meetings.

Town Meetings shall be governed according to the rules of parliamentary practice contained in Cushing's Manual, so far as they are applicable and not inconsistent with law.

ARTICLE 4. Concerning Votes upon Money Matters.

No vote shall be passed appropriating or involving the expenditure of money, at any Town Meeting other than the annual meeting, unless there shall be at least one hundred legal voters present and voting in favor of such appropriation or expenditure.

ARTICLE 5. Reconsideration of Votes upon Money Matters.

No vote or order relative to the raising, paying or appropriating any money shall be reconsidered in Town Meeting by any less number of votes than were present at the former consideration of the same. And in order to ascertain the number rightly, the Moderator shall, when any money matter is first considered and voted upon in Town Meeting, count the number of votes, and the Town Clerk shall make a proper minute or memorandum thereof, and, as soon as can conveniently be done, shall enter the same in the town books for reference as occasion may require.

ARTICLE 6. Town Clerk, his Powers and Duties.

The Town Clerk, in addition to exercising the powers and performing the duties, which, by the laws of the Commonwealth Town Clerks are required to exercise and perform, shall be Clerk of the Board of Selectmen, and shall keep a record of their proceedings, and prepare all notices, warrants, certificates, and other papers which they may direct to be prepared, and generally perform all such duties pertaining to his office as they may prescribe. The records of the several Boards shall be kept in separate books, and shall at all times (except during the meetings of the Boards) remain in the office of the Town Clerk, who shall be responsible for their safe keeping. All papers deposited with the Clerk by the several Boards, or which may be otherwise received at his office, shall be carefully preserved, and for this purpose shall be regularly arranged in separate files, folded of uniform size, and neatly and methodically labelled or endorsed, in such manner as to indicate the contents of each paper.

ARTICLE 7. Records of Boards.

All votes, resolutions, or other acts of the several Boards, shall be recorded with exactness, and all reports or other documents, which the Boards may deem of sufficient importance, shall be entered in full upon the records. Each record shall be furnished with marginal references and an alphabetical index; the record of every meeting shall be completed upon the third day succeeding that on which the meeting was held, and at each meeting of every Board the Clerk shall produce its record book for the inspection of its members.

ARTICLE 8. Payment of Accounts.

On and after June 1, 1890, all demands of subsequent date against the town shall be paid directly by the town Treasurer without the use of orders and in the manner following, viz: Notes, Interest, and all sums required by law to be paid either to the state or county treasurer, to be paid by the Town Treasurer without special direction, no other demands to be paid by him without the approval of the Board of Selectmen.

All other demands against the town to be presented to and passed upon by the department or committee having knowledge of the same, and forwarded in the form of bills or pay-rolls, duly approved, to the Selectmen, accompanied by a schedule, otherwise the same shall not be received or acted upon by the Selectmen. Records to be kept by all departments and committees of bills and pay-rolls approved by them, with items, in order that each may make its financial statement to the town in the same form as at present. Bills and pay-rolls, if found by the Selectmen to be in their judgment proper, to be approved by vote at their regular meeting and at once transmitted to the Treasurer for payment.

ARTICLE 9. Town Report. Fiscal Year.

The fiscal year shall close on the 15th of January. The annual report shall be submitted in print, and the Selectmen shall cause such numbers thereof to be printed as may be required for circulation among the citizens of the town.

ARTICLE 10. Selectmen and Assessors.

The Selectmen and Assessors shall be separate boards of five each.

ARTICLE 11. Mode of Electing Trustees.

At the expiration of the terms of service, after 1890, of the several boards of Trustees of Cedar Grove and Oak Grove Cemeteries, the number of each board shall be six; and they shall respectively be chosen as follows: Two for two years, two for four years, and two for six years, and as their several terms expire their successors shall be chosen for six years.

ARTICLE 12. Exemption from Jury Duty.

The members of the Fire Department shall be exempt from jury duty.

ARTICLE 13. Deposits for care of Burial Lots.

In case any money shall be deposited with the Town Treasurer for the preservation and care of cemetery lots, under section 7, chapter 82, of the Public Statutes, the town shall allow interest thereon at the rate of 4 per cent. a year. Any unexpended balance of such money may be withdrawn by the depositor or his legal representative, with the consent of the town, when the reason for the deposit has ceased to exist.

ARTICLE 14. Finance Committee.

At each annual town meeting there shall be appointed a Standing Finance Committee of seven, not holding any town office at the time of their appointment, whose duty it shall be to make a detailed report in print at the next annual meeting, of the estimated necessary expenses of the town for the next ensuing year. The Chairman of the Selectmen shall call the committee together, for organization, one month at least before the annual town meeting. And the Selectmen may fill any vacancies that may occur in their number.

BY-LAWS.

SECTION 1. Disorderly Behavior in the Streets.

No persons shall assemble in a disorderly manner in any street or near any dwelling house, within the town in the night time, and no person shall be guilty of any rude or disorderly behavior, or use indecent, profane or insulting language in any street, or near any dwelling house or other building, to the annoyance or disturbance of any person, under a penalty of not less than one dollar, nor more than ten dollars, for each offence.

SECTION 2. Obstructions on sidewalks and street-crossings.

Three or more persons shall not stand near each other upon or near any sidewalk or street-crossing, so as to obstruct a free passage for foot passengers; and any person or persons obstructing any sidewalk or street-crossing shall move immediately after a request made by one of the Selectmen, the Chief of Police, or any constable or police officer; and any person neglecting or refusing to move on when so requested, shall be liable to a penalty of not less than one dollar, nor more than ten dollars, for each offence.

SECTION 3. Habitual occupation of sidewalks.

No person shall habitually stand upon or near any sidewalk or street crossing, so as to obstruct a free passage for passengers, or expose passengers to unnecessary inconvenience or annoyance, under a penalty of not less than one dollar, or more than ten dollars, for each offence.

SECTION 4. Obstructing passages to houses.

No person or persons shall be or remain upon any doorstep or other projection from any dwelling house or other building within the town, so as to annoy or disturb any person, or shall obstruct any passage to the same or the appurtenances thereof, and any person so being or remaining as aforesaid when ordered by any constable, police officer or watchman, or by the owner or occupant of such dwelling house or other building, shall immediately peaceably depart and stay away therefrom, under the penalty of not less than one dollar, nor more than five dollars, for each offence.

SECTION 5. Obstruction of sidewalks with teams or merchandise.

No person shall place or cause to be placed upon any sidewalk in town, a horse, carriage, or any goods and merchandise, or other obstruction, or any team, except for the purpose of loading or unloading the same, and then not more than fifteen minutes at any one time, or drive or lead any horses or neat cattle thereon, under a penalty of not less than one dollar, nor more than five dollars, for each offence. Nor shall any person deposit or carry along on any sidewalk, under like penalty, any swill or offal.

Nor shall any person, under like penalty, construct or maintain any awning, shade or sign over any part of any street, so that the lowest part thereof shall ever be less than 7 1/2 feet above the sidewalk.

SECTION 6. Injury to sign-posts, boards, or buildings.

No person shall deface, injure or destroy any sign-post or board erected by order of the Selectmen, or injure with paint, or otherwise, any fence or building belonging to the town, under a penalty of not less than one dollar, nor more than ten dollars, for each offence.

SECTION 7. Injury to lamp-posts and fountains.

Whoever shall wilfully and maliciously extinguish or light any of the lamps, or injure any of the posts, gas fixtures, or other furniture to the same belonging, or any public drinking fountain, shall upon conviction, pay a penalty of not less than one dollar, nor more than ten dollars, for each offence.

SECTION 8. Disorderly conduct in Engine or Hose Houses.

No person shall be guilty of any rude or disorderly conduct in any engine or hose house within the town, or shall, in any engine or hose house within the town or apartment thereof, upon the Lord's day, or in the night time of any day, make any loud noise, or by singing or outcries, or in any other manner annoy or disturb any person or persons, or shall at any time carry into or have in possession, or drink in or about any engine or hose house, any spirituous or intoxicating liquor. Whoever shall offend against any provision of this section shall be punished by a fine of not less than three dollars, nor more than ten dollars, for each offence.

SECTION 9. Guns, Pistols, etc., not to be fired.

No person shall fire any gun or pistol, which shall be loaded with ball or shot, or with powder only, (unless in the discharge of military duty or in the exercise of some other legal right so to do,) or fire any squib, cracker, serpent, or other preparation whereof gunpowder is an ingredient, or which consists wholly of the same, in any street or public place, within the compact part of the town, or within twenty rods of any building in the town, under a penalty for this offence of not less than one dollar, nor more than ten dollars.

SECTION 10. Fast driving prohibited.

No person shall ride any horse, or drive any horse or horses attached to a carriage of any description, either of burden or pleasure, or cause the same to be driven, in any street, lane, alley or other way or over any bridge in the town at a faster than eight miles an hour gait, or so as to endanger or expose to injury any person standing, walking or riding in or upon the same, under a penalty of not less than two dollars, nor more than ten dollars, for each offence.

SECTION 11. Cattle not to go at large.

No owner or person having charge of any horse, kine, swine, sheep, goat, or other grazing animal, shall turn or permit the same to go at large, or loose into or in any street within the town, under a penalty of not less than one dollar, nor more than five dollars, for each offence.

SECTION 12. Filth and rubbish not to be deposited in the streets.

No person shall cast at large any hand bills in any street, or put or cause to be put or placed in any street or other public place in the town, any dirt, garbage, carrion, shavings, filth, oyster shells, offal, or any kind of rubbish, except in such place and in such manner as shall be directed or permitted by the Selectmen, or by the Board of Health, on pain of forfeiting and paying for each offence a sum not less than one dollar, nor more than five dollars. And in case any person so offending shall refuse or neglect to remove such matter or thing without delay, after notice given to him or her by the Selectmen to so remove the same, such person shall forfeit and pay a further sum of not less than two dollars, nor more than ten dollars, for any such offence.

SECTION 13. Sink drains, &c.

No person shall hereafter lead, or cause, permit or suffer to be led into or under any street or other way in the town, or construct any open drain, pipe, conductor or conduit, opening into or upon such street or other way, from any house or other building in the town whereby filthy water or any other unclean matter, may be emptied into or upon any street or other way, under a penalty of not less than two dollars, nor more than ten dollars, for each offence.

SECTION 14. Buildings not to be moved through the streets without permission.

No person or persons shall remove or cause to be removed and carried, or assist in removing or carrying, through any part of any street or other public way in the town, any house, shop or other building, either in parts or a whole, exceeding in size ten feet by twelve feet, without permission of the Selectmen first had and obtained in writing, and under such limitations and restrictions as they may deem expedient and may prescribe. Whoever shall offend against the provisions of this section shall forfeit and pay for each offence, a sum not less than ten dollars, nor more than twenty dollars.

SECTION 15. Explosives, how to be kept.

[a] GUNPOWDER.

No person shall keep in any shop, store or other building within the town, which shall be within the distance of twenty-five rods from any other building, more than fifty pounds of gunpowder, and no person shall keep in any shop, store or other building within the town, within ten rods of any other building, more than twenty-five pounds of gunpowder, and no person shall keep any gunpowder in any place within the town, unless the same be well secured in tight casks or canisters. Any persons who shall offend against either of the provisions of this section shall forfeit a sum of not less than ten, nor more than twenty, dollars.

[b] NITRO GLYCERINE.

No person shall keep or have in his possession any Nitro Glycerine, within thirty rods of any dwelling house, or in any place or building within fifteen rods of any other building within the town, without a license from the Selectmen setting forth the manner, place and maximum quantity in which it shall be kept.

[c] GENERAL EXPLOSIVES.

No person shall keep or have in his possession any explosive other than gunpowder in any place or building within ten rods from any other building, and no person shall keep or have in his possession any such explosive in quantities of more than one hundred pounds at any place within the settled limits of the town. But the Selectmen may grant licenses for the sale and keeping of such explosives, in quantities of not more than fifty pounds and providing that the same shall be kept at all times in a metallic case to be located in such part of the licensed premises that it may be easily removed in time of fire; and the location shall be determined or approved by the Board of Fire Engineers. And the Selectmen may grant licenses for the erection and maintenance of magazines for the storage of such explosives as they may deem safe.

SECTION 16. Gunpowder.

[a] GUNPOWDER.

No person having for the time being the care, charge or custody of any wagon, cart or other vehicle containing gunpowder or other explosives, shall cause or permit the same to stand in any street, highway, yard, lane, court or other place within the town, more than five minutes, under penalty of not less than ten dollars, nor more than twenty dollars, for each offence. Provided, that the Selectmen are hereby authorized to, and may designate certain places within the town, not exceeding three in number where such vehicles may be permitted to stand, on such conditions as the Selectmen may prescribe.

[b] NITRO GLYCERINE.

No person shall transport or aid in transporting any Nitro Glycerine within or through the town without a special permit in writing from the Selectmen, and no person shall transport or aid in transporting any other explosive except gunpowder through or within the town; but the Selectmen may grant licenses for the term of one year, for the transportation of the same with such restrictions as they may deem necessary.

[c] PENALTIES.

Whoever violates either of the three foregoing by-laws shall be punished by a fine not exceeding fifty dollars.

SECTION 17. Dealers in old junk.

All licenses which shall be granted by the Selectmen to any persons to be keepers of shops for the purchase, sale or barter of junk, old metals or any second hand articles, or to be dealers therein, shall contain the following conditions:--

FIRST.

That every person at the time of receiving said license, which shall be granted only on a written petition signed by the person applying for the same, shall pay therefor the sum of two dollars.

SECOND.

That every person so licensed shall keep a book, in which shall be written, at the time of each purchase, a description of the article or articles purchased, the name and residence of the person from whom, and the day and hour when, such purchase was made; and that such book shall, at all times, be open to the inspection of the said Selectmen or of any police officer or constable of the town.

THIRD.

That all articles purchased shall be open to the inspection of the Selectmen, or any person by them authorized; and that no dealer shall directly or indirectly either purchase, or receive by barter or exchange, any of the articles aforesaid of any minor, knowing or having reason to believe him to be such.

FOURTH.

That every keeper of such shop shall have in some suitable and conspicuous place, a sign, designating that he is licensed as such, and containing his name; and every wagon or other vehicle used by a dealer shall have upon it the name of the dealer, designating that he is licensed, and the number of his license.

FIFTH.

All licenses granted shall be subject to the provisions of Sections 124 to 127 inclusive, of Chapter 102, Public Statutes; and all violations of the foregoing provisions, and any who, without a license, deal in any of the foregoing articles within the town, shall be punished in accordance with the provisions of Section 31 of Chapter 102, Public Statutes, or any amendment thereof.

SECTION 18. Truancy.

The Town Alms House, to wit: the building and apartments thereof, prepared by the School Committee of the town, under its vote of April, 191881, is hereby established, assigned and provided as a place for the confinement, discipline and instruction of habitually truant children, or of any minor between the ages of seven and fifteen years, convicted of wandering about the streets, or public places of the town, having no lawful occupation or business, not attending school, and growing up in ignorance.

SECTION 19. Truants, punishment of.

Any habitual truant, or any child between the ages of seven and fifteen years, who shall be guilty of wandering about the streets or public places of the town, having no lawful occupation or business, not attending school, and growing up in ignorance, shall be committed to the Truant School at the Alms House, mentioned in Section 18, for such time not exceeding two years, as the justice or court having jurisdiction may determine.

SECTION 20. Truant Officers.

The School Committee shall annually appoint two persons, whose duty it shall be to inquire into all violations of the truant laws, and of the law relating to compulsory education, and to do all the acts required of them by the laws of the Commonwealth, and who alone shall be authorized to carry the same into effect.

SECTION 21. Bicycles, etc., the use of.

Whoever shall ride a bicycle or tricycle, or drive or propel any other vehicle along the sidewalks or footway of any public street in the town, beyond the limits mentioned below, shall be punished by a fine of not less than one or more than ten dollars. Limits: Northerly to the Kendall Osborn Farm, easterly to the Salem line, southerly to the corner of County and Lynn streets, and westerly to the corner of Forrest and Lowell streets.

SECTION 22. Penalties, how recovered.

All penalties for the violation of the foregoing By-law may be recovered by complaint before any trial justice or court having jurisdiction, and shall be paid into the treasury of the town. But all prosecutions shall be commenced within six months from the time of the violation of the By-law, and not afterwards.

SECTION 23. Duty of constables and other officers.

It shall be the duty of all constables, police officers and watchmen of the town, to take due notice of, and promptly prosecute for, all violations of either of the foregoing By-laws.

At a legal meeting of the inhabitants of the Town of Peabody, qualified to vote in town affairs, held on the tenth day of March, 1890, and by adjournment on the eighth day of April, 1890, the foregoing Orders and By-laws having been read it was Voted, That the Town adopt the same. It was also Voted, That Town Clerk, acting in concurrence with the Committee on Orders and By-laws take the necessary measures to cause said Orders and By-laws to be approved by the Court and printed for the use of the town.

WE PUBLISH in these columns today the official opinion of the Supreme Judicial Court, upon the legal contest that has been going on for some months relative to the town electric light plant. The title of the case is Spaulding vs. Peabody, Mr. Spaulding having petitioned the Court through his counsel, for an injunction to restrain the committee appointed last spring, from consummating the contract with the Edison Company.

The Court takes very decided and positive grounds in the case, laying down the doctrine emphatically that there is no authority in precedent or statute to warrant the town in engaging in the manufacture of light. A perusal of the opinion which is complete, word for word, and official, will give our readers an exact idea of the views of the Court upon all the points bearing upon the question at issue. It will be valuable for reference in future, should the subject be again agitated in any form.

THE MAIL carriers handled last month 8121 more pieces than in December, and over 13000 more than in November, the first month of the service. Out of 39,261 pieces delivered by them last month, 20,000 were letters. Their collections comprised 16,872 pieces, making a total of 56,133 pieces that went through their hands. The service seems to be highly satisfactory. We have an active and effective corps of carriers. Their results are not only very good for 1890, but we doubt if any of the old men in the service can show a better record. Take a rainy day and figure how many pieces the carriers handle in a minute. You will be surprised at the result of the problem. Then think of the vicissitudes of the weather, travel, delays of housekeepers in answering calls, and the unreasonable demands that cranks are making upon them, in common with other public servants, and you will wonder that human endurance can stand the strain of body and mind put upon these sturdy servants of public convenience and necessity. The chilling blasts, the driving rain, the blinding snow, deep slush or ice have no terrors that these men are not called upon to overcome. We should congratulate ourselves that fortune favors us with such a service and do all in our power to foster and encourage its extension so that our less favored neighbors may participate in the luxury we enjoy.

There are ways in which we may promote the extension of the carrier system. By patronizing the local post office, instead of buying stamps out of town. Everybody, to more or less degree, believes in patronizing home industries, and we know of none that gives such large return for a little outlay as the Post Office.

FIRE ALARMS FOR SCHOOLS.

AN ORDER has been introduced into the legislature requesting the committee on education to consider the expediency of enacting laws for better protection of school children in case of fire, by requiring the adoption of an electric fire alarm system to be connected with all school buildings more than two stories high. It also comprehends the idea of drilling the scholars in the method of filing out of the school buildings. The ideas are both old ones, but the plan of universal and compulsory alarm and drill systems has both the merit of novelty and utility.

At the last annual town meeting of Peabody, it will be remembered, a committee was appointed to consider the expediency of placing an auxiliary fire alarm in all of the school houses of this town. That committee was composed in part, of practical fire underwriters and firemen, who gave the matter due attention, and while almost, if not quite unanimous in the opinion that some electric system for giving alarm in case of fire would be desirable, reported adversely, solely on account of inherent difficulties of the auxiliary system proposed.

Auxiliary fire alarm boxes have been used by manufacturers in this town and elsewhere, to considerable extent. The plan was thought, before trial, so beneficial, that a discount was made by the insurance companies to parties equipped with them, but after a thorough test, it was decided that little or no advantage was derived from their use, and the discount was disallowed. It seems to be well settled that some system of alarm should be introduced to minimize danger incident to fires in school buildings, but the problem to be solved is, what system shall be employed and what improvements can be introduced to make the service effective. This matter should not be dealt with hastily. A thorough investigation should be instituted to learn the advantages and defects of the various plans now in use, and if, as will quite likely be found, that of the auxiliary alarms now in operation are able to fill all the requirements, the general fire alarm should be extended or re-arranged so as to give each school house a box, placed on the building where it can be reached in case of emergency, with the least possible delay.

But the whole danger does not, by any means, lie in the damage that comes directly from conflagration. In almost every instance of fire in school, as well as other public buildings where many are gathered, the larger part of the loss of life and bodily injury that has ensued, has been caused by trampling the weaker in the panic that accompanies the rush for life. It is therefore necessary that the other provision referred to be looked after. Regular drill should be organized and practiced at frequent intervals, to instill self-possession and discipline into the scholars and teachers as well. An ounce of prevention has always been worth a pound of cure and we see no reason why that rule does not apply to the present subject. We hope and trust that the legislative committee will give due consideration to this matter and make recommendations that will be adopted by our law makers to avert the present dangers.

VALUABLE BUT COSTS NOTHING.

Probably no physician of our day has gained such a reputation for curing cases of lingering or long standing diseases through treatment by mail as the great Specialist in nervous and chronic diseases, Dr. Greene of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., discoverer of the well-known remedy, Dr. Greene's Nervura. He uses in his practice only harmless vegetable remedies, and has given special attention to treatment of patients at a distance through letter correspondence. Consultation in this manner or personally is entirely free of charge. Any sufferer from whatever kind of disease has the privilege of writing to him a description of his or her case, and he will return a carefully considered answer, fully explaining your disease and giving you a perfect understanding of all its symptoms, free of charge.

His success is something wonderful in restoring the sick to health, and his practice is without doubt the largest in this country. Send for his symptom blank and write him, sufferer, for his advice is your case. This will cost you nothing, and may lead to your cure.

The Brookside entertainment in the South church vestry Wednesday evening, was attended by a good size audience and every one was well pleased with the meritorious programme presented. The musical selections by the choir were well given and received liberal applause, while the readings by Miss May Crawford were the best selected and most finely rendered that have been heard in town this season. Miss Crawford is an elocutionist of exceptional dramatic talent, and her "Swan Song" was delivered in a manner rarely equalled.

A quiet wedding took place at the residence of Mr. David A. Messer on Main street on Wednesday evening, the contracting parties being Nathaniel U. Annable, son of Benjamin R. Annable and Miss Nellie M. Messer, daughter of the above named gentleman. The ceremony was performed by Rev. George A. Hall of the Old South Church, in the presence of a number of immediate friends and relatives. The newly married couple were recipients of numerous and costly presents. We wish them a pleasant voyage upon the connubial sea of life. They will reside at 166 Main street.

The School Committee have had plans for remodeling the High School prepared by Wm. D. Dennis. It is estimated that the alterations contemplated by the committee, will cost about $4000. The side entrances to the building will be closed up and two new ones made on the front of the building, one for the girls and one for the boys. The room on the second floor will be lengthened thirteen feet by removing the old stairways and doing away with the two small recitation rooms on this floor. Access to the second story will be had by new stairs in the front of the building leading up from the front corridors. There will be clothes rooms and toilet rooms on both floors and a small private room for the master on the second floor front, between the stairs, which will take up the two corners. On the first floor, besides closets, clothes rooms, etc., there will be four good sized rooms, one to be used as a laboratory for chemistry, another for drawing and the other two as recitation rooms. New floors and ceilings will be put in, upstairs and down and the building put in a condition that will meet the requirements of high school purposes for years to come. At present the rooms are much crowded, and the master's room is so full that the scholars are seated upon the platform. The committee will present the plans to the finance committee for consideration.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL.

AT THE TREMONT.

Russell's company of merry makers appeared upon the stage of the Tremont last Monday evening. The house was packed. The farce "The City Directory" has lost nothing of its sparkling humor since the former presentation. The audience were kept in an uproar of laughter during the entire performance. The Irwin Sisters, Flora and May, and Miss Amelia Glover, Messrs. Wm. Collier, Ignatia Martinetti, J. C. Miron and Burt Haverly are the stars of the company. The Irwin Sisters were recalled by storms of applause on several occasions and when they appeared in the last act the audience seemed insatiable, calling and recalling them before the curtain. Their success was certainly a great triumph. Miss Amelia Glover has won much favor during the week by her artistic dancing; Messrs. Collier and Martinetti furnished a mine of mirth, as they always do. The "Rosalinds" Miss Kate Hart, Bessie Cleveland and May Kiso are graceful dancers and pleasing singers, and have also come in for a large share of appreciation. Sidney Booth, Julius Witmark and Joseph Jackson though playing minor roles, sustain their parts admirably. The play has been well attended during the entire week and it is probable the interest will continue unabated during the week to come, which will close the engagement.

GRAND OPERA HOUSE.

Mr. James B. Mackie has been the attraction during the week at the Grand Opera House, as "Billy Grimes" in "Grimes Cellar Door," a light farce that is well calculated to drive away blues. He is sustained by a good company. This piece gives place next week to W. J. Gilmore's spectacular drama "Twelve Temptations."

BOSTON MUSEUM.

Next Tuesday will be the 50th performance of "Betty's Finish" and the "Solicitor." The success of this engagement is one rarely equalled in Boston. "Sunlight and Shadow" will supersede the present bill before long.

HOLLIS STREET.

Fannie Davenport closes her engagement to-night. She has been warmly greeted and sustained her high reputation in the production of Cleopatra.

Monday evening Mr. and Mrs. Kendall will appear in "The Squire" which will continue during this week.

THE BOSTON.

The second week of the Hanlon-Volter-Martineti Company has proved more successful than last week's engagement. The house has been packed every night. The presentation is generally acknowledged as one of the best specialty performances ever witnessed in Boston. Walter Emerson has fully sustained the enviable reputation made years ago as a cornet soloist. The regular members of the company, acrobats, contortionists and other specialists are unequalled in their several lines.

The Massachusetts Press Association enjoyed the performance through the courtesy of Managers Thompkins, Harris and Rich last Monday evening.

Next week a "Trip to Chinatown" will be put on—a comedy by Chas. H. Hoyt.

GLOBE THEATRE.

Next week beginning Monday, Mr. Henry E. Dixey will appear in the grand scenic production "Seven Ages," a humorous elaboration of Shakespeare's sublime soliloquy.

"Ship Aho!" is on its second month at the Park Theatre.

Grand Operatic Festival matinee at Music Hall this afternoon.

Mr. Franz Rummel, the pianist made his reappearance at the Union Hall last Monday evening after an absence of several years, and his re-entrance was an attraction that called together an unusually interesting audience, among which were many professional and amateur players.

The programme arranged for the evening was well calculated to test the abilities of so great an artist as Mr. Rummel, the selections including the chromatic fantasia fugue, Bach; the sonata quasi una fantasia, op. 27, No. 2, Beethoven; the fantasia, op. 17, Schumann; the rondo capriccioso, op. 14, Mendelssohn; the theme et variations, op. 19, Tchaikowsky; the intermezzo scherzoso (a canzonatura), op. 21, No. 9, Bulw; the polonaise, op. 53, and nocturne, op. 62, No. 2, and scherzo, op. 20, Chopin; the liebestraum No. 2, Liszt, and the etude, "La Campanella," Paganini-Liszt.

Highest of all in Leavening Power.—U. S. Gov't Report, Aug. 17, 1889.

Mr. Rummel's playing has always reflected his personal characteristics, and in all his performances in this difficult list, musical individuality was at all times apparent, and this gave the charm of former years to all his work.

West Peabody.

Mr. Boman Viles has magnanimously offered to carry one half of the scholars of the grammar school on a gratuitous sleigh ride if some one would carry the other half. Mr. Tedford offers to carry the other half and now the scholars are praying for snow. Would that we had more such public spirited men.

Mr. Walter Southwick has stuck out a shingle and opened a law office near the Central Depot, Central Sq., Lynn.

Mrs. Mary Gibbs has returned to her home from Boston where she has been nursing for several months past.

Society circles were on the qui vive in West Peabody last week and almost every night had its social event. Monday evening a small party went on a sleigh ride to Middleton in response to the invitation of Mr. Emmerson of that town. The host provided them with an excellent supper and a most enjoyable evening was put in.

Tuesday evening the Ladies Aid Society held its fortnightly sociable at the home of Mrs. Wm. H. Southwick. The sociable was a social and financial success.

Wednesday evening about thirty couples, the cream of the place, proceeded to enjoy a sleigh ride. Four large two horse teams presided over by Boman Viles, Albert Tedford, E. A. Needham, and James Eaton, respectively, started out about 8 o'clock bent on fun. Their route was laid through Lynnfield, Lynn, over the floating bridge to Salem, where they stopped for refreshments and then through Peabody home. So thoroughly a good time was enjoyed that it is expected to be repeated next snow.

The climax of social events of the week was reached Saturday evening when a surprise party was given by Mrs. Albert Tedford in honor of her husband's birthday. Twenty-five invitations were given out for a five o'clock tea and about fifty more for an evening party. Every person invited was present at the tea-table and about seventy responded in the evening, when a lunch was provided.

Mr. Tedford occupies the large mansion house formerly the home of lawyer Upham and it is most admirably adapted for such an occasion as this.

One large room is fitted up exclusively for the playing of games. Numerous tables are ranged about upon which are all of the popular and modern games. The dining room was fitted out with all that the most fastidious epicurean could ask for both in the line of service and viands. These combined with the natural hospitality of the host and hostess made a good time inevitable.

A pleasant feature of the evening was the presentation to Mr. Tedford of a rattan rocking chair; the gift of the tea party. Walter Southwick did the presenting. The party broke up at eleven o'clock.

Mr. Joseph Spear will leave town March 1st, and move to Vermont where he will assume charge of his father-in-law's farm. He has already let his house and has disposed of his horse and poultry to Daniel Brown.

Last Sunday was the first Sabbath that the regular services in the church have been conducted for three weeks. The other two Sabbaths the weather was such that neither people or pastor were able to attend. Rev. Mr. Ainsworth preached a very practical sermon last Sabbath at the conclusion of which Rev. Mr. Taft of Worcester, who came with him as a visitor, made interesting remarks on missions in the southern states.

Mr. Frank Southwick who recently lost a valuable horse by death has been tendered the use by Joe Southwick of one of his horses until he can replace the one he lost.

Mr. Edgar Smith, a former resident, has recently entered the matrimonial state. Mr. Smith and bride are spending a few days with his aunt, Mrs. J. O. Goodale.

Mr. Benjamin Ware has consented to speak before the Farmer's Club sometime this month.

Mr. Eben M. Taylor has entered the services of a wholesale rope and wire firm on Congress street, Boston, as book-keeper.

Official Opinion of the Supreme Judicial Court.

Spaulding vs. Peabody.

Feld, C. J. We assume for the reasons stated in the opinion given by the Justices of this Court to the House of Representatives on May 27, 1890, 150 Mass. 592, that the Legislature by statute can confer upon towns authority to construct and maintain works for the manufacture and distribution of electricity to be used by the towns and their inhabitants for illuminating purposes. The question now presented is whether the existing statutes confer any such authority, either for the purpose of lighting the streets of towns, or for this and the additional purpose of furnishing light to their inhabitants at reasonable rates. Such authority is not within any of the customary powers which towns from very early times have exercised and must be derived, if it exists, from the statutes relating to towns.

By the St. of 1893, c. 28, § 1, Province Laws, State Ed. 64, entitled "An act for the regulating of townships, choice of town officers and setting forth their power" it was provided by section 6, that the inhabitants might be assessed for the maintenance and support of the ministry, schools, the poor and for the defraying of other necessary charges arising within the said towns.

By the St. of 1893, c. 6, § 1, Province Laws, State Ed. 136, it was provided that the surveyors of highways, to be annually chosen in each town, shall take care that "all highways, private ways, causeways and bridges lying within the precincts of such town be kept in repair and amended from time to time, when, and so often as shall be needful at the charge of such town, where it is not otherwise settled, so that they may be safe and convenient for travelers, teams, and drovers, etc."

These are the purposes for which the inhabitants of towns were authorized to grant and vote money by the St. of 1785, c. 75, § 7; and by the St. of 1786, c. 81, § 1. Powers from time to time have been given by statutes to towns to grant money for other purposes, many of which appear now in the Pub. Sts. c. 27, § 10-51. The provisions that a town may grant and vote money "for all other necessary charges arising in such town" is still retained in the statutes, Ibid. § 10, but it is plain, from an examination of the course of legislation that this phrase has been considered as of very limited scope, and that the Legislature has generally thought it necessary specifically to confer the authority if the inhabitants of towns were to have the power to grant money for purposes not recognized as a municipal duty by the early usages of towns. For statutes subsequent to the Public Statutes conferring powers on towns involving the expenditure of money, see St. 1882, c. 154, 255; St. 1884, c. 42; St. 1885, c. 60, 123; St. 1886, c. 78; St. 1887, c. 345; St. 1889, cc. 21, 377, 380; St. 1890, cc. 119, 124. See also Pub. Sts. c. 34, § 1; c. 35, § 28; c. 44, § 88, 9; c. 50, § 7; c. 80, § 62, 70.

The first statute we are aware of authorizing a town to light its streets was a special statute relating to the town of Boston, St. 1773-4, c. 12. 5 Province Laws, State Ed. 301. The statute, among other things, recited that "many of the inhabitants of the said town of Boston have by a generous subscription raised a sum of money sufficient for purchasing such a number of lamps as will be necessary for illuminating the streets of that metropolis," etc., and it authorized the selectmen to set up lamps in the streets, and to contract for the lighting of the same; and after reciting that the inhabitants of the town had voted at a meeting held on the eleventh day of May last "that a sufficient number of lamps should be set up and fixed, in said town, for enlightening the same in manner as aforesaid," provided that the inhabitants might at a legal town meeting "make such provision for the supporting and maintaining such lamps and lights, and other necessary charges attending the same as they judge best, by raising such a sum of money yearly by a tax on the inhabitants as may by them be thought necessary for that purpose." The statute also imposed forfeitures for breaking, throwing down, or extinguishing the lamps, or injuring the lamp posts. This was a temporary statute, and was made perpetual by the St. of 1796, c. 69, Tyler vs. Sturdy, 108 Mass. 19, 200. It was repealed by the St. of 1825, c. 3, which authorized the mayor and aldermen of the city of Boston to set up lamps in the streets and other places in the city; and "to make all necessary contracts, rules, orders, and regulations respecting the said lamps, and the lighting and keeping the same in repair, and the regulation and preservation of the same as they deem most for the benefit of said city." If any inference is to be drawn from the passage of these special statutes it is that it was not then considered that a town had authority to maintain street lamps under the general statutes then in force.

It has been uniformly held that cities and towns were under no obligation to light their streets for the purpose of making them safe and convenient for travelers. Sharland vs. Salem, 1 Allen, 30. Tyson vs. Booth 100 Mass. 158. Randall vs. Eastern Railroad, 106 Mass. 276.

The first general statutes which in terms relate to the maintenance of street lamps in a town was the St. of 1870, c. 332, which is now the Pub. Sts. c. 27, Sec. 37. The first section was as follows: "Any town at a legal meeting having an article in the warrant for that purpose may authorize a village or district in such town, containing not less than one thousand inhabitants, the limits of which shall be accurately defined, to organize under such name as may be authorized by such town for the purpose of erecting and maintaining street lamps, establishing and maintaining libraries, building and maintaining sidewalks, and employing and paying watchmen and police officers, or for any of such purposes," and by subsequent sections provision was made for calling meetings, electing officers, and raising money for these purposes. Under this statute a town might perhaps make the limits of the district the same as those of the town, if it contained not less than one thousand inhabitants. The statute was mainly intended for towns a part of whose territory was so thickly settled that the powers named in the statute might properly be exercised only within a defined district or part of the town and the taxes therefor be imposed upon "the property, real and personal, within the district." Pub. Sts. c. 27, Sec. 37, 39; c. 35,

Sec. 54; but the inference is strong that the Legislature intended that towns containing not less than one thousand inhabitants might erect and maintain street lamps without constituting themselves districts under the statute.

The St. of 1869, c. 457, Sec. 1, provided that "cities and towns may construct for their own uses lines of electric telegraph upon and along the highways and public roads, within their respective limits, subject to the provisions of chapter sixty-four of the General Statutes as far as the same are applicable." This is now the Pub. Sts. c. 27, Sec. 44. The St. of 1883, c. 221, provides that "All provisions of law granting to persons and corporations authority to erect, lay and maintain, and to cities and towns authority to regulate telegraph and telephone lines, except sections sixteen and eighteen of chapter one hundred and nine of the Public Statutes, shall so far as applicable, apply to lines for the transmission of electricity for the purpose of lighting." In the statutes, towns and cities are not usually referred to as persons or corporations, and the express mention of cities and towns in this statute, and the distinction between the authority granted to them, which is "to regulate telegraph and telephone lines," and that granted to persons and corporations, which is "to erect, lay and maintain" such lines, shows that cities and towns were not meant to be included in the words "persons and corporations." See St. 1889, c. 434. The St. of 1885, c. 314, provides for the appointment of a board of gas commissioners. See Pub. Sts. c. 61. By the St. of 1887, c. 382, this board was given "general supervision of all companies engaged in the manufacture and sale of electric light," etc., and by the St. of 1889, c. 373, the name of the board was changed to that of gas and electric light commissioners. The St. of 1888, c. 350, Sec. 1, provided that "Any gas company in this Commonwealth, whether furnishing gas under the provisions of general laws, or of any special charter, or of any contract with any city or town, may apply to the board of gas commissioners to fix and determine the price of the gas to be thereafter sold and delivered by said company, or to revise any former order or action of said board in regard to the quality and price thereof" etc., and this implies that gas companies may sell gas to cities and towns. This is perhaps implied in the St. of 1885, c. 314, Sec. 9, which is made applicable to electric light companies by the St. of 1887, c. 382, Sec. 2. An inference may perhaps be drawn from these statutes, that cities and towns are authorized to buy gas and electric light from gas and electric light companies, but this is the extent of the inference which can be drawn from these statutes. The Pub. Sts. c. 203, Sec. 76, provide among other things for the punishment of any person who wilfully and maliciously "extinguishes a lamp, or breaks, destroys or removes a lamp, lamp post, etc., erected on a bridge, sidewalk, street, highway, court or passage." This provision was derived from the St. of 1823, c. 113; and it implies that lamps and lamp posts in the places mentioned are or may be lawful erections. Without considering the special charters of cities, it may be assumed that the inference to be drawn from the general statutes we have cited, is, that towns, particularly those containing one thousand inhabitants or more, may erect and maintain street lamps, and may buy gas and electricity as well as oil and other substances to be used for furnishing the light. See Sullivan vs. Holyoke, 135 Mass. 273.

The argument is that if such a town as Peabody can erect and maintain street lamps, it can maintain them by any appropriate means, and that one appropriate means is the construction and maintenance of works for the manufacture and distribution of the gas and electricity which it uses for the purpose of lighting its streets. The extent to which powers will be implied from general words depends a good deal upon the nature of the written instrument, the meaning of which is to be determined. In interpreting a constitution of government, the necessities of the government established by the constitution must be considered, and when it appears that there is no attempt specifically to define in the constitution all the powers granted, but that the great objects of the government are described only in general terms, a somewhat liberal construction may be necessary in order that the government may not fail of accomplishing the ends for which it was created.

Towns are subordinate divisions of a State and they vary greatly in the number of their inhabitants and the amount of their taxable property. It is wholly for the Legislature to determine, within the limitations of the Constitution, the powers which towns will possess, and when it appears that the custom of the Legislature has been specifically to define from time to time the purposes for which towns may raise money by the taxation of their inhabitants, and when the Legislature meets frequently and may at any time grant additional powers if they are deemed necessary, a somewhat strict construction of the existing statutes is reasonable, and in accordance with the presumed intention of the Legislature. Under the special acts whereby Boston was authorized to maintain street lamps it could not have been held that the town or city was authorized to engage in the whale fisheries for the purpose of procuring oil. The intention was that the oil for the lamps should be bought as persons generally bought oil used for lights. Towns are authorized to raise money for the support and employment of the poor, but it could not reasonably be held that it was intended the towns should at public expense erect and maintain factories for the manufacture of all the clothing which the poor might wear, or of all the implements which they might use. Towns are authorized to raise money for carrying pupils to and from the public schools, but this could not be held to authorize towns to maintain a street railway or railroad. Towns are authorized to raise money to maintain public libraries, but this does not mean that they can maintain paper mills and printing establishments for making books for the libraries. These are undoubtedly extreme examples, but they illustrate the necessity of a somewhat strict construction of the statutes relating to the powers of towns. The decisions of this Court show that the statutes concerning the powers of towns have been construed strictly, when the powers are such as to require the raising and spending of considerable sums of money. In Minot vs. West Roxbury, 112 Mass. 1, it is said that "it is well settled by our decisions that towns derive all their authority to tax their inhabitants from the statutes; if the authority to tax for a particular purpose is not found there, either in express terms or by necessary implication it does not exist." In Coolidge vs. Brookline, 114 Mass. 592, it is said "Such power to tax must in all cases spring from the statutes, and must be found there in terms, or be necessarily inferred from some corporate duty imposed, or some corporate right given. The only exception to this rule is confined to a few cases of usage relating to the comfort and convenience of the inhabitants of a town, such as town clocks, hay scales, pumps, reservoirs, etc., and is not to be extended. Towns have been kept rigidly within this rule by the Legislature and the Court." See St. of 1889, c. 380. Connolly vs. Beverly, 151 Mass. 437. In Anthony vs. Adams, 1 Met. 244, it is said "A town might be so situated near the outlet of a lake or pond where a road would be liable to be flooded and damaged by freshets, and where a heavy expense would be required for the necessary bridges and embankments, but by cutting a canal and making a new outlet at the opposite side of the lake, at some distance, this expense might be saved. This would hardly be sufficient to raise a constructive power in the town to undertake such a distant canal, or to confer an authority on county commissioners to require it. It would lead to a latitude of construction in regard to corporate power and duties, which would be in a high degree dangerous." An examination of the statutes shows that the Legislature has many times conferred upon towns, by subsequent statutes, powers which have been denied them by the courts under the statutes existing at the time of the decisions, but often with very important limitations upon the amount of money to be expended, or the manner in which the powers should be exercised. Sometimes the Legislature, has conferred powers upon certain towns and cities, by special acts, but has not passed a general law upon the subject perhaps because it was thought that some towns were too small and too poor to bear the necessary expenses. The St. of 1870, c. 93 which authorizes cities and towns to purchase the water right and franchises of aqueduct companies or of municipal or other corporations has placed special restrictions upon the exercise of this authority, and a limitation upon the amount of bonds which may be issued in payment. See St. 1873, c. 255; Pub. Sts. c. 27, Sec. 27-31; c. 29. §

It cannot be said that the erection of such works as are contemplated by the vote shown in this case are in any strict sense necessary in order to enable the town of Peabody to light its streets. When street lamps were first authorized in Boston the use of gas or electricity for furnishing light was unknown. Oil, or some similar substance, was used for that purpose then, as it is now used in many places. Gas has now been used for a long time in thickly settled communities, and has been bought for that purpose, yet there is nothing in the statutes indicating that towns may construct and maintain gas works for the purpose of lighting their streets, except the general words that they may erect and maintain street lamps; and the construction put upon the statutes in practice has been that towns under the authority conferred by the general laws have not undertaken themselves to construct and maintain gas works for lighting the streets. In small towns the erection and maintenance of such works under a general implied power might involve an expenditure of money which could not well be borne. The subject of constructing and maintaining gas or electric works for the manufacture of gas or electricity and the distribution of them through the streets of towns and cities, for the purpose of furnishing light is one of too much importance to be attached as a mere incident to the power given to erect and maintain street lamps, and we think that if the Legislature had intended that towns generally, should have authority to erect and maintain such works, the authority would have been plainly expressed in the statutes, with such limitations and accompanied by such restrictions as the Legislature might think it prudent to establish. We see no indications in the existing statutes that the Legislature intended to make provision for the exercise of any such authority by the towns of the Commonwealth.

If we assume that the only action now contemplated by the town of Peabody is the erection and maintenance of electric works for the purpose of lighting its streets in the manner shown by the evidence, still we are of opinion that the vote is beyond "the legal right and power" of the town. HEROES.

Thronging through the cloud-rift, whose are they the faces? Faint revealed, yet sure divined, the famous ones of old? "What," they smile, "our names, our deeds, so soon erases Time upon thy tablet, where life's glory lies enrolled?"

"Was it for mere fool's play, make believe and mummery So we battled it like men, not, boylike, sulked and whined? Each of us heard clang God's 'Come!' and each was coming; Soldiers all, to forward face, not sneaks to lag behind!"

"How of the field's fortune? That concerned our Leader! Led, we struck our stroke, nor cared for doings left and right; Each as on his sole head, failer or succeder, Lay the blame or lit the praise; no care for cowards; fight!"

Then the cloud rift broadens, spanning earth that's under. Wild our world displays its worth, man's strife and strife's success; All the good and beauty; wonder crowning wonder. Till my heart and soul applaud perfection, nothing less. —Robert Browning.

Cupid vs. Clothes.

When Elizabeth held the fort in England, and Sir Walter Raleigh used to go about with clothes on that if he had got hard up he could have gone around to his uncle's and put them up for thousands of pounds, not to mention a certain pair of shoes of his which were said to be worth 6,000 crowns, then it became the fashion for a man who was in love to neglect his apparel, as if he were too much occupied to bother about such trifles.

There was one mark in particular—his garters were not to be tied. So that when an Elizabethan dude walked down the Mall with these useful appendages hanging on behind him it was equivalent to saying that his heart was gone. Here we have Shakespeare in "As You Like It" putting these words into the mouth of fair Rosalind, "There is none of my uncle's marks upon you; he taught me how to know a man in love. Then your hose should be ungartered, your bonnet unbanded, your sleeves unbottomed, your shoes untied, and everything about you denoting a careless desolation."—Clothing and Furnisher.

The Personal Pronoun in Conversation.

The inordinate employment of the possessive case is a vulgar solecism, and not used to excess by those of gentle breeding. There are both men and women who are forever talking about "my carriage," "my house," etc., until they disgust their hearers. One is apt to imagine that such persons are the possessors of newly acquired wealth and its appurtenances, when this small, two lettered word slips from their lips with unmeaning frequency.

The pronoun "I" should not be too often repeated, as it gives too personal and egotistic a turn to conversation, and the frequent recurrence of "I said so and so," and "I did so and so," reveals a nature weighed down with a sense of its own importance, and caring little about what other people are doing or thinking. —Jenness-Miller Magazine.

People Who Eat Alone.

In all thoroughly civilized countries the members of a family and their guests partake of meals while collected around a central board, but this is not so with the majority or even a fraction of the semi-civilized and barbarous nations. The Mardivian islanders dine alone, retiring to the most secret parts of their huts for the purpose of eating their food. This custom probably arose among them in an early period of their history, for fear, perhaps, that another with equally sharp an appetite and more bodily strength would deprive the feaster of his meal. —St. Louis Republic.

Declaration of War Not Necessary.

Wars are often engaged in without any set declaration. This is the case in Europe, and has been so here. The United States made a pronouncement of this sort when it entered into the contest with Great Britain in 1812, but no such formality was observed by us in the contest with Mexico or in the civil struggle of 1861-5. In each case the government recognized that a state of war existed and acted accordingly. —St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Canine Intelligence.

One of the intelligent dogs lives in Bar Harbor, Me. He was carrying a paper the other day when several canine companions began to bother him. He put the paper down on the ground, and when a dog attempted to touch it sprang on him and gave him a good shaking. These tactics he repeated several times, till at last he could not get any dog to touch the paper, and then he quickly picked it up and walked away. —Kennebec Journal.

A "Hello!" Raise.

One telephone was put in at a small town in Kansas, and the owner of a house to rent immediately raised the price $5 per month. Then he went over and called up a sawmill half a mile away, and burst a blood vessel trying to keep up a conversation over the wire. —Detroit Free Press.

EARLY OVERLAND JOURNEYS.

Interesting Paper Read Before the California Historical Society.

R. A. Thompson read a paper before the California Historical society upon "The Overland Journeys of Jedediah Smith in 1826 and 1827." Capt. Smith and his band of hardy trappers were the first white men known to enter California by the overland route. He, with Jackson and Sublette, constituted the Rocky Mountain Fur company in 1826, and they determined to project their operations westward from the Rocky mountains to the Pacific coast, and contest with the Hudson Bay company for the wealth of furs and skins supposed to be obtainable along the western coast. While the other two partners turned northward toward Salt Lake and journeyed toward Oregon, Smith left the rendezvous at Salt Lake in August, 1826, with fifteen men and started for southern California.

Following up the Sevier river, and across the divide to the head of the Virgin, he went down the latter to the Colorado, and was piloted across the Mojave desert to San Gabriel mission, where he arrived in December, 1826. The Mexican governor of California, then at San Diego, summoned Smith to his presence, and learning of his intention to go up the coast to the Columbia river, forbade the journey, and ordered Smith and his party to return to United States territory by the route he had entered the Mexican province. But the hardy American did not propose to abandon his purpose so readily, and in January, 1827, he quietly set forth on his journey northward.

He entered the San Joaquin valley, and proceeded as far as what is supposed to be the Sacramento or American river, where he encountered hostile Indians. Turning back to where he had encountered a more friendly tribe, he made a permanent camp, and with two men started back for the company's rendezvous at Salt Lake for re-enforcements. Crossing the Sierras by Walker's Pass, the trip to Salt Lake was made in twenty-eight days.

With eighteen men and two women, wives of members of his party, he started on his return to his camp by the route originally traversed, but in August he was attacked on the Colorado by Indians, and ten of his men and two women were killed. After much suffering and renewed difficulties with the Mexican authorities in southern California, the survivors reached the camp in the San Joaquin valley. Six months were spent in trapping along the upper Sacramento, and after securing $30,000 worth of skins the party started for the Columbia river, but all except Smith and three others were killed by the Indians.

He reached Vancouver destitute, but was well received by the Hudson Bay company's manager there. A portion of his possessions was rescued from the Indians by aid of the Hudson Bay company's men, and Smith finally reached his partners, and in 1830 returned to St. Louis. In 1831 he started with a wagon train for Santa Fe, but was killed by the Comanches at the crossing of the Cimarron river. —San Francisco Bulletin.

Influence of a Simple Invention.

One cannot always tell, until after the event, on what apparently insignificant act his whole future hinges. Dr. Cyrus Hamlin, president of Middlebury college in Vermont, and formerly of Maine, in a recent address at Woodford's said his life depended on the making of a screw. When at Bowdoin college in 1832 he made a brass screw for Professor Smith's theodolite, and that led to his making a steam engine, the first one built in Maine. He had never seen one in all his life, but he asked the professor if he thought he could sell an engine, if he could make one, for as much as he could earn by teaching in the vacation. The professor thought he could, he had made the screw so perfectly. So he went to Portland, and went to work in a clockmaking establishment. At the end of ten weeks' vacation the engine was completed, and sold to Bowdoin college for $175. He could have earned but $40 teaching. The price of the engine was sufficient to pay a year's expenses at Bowdoin in those days. —Bangor News.

Credence in Medicinal Charms.

It is not only among the rude savages of India that the virtue of medicinal charms is implicitly credited. The illiterate and simple minded of England repose all necessary faith in the same fascinating delusions, and there is no ancient woman in any of our remote villages, who professes the customary knowledge and superiority of her age, who has not a specific charm for whooping cough, ague, teething, convulsions, epilepsy and every other common ailment and disease.

Every one is acquainted with the efficacy of the "royal touch" in cases of the king's evil, or scrofula, and scarcely a week passes that we do not see in our newspapers an advertisement for the disposal of a child's cold or a serious form of deafness. —London Tit-Bits.

Sickness and Superstition.

For the cure of epilepsy, or the falling sickness, numerous are the charms that have been invented. A very common remedy among the poor people about London, and particularly in Essex, was to cut the tip of a black cat's tail in order to procure three drops of blood, which are to be taken in a spoonful of milk and repeated three days successively. If the patient was informed of the composition it lost its efficacy. The patients also were to creep head foremost down some three pairs of stairs three times a day for three successive days. —London Tit-Bits.

Dried Mushrooms in Soups.

The indiscriminate use of dried mushrooms in soups and stews on the continent has led to unfortunate results in many cases, especially, it would seem, in Berlin, where the police are stated to have issued a caution against their consumption. The assertion that poisonous fungi are sometimes dried with edible mushrooms is sufficiently probable to cause no surprise. —London Hospital.

NOTICE OF BOARD OF HEALTH

The Board of Health of the Town of Peabody, hereby publish, in accordance with the laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, the Rules and Regulations of the Cattle Commissions.

WM. S. OSBORNE, Board of Health.
Geo. M. Frost, M. D.
J. OMAS J. RELIHAN.

Jan. 24, 1891.

Sec. 10 Chapter 252. Laws of 1887.

When a board of cattle commissioners, appointed in accordance with the provisions of chapter three hundred and seventy-eight of the acts of the year eighteen hundred and eighty-five, is in existence, and makes and publishes any regulations concerning the extirpation, cure or treatment of animals infected with, or which have been exposed to any contagious disease, such regulations shall supersede those made by boards of health, and boards of health shall carry out and enforce all orders and directions of said commissioners to them directed.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

STATE CATTLE COMMISSION.

SECRETARY'S OFFICE.

DEDHAM, MASS., JAN. 3, 1891.

The Cattle Commissioners of Massachusetts, in conformity to the requirements of the Public Statutes, hereby make and publish the following rules and regulations for the suppression of contagious diseases among domestic animals.

RULE 1. Whoever has knowledge of, or has good reason to suspect, the existence of a contagious disease among any species of domestic animals in this State, whether such knowledge or suspicion is obtained by personal examination or otherwise, shall forthwith give notice thereof to the board of health of the city or of the town where such diseased or suspected animals are kept.

RULE 2. The board of health of a city or town having received notice of a suspected case of contagious disease among any of the domestic animals in their city or town, shall forthwith make an examination thereof personally, or by a competent person appointed by them for that purpose, and, if satisfied there are good reasons for believing that contagion is present shall cause the suspected animals to be securely held by the owners or other reliable persons and shall immediately inform the Cattle Commissioners.

RULE 3. An order, written or verbal, to securely hold such suspected animals in isolation shall be binding, whether given by a member of the board of health of the city or town, or an authorized agent of such board, or by a single member of the Cattle Commission.

RULE 4. Persons having the care or custody of suspected animals, whether such animals are their own property or otherwise, and having received an order for their isolation, shall neither sell, swap, trade, give or in any way dispose of such animals, nor drive or work or move or allow them to be moved away from the place of isolation, nor allow other animals not already exposed to come in contact with them, till permitted so to do by the Cattle Commissioners.

PLEURO-PNEUMONIA. HOG CHOLERA.

RULE 5. In cases of suspected contagious pleuro pneumonia among cattle, or swine-plague or cholera among swine, the entire herd must be secured against communication with other animals of the same species that have not been exposed to the suspected animals, and owners of other herds which may have been exposed and afterwards moved should be immediately notified and warned of the existing danger.

GLANDERS.

RULE 6. Horses or mules suspected of having the disease known as glanders, or any may only remain in the custody of their owners, and in the stalls or on the premises previously occupied by them, when in the judgment of boards of health such owners can be relied on with confidence, and when such stalls or premises are deemed suitable places for holding such diseased or suspected animals till taken in charge by the Cattle Commissioners.

RULE 7. In accordance with the spirit and intent of the foregoing, in all cases of suspected tuberculosis among cattle coming to your notice, you will be either instructed owners to cause the separation of their suspected animals from the remainder of the herd, and cause their isolation and allow the unsuspected animals to be managed in all respects as if no disease had been present.

PENALTIES.

The statutes provide that any person who fails to comply with a regulation made or order given by the Cattle Commissioners, or boards of health in the discharge of their duty is punishable by a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars or by imprisonment not exceeding one year; and any city or town whose officers refuse or neglect to carry into effect the provisions of chapter 252 of the Acts of 1887 relating to the publication of regulations, the isolation of suspected animals, and the carrying into effect all proper orders from the Cattle Commissioners, shall forfeit a sum not exceeding five hundred dollars for each day's neglect.

HARRY'S FLIRTATION.

The guests were seated on the broad, cool veranda of the Woodbine hotel; a delicious breeze stirred the honeysuckle vine that climbed the trellis. Several guests were expected to arrive, among them an heiress, so rumor had it, and as usual a small amount of interest was awakened. There was a murmur among the guests as a slender girl, becomingly attired, made her way up the broad steps.

She was a fair example of that rare and curious blending of blonde and brunette which we sometimes meet.
Her face was fair, her hair a brown with a rich golden hue, and her eyes were large and dark.

She was a woman capable of intense love or hate. As Harry Marsh gazed upon her he grew suddenly pale. Then it passed away, giving place to a deepening flush of embarrassment. His companion, Frank Hale, a handsome, fun loving fellow, observed Harry's embarrassment, and with a merry twinkle in his black eyes, said:

"I declare, Hal, you blush as if 'the heiress' was an old flame of yours."

And he laughed in a low, musical way.

"I know my face showed seeming agitation just now, but there's really nothing
the matter with me."

"Now, Harry, old fellow, you need not apologize."

"I am not going to. But, Frank, weren't you ever surprised into blushing when somebody resurrected a half forgotten sentimental memory of the past?"

Let me see. I'll venture to say that I can make you blush. How about that Elsie Mayday affair of yours?"

Frank Hale's cheeks did brighten a little. But he well knew that a stronger feeling than mere embarrassment had agitated his friend.

"Pshaw!" exclaimed Frank Hale, with a penetrating look into the half averted face of Harry Marsh. "You are agitated.
You have met this young lady before, somewhere. Now own up—or is it a secret?"

Harry Marsh was a fair, curly haired young man of five and twenty, of a sensitive, romantic disposition. Frank Hale and he were old college chums. Harry stroked his blonde mustache for a moment in silence. Cutting the tip off of his cigar, he placed it between his lips, forgetting to light it.

"How much of a secret?" he answered indifferently. Then, turning suddenly toward his friend, said: "What do you know about her. You seem very much concerned about her?"

"Oh, nothing," replied Frank, "except what rumor says."

"And what is that?"

"It is this effect: That she has recently risen from poverty to affluence;
that she is engaged to a poor young professor, a geologist, who was formerly a school fellow of hers. A poor young professional man is sure to catch such a prize, isn't he?"

"Yes, I suppose it is on account of their romantic and poetic attributes.
Did rumor include the name of the—the gentleman?"

Harry felt not a little anxiety as he asked this question.

"Edward Grey is his name, I believe," replied Frank, "and by the way, I understand he is to come here also in search of fossils."

Harry with a sort of nervous eagerness of movement lighted his cigar.

"Now, Harry, for your secret. When and where did you first make the acquaintance of this young lady, and what is her name?"

Harry sat in silence a moment, as if to collect his ideas. He tilted his chair back, removed his hat, wiped the perspiration from his brow, and said:

"Her name is Viola Craig. I met her in a small rustic village in Maine about two years ago."

"And there was a bit of romance between you, eh?"

"Very little on her part—a mere flirtation on mine. I can tell you one thing, she has not gained all her beauty in two years. She struck me as unusually beautiful for a rustic when I first met her."

"Why don't you tell me the romance that lies back of that statement of yours?" said Frank.

Harry with some reluctance said:

"About two years ago the summer was exceedingly hot and I was badly in need of rest, so I resolved to go on a hunting and fishing expedition. Having heard of the facilities Huntsville afforded for hunting and fishing and picturesque scenery, I packed up my grip, took my rifle and fishing rod, and started."

I arrived one fine summer morning at Huntsville and obtained board with the Craigs. They were poor, and added to their income by taking summer boarders. Viola was an only daughter, still in her teens. I could not help admiring her artless beauty and grace, and I soon became paying marked attention to her.

"In those fragrant summer twilights, followed as they were by evenings of silvery moonlight, we sauntered down the pleasant country road and stood upon the bridge gazing upon the sheet of water, calm and deep, which stretched out before us. The day sped rapidly into weeks; our hearts seemed gay and happy, everything was enjoyed with a zest which the utmost confidence and freedom from restraint can insure. But alas! one day Viola's father called me to him and sternly asked:

"Do you wish to marry Viola?"

"I was so thoroughly surprised that I answered decisively:

"No."

"So I thought," replied Mr. Craig. "I did not believe that a rich, handsome young fellow like you would wish to marry a poor country girl, and I desire you to direct your attention elsewhere, for she is engaged to a worthy young man of this place." That day I left Huntsville, and no adieus were spoken.
So ended my little flirtation."

"Well, Harry, you have given me quite a poetic recital, but you ought not to make such an ado over a 'mere flirtation.' Let us go up the lake and back before sunset."

Ten minutes later Harry Marsh sauntered along the shore of the lake, realizing that he was not quite wholehearted.

A year had passed since Harry Marsh's visit to the quiet little village of Huntsville. Many changes had taken place.

Viola Craig is an orphan—alone in the world—friendless. What was she to do?
She fell into a brief reverie.

She had an aunt, rich in this world's goods; she had written to her and received a letter bidding her to come and make her home with her. "Break up the old home and come and live with me." These were the words she read.

"Break up the old home! How romance clings around it!" She stood by the window and gazed up the country road, bordered on one side by dark pine woods, on the other by irregular rolls of cultivated ground. How dear the form of every tree! How oft had she walked there with the one she loved; had he not cut his name and hers upon those very trees; but he had gone—left without one word of parting. A crimson flush, deep, swift and unmistakable, swept over the girl's fair and sensitive face.

"He did not care for me; he was merely amusing himself," she mused.

Then a strange light flashed into her eyes, and two bright spots of color came on her cheek and she said determinedly,
"I will go to my aunt, and as her heiress try and forget him."

Fond remembrances! Dear old home, good-by!

A storm had suddenly arisen from the southwest. It descended with a torrent of rain, a resistless flurry of wind and crash of thunder.

Viola was sitting at the window. She glanced out upon the lake. She beheld its surface lashed into foam, and horror stricken, she beheld something else.

A boat, midway between the peninsula and the shore nearest the hotel, had suddenly capsized under the fierce blast.

For an instant a human being was visible amid the foaming waters, but soon disappeared.

Viola descended to the veranda, her face deadly white.

Several men dashed past, and upon the wings of the storm she heard one of them say:

"Hale and Marsh were in the boat, and there's little chance of our saving them."

For an instant she stared toward the lake, her heart sinking like lead. Then, without even a shawl over white, gauzy garments, she dashed out into the pelting storm. She reached the lake shore at a point near where several men were pushing off in a rowboat in a vain hope of saving the unfortunate.

She sank down amid the wet shrubbery, clasping her hands, and in low agonized accents she murmured, as her eyes fell upon the fearful sight before her: "Good Heavens! Harry Marsh—dead—drowned! If he but knew now how I loved him—how I have loved him since he left me, two years ago! Oh, God! If he could be saved! My heart is breaking!" And burying her face in her hands she sobbed aloud.

Just then a hand fell lightly upon her shoulder. She started up with a cry, and there stood Harry Marsh, dripping wet, with a look of deep, unutterable joy upon his face.

"Thank God I am saved—saved to hear my name upon your lips. I was not in the boat. Frank went out alone.
I saw the storm coming and advised him not to go. But he went. I followed along the shore to the peninsula, and the storm broke before I could get back," he explained.

He spoke in a rapid, excited manner.
As he finished Viola sank down in a swoon, overcome by the strain upon her nerves and the sudden reaction. He lifted her in his arms and bore her back to the hotel.

The boat which went out after the unfortunates came back unsuccessful. After the storm had passed, however, Frank Hale and his sailboat rounded the peninsula and moored opposite the hotel.

In response to a flood of inquiries he replied that he was upon the other side of the lake when the storm broke, and so escaped it.

The boat which was capsized contained a young fisherman, whose body was recovered late that night.

It was not until the next day that Harry Marsh saw Viola again. Then they met under the arched trellis. She would have fled, but he caught her by the hand, exclaiming in his low, musical tones, which she remembered so well:

"Stay, Viola! I desire an explanation from you. I believe that I made a great mistake when I left you without seeking one two years ago."

She waved him from her with an imperious gesture.

"You should have discovered your mistake before I was lifted from my poverty!" she cried.

"Wait! wait! I implore you."

Then he told her why he had gone away so abruptly, and how he had loved her all the while.

"I should have sought you here upon your arrival were it not for the rumor of your engagement to Edward Grey," he said.

"My engagement! The rumor was false; it is not I, but my cousin, who married Edward Grey two weeks ago.
We are friends, that is all."

A soft, balmy breeze swept through the trellis, rustling the vines and bringing from a distance the perfume of flowers.

"Then you do love me, Viola! I can keep my love from you no longer, Viola.
Will you be my wife? Do not withhold the perfect joy I crave!" were the words he uttered, so low that they seemed to chime with the murmuring breeze.

"The joy is ours, Harry!" was the softly spoken response.

When Frank Hale heard of the engagement he laughingly said, "Hal, do you call this all 'a mere flirtation'?"—Miss
F. L. Hare in Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

DEATH AT THE END.

Would I were dead and lying in my grave.
At rest from fretting doubts and carking cares!
Be kind, O Heaven, and listen to my prayers;
Grant me the only favor that I crave—
six feet by three of earth to hide my dust.
I ask no tombstones or memorial bust;
I ask for death; that is beyond I'll brave.

Of good or evil have I wrought;
No happiness or pleasure have I known
But I have been with sorrow interwoven:
All hath slipped from my grasp that I most sought.
My life, though short in years, is long in grief;
Night follows day, but brings me no relief.
And passing years have only sorrow brought.

There is one goal to which our courses tend;
The way lies over mountains, torrents, plains,
Through velvet pastures and quiet country lanes.

To some the pleasant scenes enjoyment lend.
While others weary toil up rocky slopes
Dejectedly, and almost void of hopes.
But one fate waits for all—Death at the End.

VAN BIBBER'S WAGER.

Mr. Van Bibber and the other men of his particular set were grouped around the club window after luncheon, or breakfast, as it happened to be, when Van Bibber said he thought seriously of entering upon a career of crime. Van Bibber was given to making disturbing statements of this sort, which required one to think, even if one did not reply to them, and the other men rather wished he would not.

"For instance," said young Van Bibber, "I went to a dance last night, and the room where you were to put your hat was filled with old silver, little bits of it—snuff boxes and spectacle cases and bonbon boxes and buckles and girdles. The chap had made a collection of them, and had them all lying around loose. I had a good mind to fill my overcoat with half of 'em, and then I thought it would be much more fun to fill every other man's pockets, and wait and see the row, but some one came in, and I couldn't do it. Now, there are these teas and receptions and days and all that sort of thing that women go to.
Why shouldn't I start out some afternoon and sweep the places bare, and melt the silver down and get rich? I might become a sort of 'Jack the Ripper' or 'Louis the Lifter.' I'll bet," exclaimed Van Bibber, becoming more interested in his idea, "that I can go out this afternoon and bring back more than five hundred dollars' worth of silver and bric-a-brac, and I'll do it, too,
if any of you have any sporting blood."

There was no question as to the men having sporting blood. They jumped at the chance. Van Bibber found not the least difficulty in dividing up his wager among them all.

"But wait," said Travers, "how do we know that Van Bibber won't fix it with the people in the house? Even if his friends did see him handling the bric-a-brac or even if he put a fork down his coat sleeve, they'd not say anything.
They'd think he was joking. Or he may let them into it beforehand."

"Well, I must say I appreciate your confidence," growled Van Bibber; "I'll play fair, of course, and I'll tell you what I'll do: to make sure, I'll only go to houses where they don't know me, and I'll bring back spoons marked with the people's initials."

This reckless delighting his friends.
"You are a sport, Van Bibber," they cried with admiration, "and you'll be in jail before 5 o'clock."

The servant brought them a society paper that made a feature of printing the announcements of coming social events.
And Van Bibber carefully selected the names of five estimable ladies who were giving receptions that afternoon, and who were making a desperate fight to get into society, as the proper people to rob. At 4 he ordered a hansom, put his list inside his hat, placed a fresh chrysanthemum in his coat, and started snil-lingly forth on his career of crime. His friends watched him from the window with keen delight and with much excitement.

"Now, then," said Travers promptly and decidedly, "the thing for us to do is to send a detective after him and have him arrested."

"Exactly," said the rest.

Mr. Van Bibber alighted first at a very handsome brown stone house, just a few doors off the avenue on Forty-third street. There was an awning over the door, and a line of carriages on either side of the street. The name of the lady who was paying for this he discovered, by referring to his slip, to be Nobles.

The man saw him through the door and opened it, saying, "Third floor, front."

Mr. Van Bibber pushed his way through the crowd of women and girls and old men and pots of chrysanthemums, and threw his overcoat in a corner. There was no one in the room, and Van Bibber, while adjusting his cravat, cast a wandering eye over the dressing table. It was littered with silver toilet articles. He picked some of these up and bit them, in a most professional manner. "Plated," he remarked, with some disgust; "lady probably gets her silver from a caterer.
Hardly worth while to try down stairs.
Guess I'll move on to next place."

He picked up his overcoat and hat again, and went out without having gazed upon Mrs. Nobles. The next place was on the avenue itself, and was very crowded. Van Bibber pushed his way slowly up stairs to the second floor, and, without a moment's hesitation, gathered up four silver photograph frames, a complete manicure set of silver, a gold watch, which hung in a slipper at the side of a bed, and a pair of silver backed hair brushes. He placed these carefully in his overcoat, and went down stairs in a stately and dignified manner. He avoided the first door, where he guessed the hostess was stationed, and made his way toward the rear. There was a terrible crush, and yet he saw no one he knew.

In the rear room there was a long table overloaded with things to eat. He gathered up three or four spoons, one at a time, after examining them carefully, and stored them away back of a bit of china on a sideboard, then he went back after more spoons. Nobody paid any attention to him, and he paid no attention to any one else. He carried a plate with some salad on it in his hand, and picked at this daintily with the spoons as he transferred them from the table to the sideboard. When he had a dozen he covered them with his handkerchief and slipped them into his coattail pocket.

Then he put on his greatcoat, and went out as calmly as he had come in. He found the stolen articles somewhat heavy, so as soon as he was in the hansom he took them out and put them under the seat.

Mrs. Charles T. Van Dyke was the name of the hostess

"For God is my King of old, working Salvation in the midst of the earth."—Ps. 74: 12 "Thus saith the Lord, "Is my hand shortened at all, that it cannot redeem? Or have no power to deliver?"—Isa. 50: 2.

Dr. Bull, one of the most eminent surgeons and physicians in New York City, recently addressed a medical class of the New York Hospital on "The Use of Alcohol in Cases of Pneumonia". He claimed that 64 per cent of pneumonia patients receiving alcoholic medicines died.

The clinical facts which some writers have produced as demonstrative of the good nature of alcohol, are, as such, worth absolutely nothing. We have no hesitation in saying that to call alcohol food, in the present state of our knowledge of its effects, is an abuse of Language. We possess no particle of satisfactory and scientific evidence to show that it is such. Those who affirm that it is such, should give us something beyond the mere vague surmises of their own opinions. But to say that an emaciated creature who rises from his bed, and has swallowed during his sickness large quantities of water and alcohol, is a living proof that alcohol is food, is manifestly an unfounded assumption.—British Medical Journal

Dr. G. Striker has shown by actual experiment, that pytoline, the active principle of the saliva which brings about digestion, is paralyzed by alcohol. The advocates of alcohol for an old person say that the bodily machinery is slowed down too much, and needs quickening. Nature has purposely put on the brakes, because there is always danger in high pressure upon an old machine. Certainly no engineer would take a nearly worn out engine to run a lightening express train. Nature puts the brakes on the human machine when it becomes enfeebled through the taking away of some of the natural energy, by making the muscles so weak that there shall be less temptation to work hard, or to run, or to do any violent thing which would bring on heart failure. Then is it wise to forcibly take off the brakes which nature has put on? That is exactly what alcoholic stimulation does. It paralyzes the nerve centres of the brain which control and regulate the blood vessels and they relax, and the heart runs away at too rapid a rate. It is like a clock from which the pendulum weight has been taken: it will soon run down. Then what alcohol does for an old person is to hasten the day of his death, driving the human machinery at a rate incomparable with safety.—J. H. Kellogg, M. D. in "Good Health."

Dr. J. B. Gallinger, the New Hampshire man whom the Republicans have elected to take the place of Prohibition Senator Henry W. Blair, is generally understood as representing the rum element of the Republican party in New Hampshire. He is known a shrewd, unprincipled politician who as chairman of the Republican State Committee does not hesitate to enter into any dirty deal with brewer Frank Jones the Democratic "boss" when he can serve the interests of his party. During the legislative campaign Gallinger's friends kept practically an open bar, and his victory in the Republican caucus over Blair was celebrated by a big drunk.—The Voice.

Heart Beats. Dr. B. W. Richardson of London, the noted physician, says he was recently able to convey a considerable amount of conviction to an intelligent scholar by a simple experiment. The scholar was singing the praises of the "ruddy bumper," and saying he could not get through the day without it, when Dr. Richardson said to him, "Will you be good enough to feel my pulse as I stand here?" He did so. I said: "Count it carefully. What does it say." Your pulse says seventy-four. I then sat down in a chair, and asked him to count it again. He did so, and said, "your pulse has gone down to seventy." I then lay down on the lounge, and said, "Will you take it again?" He replied: "Why it is only sixty-four! What an extraordinary thing!" I then said: "When you lie down at night, that is the way nature gives your heart rest. You know nothing about it, but that beating organ is resting to that extent, and if you reckon it up, it is a great deal of rest, because in lying down the heart is doing ten strokes less a minute. Multiply that by sixty, and it is six hundred; multiply it by eight hours, and, within a fraction, it is five thousand strokes different, and, as the heart is throwing six ounces of blood at every stroke, it makes a difference of thirty thousand ounces of life during the night. When I lie down at night without any alcohol, that is the rest my heart gets. But when you take your wine or grog, you do not allow that rest, for the influence of alcohol is to increase the number of strokes, and the result is you rise up very seedy and unfit for the next day's work till you have taken a little more of the "ruddy bumper," which you say is the soul of man below".—Scientific American.

NEURALGIA, RHEUMATISM.

What Causes Most of Our Pains and Aches and How to Cure Them.

Half the world suffers from pains and aches when there is not the slightest reason for so doing. Headache is alarmingly frequent and leads to serious results. Backache is most common and keeps thousands in misery. Neuralgia pains of side or chest torment myriads of victims. All this suffering is unnecessary, and can easily be removed. Speaking upon the subject, the well known Mr. James Brown, 27 Market St., New York City, said to the writer: "I have been under the care of many doctors for neuralgia and rheumatism, which I had terribly in my back and side. So badly did I suffer that I was unable to attend to my business for three years, before I came across the right remedy to cure me. This remedy is Dr. Greene's Nervura, and I have been perfectly and completely cured by this wonderful medicine."

Perhaps the most terrible case of neuralgia and the most wonderful cure on record was that of Mrs. Louise T. Knight, of 429 Broadway, Chelsea, Mass. She suffered from an alarming attack of neuralgia, and for eleven months the pain was so frightful that she could not sleep over ten minutes at any one time. "My heart felt thanks," she said, "are due to Dr. Greene's Nervura, for the great benefit I received from that most wonderful remedy. I cannot say enough in praise of it. Before taking up the second bottle there was great relief, and now I am cured and gaining in strength every day, all due to this good medicine. I wish I could tell every sufferer about its curative powers, and I will answer letters in regard to it or see any one who would like to inquire about it."

"O, MY BACK!" Alonzo Patchin, Esq., of Boleville, Ulster County, N. Y., spoke with unbounded enthusiasm concerning this remedy: "I suffered," he said, "for many years with a terrible neuralgia in my head and neck, and, oh dear, how it pained me all through! I took Dr. Greene's Nervura and it cured me completely of that fearful pain. I think Dr. Greene's Nervura is the best medicine I ever saw or used."

Doubtless headache torments more people than any other difficulty, but the most aggravated case was that of Mrs. Mary Green, of Basin St., Norristown, Pa. "For over 20 years," she said, "my life was made miserable by frequent and terrible headaches. At times they were so severe I feared I would go insane. I was treated by nearly every physician in this city, but none could cure me, or even relieve me, except by large doses of morphine. My head would shake so badly it had to be held. No one could suffer more than I did. At last I bought a bottle of Dr. Greene's Nervura, and the very first bottle stopped the headaches, and I have never had any trouble with my head since that time. After suffering for 20 years I was cured by Dr. Greene's Nervura."

Another remarkable cure by this same remedy which has come to our attention, is that of Mary M. Dunlap of West Hempstead, N. H., who suffered severely with that very distressing complaint nervous and sick head aches. After telling of her wonderful cure, she added: "I think Dr. Greene's Nervura is the best known remedy for neuralgia and sick headache, and I earnestly recommend it to all."

From the above it is plainly evident that no one could suffer more than I did. At last I bought a bottle of Dr. Greene's Nervura, and the very first bottle stopped the headaches, and I have never had any trouble with my head since that time. After suffering for 20 years I was cured by Dr. Greene's Nervura."

That Nervous Headache.

Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., its discoverer, is the famous specialist in the cure of nervous and chronic diseases. The doctor has devoted special attention to the treatment of all forms of chronic diseases through letter correspondence, and will give by mail his opinion and advice free of charge. The perfection of this system renders a complete cure almost assured, as his success in treatment by correspondence is wonderful and unequalled.

N. B. Send for symptom blank to fill out, or write Dr. Greene about your case, and a carefully considered letter, fully explaining your disease and giving you a perfect understanding of all its systems will be returned free of charge.

SALEM, Jan. 1, 1891.

One year ago we started our last club check; we then decided it was hardly a straightforward way of doing business to charge one class of customers five dollars per dozen for pictures and another class but little more than half as much for the same thing. Instead of adopting the motto of most photographers, viz., "anything is good enough for club work—we have made our club work equal to our best."

We believed it was a good business principle to charge all our customers the same price for the same thing and by adopting this course and charging for our work what we believed it was worth, and trying to make it worth as much as any, we should gain their respect and good will.

Our business the past year having been much the most satisfactory of any year in Salem, proves that our judgment was not at fault. We are so well satisfied with the course we took that we shall pursue the same during '91 and shall not enter to that class who are satisfied with anything if it is cheap.

The demands upon our time in the way of large portraits, particularly freehand crayons—have the past year been so great that we have decided to introduce colored pastel portraits, and we had made by Mr. E. L. Hannon from Boston, that whom there is no more skillful artist in his specialty in America, a complete line of samples of those very beautiful pictures.

Remember that no better work than this can be produced in this country, and the price is but little more than is charged for the ordinary grades. Call and see these pictures if you are interested in fine portraits.

A Pleasant Party.

Little Miss Marion B. Bagley a daughter of P. Brooks and Clara Bagley gave a birthday party to her young friends on Tuesday evening. A large number were present and enjoyed the hospitalities until a late hour. Presents were numerous and testified to the esteem in which she is held by her many friends.

Ash Wednesday.

High mass was celebrated at St. John's church on Wednesday morning at 8 o'clock. After the service ashes were distributed in accordance with an ancient custom. Services will be held every Wednesday and Friday evening, at 7.30 o'clock. On Wednesday evening there will be a sermon followed by a benediction of the most blessed sacrament. On Friday evenings will be observed the stations of the cross followed by the benediction.

The Old Ladies Home.

The Sutton Home Association held their annual supper and dance in Town Hall on Tuesday evening. It was the most successful party ever held under their auspices. Plates for 300 were laid, nearly all being taken. The spread was a very choice affair, consisting of salads, cold roast turkey, escallops, and many delicate viands. The waiters were all misses, and they served the guests with promptness and grace. After the supper all tables and furnishings were removed and the floor prepared for the merry dancers, who were there in great number. Many young people being upon the floor, who were not at the supper tables. The music consisted of piano, violin and cornet and for three hours the musicians were kept busy in marking the cadence for the flying feet. The entertainment as a whole was the most enjoyable of the season.

Seven Old Ladies of Laventown.

The entertainment given by the Murray Association is worthy of some mention. It consisted of an operetta in two acts entitled "Seven Old Ladies of Laventown." The leading parts were taken by Mr. Ed. Nichols as Professor Haskins, and Mrs. A. D. Osgood as Duchess of Tidytown. Miss Eva Raddin, Miss Alice Southwick, Miss Nellie Pierce, Miss Alice Sawyer, Miss Hannah Blaney, Miss May B. Blaney, and Miss Marion Nichols representing the seven old ladies to perfection. The Wax Works were represented as follows: Julius Caesar by Mr. Perley King; George Washington by Mr. John Teague; Napoleon Bonaparte, Mr. Alfred Newhall; Henry the Eighth, Mr. Leslie Watkins; Capt. John Smith, Mr. Merton S. Demeritt; Alexander the Great, Mr. C. W. Merrill; Confucius, "The Chinese Philosopher, Mr. George L. Holman; all of whom were excellent, in their makeup. The entertainment was a success both socially and financially.

The Franchise Conference.

The storm seriously interfered with the number of ladies who came together in Franklin Hall on Monday afternoon but some were present from Lynn, Salem, Danvers as well as Peabody. Rev. Katherine Lente Stevenson of Newton gave an interesting talk on the W. C. T. U. department of Franchise of which she is superintendent for Mass. She showed that this line of effort had not been hastily taken up by the organization but had been slowly evolved from the necessities of the work and from the inner consciousness which made the duty plain. A discussion followed as to how the mass of womanhood may be enlightened and enthused in aid of this reform. Tea was served, and a delightful time was spent in social intercourse.

Mrs. Stevenson's address of the evening was on "God's use of woman's powers in the evangelization of the world." She first gave a very broad view of the work of evangelization; it is not only to preach the gospel but it is to create a new order of society. The work is a twofold one; to preach the gospel and to actualize it. She depicted the wrongs under which humanity is bowed and suffering, and dared to tell them because she believed that a bright side to it all could be found. She spoke of woman's work and the prejudice and opposition which have made its doing hard. The gospel is to be carried outside of the church and women are the ones whom God is largely sending on this mission. With what weapons are they to go? Prayer is not enough, but to be clothed with the ballot equal with men is to be armed for telling work for God and humanity. Evangelistic work will bring the individual to the millennium but equal franchise will bring the millennium to the prepared individual. The golden rule is to be made the order of society; to enfranchise women is to carry out this rule and to bring its potent influence into all the affairs of life. The address was a very pleasing and able presentation of the question and the speaker quite won the hearts of her hearers. An amusing rhyme entitled "What J. M. B. thinks," on the opposition expressed by Dr. J. M. Buckley to having women delegates in the general conference of the M. E. Church, which is from the pen of Mrs. Stevenson, was called for and taking recited by her. A second conference will follow in Salem during March.

H. E. BRADMAN, ONE OF BELFAST'S MOST ENERGETIC MERCHANTS, KEEPS A GENERAL STORE IN EAST BELFAST, ME., AND HUNDREDS OF PEOPLE WHO TRADE AT HIS STORE WILL CERTIFY TO THE TRUTH OF THE FOLLOWING STATEMENT:—

Gents: For over ten years I was terribly afflicted with humor, pronounced by eminent physicians Tetters or Salt Rheum.

At times my head was so bad that I had no hair upon it. The entire scalp became a burning sore, and the surface would crack open and bleed.

I used ointments, washes, etc., and took medicine prescribed by the best physicians in the city, but got no permanent relief.

I had sold hundreds of bottles of DANA'S SARSAPARILLA, but never thought of trying it myself, until I heard so many of my customers telling how much benefit they had derived from its use.

About a year and a half ago I commenced to take DANA'S, and in three months my head was WELL, AND THE CURE HAS PROVED PERMANENT.

Yours with respect,

H. E. BRADMAN.

The Beggar's Fountain.

There is in Italy a fountain over which the statue of a beggar drinking at a spring. It is called "The Beggar's Fountain," and this is its story: Once upon a time there lived a very poor and thoughtful man, who hated the poor and set himself above all the world who were not as wealthy and well-dressed as himself, and his want of charity was so great that it had become proverbial, and a beggar would no more have thought of asking bread at his gate than of asking him for all his fortune.

There was a spring on his land, a sweet spring of cold water, and it was the only one for miles; many a wayfarer paused to drink at it, but was never permitted to do so. A servant was kept on the watch to drive such persons away. Now, there had never been known before any one so avaricious as to refuse a cup of cold water to his fellowmen, and the angels, talking among themselves, could not believe it, and one of them said to the rest:—

"It is impossible for any but Satan himself! I will go to the earth and prove that it is not true."

And so this fair and holy angel disguised herself as a beggar woman, covered her golden hair with a black hood, and chose the moment when the master of the house was himself standing near the spring to come slowly up the road, and to pause beside the fountain and humbly ask for a draught of its sweet water.

Instantly the servant who guarded the spot refused; but the angel, desiring to take news of a good deed, not of an evil one, back to heaven, went to the master himself and said: "I am, as you see, a wanderer from afar. See how poor are my garments, how stained with travel. It is not surely at your bidding that your servant forbids me to drink, and even if it is, I pray you bid him let me drink, for I am very thirsty."

The rich man looked at her with scornful eyes and said:—

"This is not a public fountain; you will find one in the next village."

"The way is long," pleaded the angel, "and I am a woman and weak."

"Drive her away," said the rich man, and, as he spoke, the beggar turned; but on the instant her black hood dropped from her head and revealed floods of rippling golden hair—her unseemly rags fell to the ground—and the shimmering robes that angels wear shone in their place. For a moment she hovered, poised on purple wings, with her hands folded on her bosom and an ineffable sweetness of sorrow in her eyes. Then with a gust of music and a flood of perfume she vanished.

The servant fell to the earth like one dead. The rich man trembled and cried out, for he knew that he had forbidden a cup of water to an angel, and horror possessed his soul.

Almost instantly a terrible thirst fell upon him which nothing could assuage. In vain he drank wines, sherberts, draughts of all pleasing kinds. Nothing could slake his thirst. The sweet water of the spring was saltier to him than the sea. He who never in his life had known an ungratified desire now experienced the torture of an ever unsatisfied longing; but through this misery he began to understand what he had done. He repented his cruelty to the poor. Alms were given daily at his gate. Charity was the business of his life. The fountain was no longer guarded, and near it hung a cup ready for any one who chose to use it. But the curse—if curse it were—was not lifted.

The rich man—young when the angel visited him—grew middle-aged, elderly, old, still tortured by this awful thirst, despite his prayers and repentance. He had broken bread for the most miserable beggars who came to his door.

And, at eighty years of age, bowed with years of infirmity, and weary of his life, he sat beside the fountain weeping. And lo! along the road he saw approaching a beggar woman, hooded in black, and walking over the stones with bare feet. Slowly she came and paused beside the fountain.

"May I drink?" she asked.

"There is none to forbid thee," said the old man trembling. "Drink, poor woman. Once an angel was forbidden there, but that time has passed. Drink, and pray for one athirst. Here is the cup."

The woman bent over the fountain and lifted the cup; but instead of putting it to her lips she presented it to those of the old man. "Drink, then," she cried, "and thirst no more."

The old man took the cup and emptied it. "O blessed draught! with it the torture of years departed, and as he drank it he praised Heaven. And lifting his eyes once more he saw the beggar's hood drop to the ground and her rags fall in pieces. For a moment she stood revealed in all her beauty of snowy skin and golden hair and silvery raiment; and she stretched her hand toward him, as if in blessing, and then, rising, vanished in the skies. A strain of music lingered, a perfume filled the air, and those who came there soon after found the old man praying beside the spring.

Before he died he built the fountain from which the spring gushes, and it has been given to the poor forever.

Such is the story of the "Beggar's Fountain."—The Little Crusader.

Saving Souls in Africa.

They tell of a very powerful Irishman out in Africa who seized the wretched Arab who was paddling him across a stream, threw him overboard, and grabbing him by the back of the neck as he rose to the surface of the water hissed in his ear:—

"Will you renounce the Prophet and become a Christian?"

"Allah forbid," spluttered the Arab.

"Down you go, then," said the Irishman, and he ducked the Arab under again. In about a minute he pulled him up and shouted:—

"Will you believe in the Christian's God?"

"No," gasped the Arab, feebly.

"Drown, then!" yelled the Irishman, as he ducked the unfortunate Mussulman again.

For the third time he pulled the man up and asked, "Will you believe?"

The Arab, almost dead, was just able to whisper, "Yes."

"Drown, then," yelled the man, "before you lose your soul by recanting!" and he put the wretch under once more and held him there till life was extinct.—New York Tribune.

HEIGHT OF CRUELTY.

Nervous women seldom receive the sympathy they deserve. While often the picture of health, they are constantly ailing. To withhold sympathy from these unfortunates is the height of cruelty. They have a weak heart, causing the shortness of breath, fluttering, pain in side, weak and hungry spells, and finally swelling of ankles, oppression, choking, smothering and dropsy. Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure is just the thing for them. For their nervousness, headache, weakness, etc. his Restorative Nervine is unequalled. Fine treatise on "Heart and Nervous Diseases" and marvelous testimonials free. Sold and guaranteed by Wm. T. Lee.

The damage of the wires throughout the country by the recent storms is now set at $6,000,000 which is a much larger sum than the interest in the money it would cost to bury every one of them.

The Boston Herald aptly says, regarding the recent proscription of Sardou's "Thermidor." "If some American playwright should take into his head to write a play in which the Tories of our revolution were glorified, and the patriots of those days held up to odium and ridicule, the average American playgoer might be amused, but he would hardly take it so seriously as to assist in mobbing the theatre where it was produced, nor would our government feel called upon to suppress the play. The French temperament differs from our own, however; hence the disturbance occasioned by Sardou's "Thermidor" in Paris."

At a cattle show in Paris one day recently, a bull on exhibition broke away from his stall and so savagely attacked and gored a woman among the spectators as to cause her death before the infuriated animal could be secured.

A Thoughtless Public.

We may not be a nation of shopkeepers, but, as a nation, we pride ourselves upon our commercial astuteness and common sense, and in judging of most articles of commerce these qualities are brought to bear. Things for wear, for instance, are tested by their fitness; by their lasting qualities—that is the length of time during which the qualities they possess when new will unimpaired; by their genuineness—that is their actual as compared with their professed qualities; by the amount and carefulness of the work spent by their maker; and their conformity to the lines of the figure they are destined to cover.

But, in the matter of a song, who ever brings common sense to bear? Does the public ever ask whether the music is appropriate, in general character or in detail, to the poem of which it is a setting? Whether it possesses the qualities of strength and closeness—the equivalent of good material and good workmanship? Does it care whether the music is free from "shoddy," whether it is the result of genuine individual inspiration, instead of being old material dished up as new? Assuredly not.

If a scrap of tune take the public ear it matters nothing that it may be ridiculously inappropriate, or trivial, or hackneyed; 'tis a pretty tune, and there's an end. Yet even if the public would do as much as this—and it would be something—we have left out of account the power of recognizing that subtler quality of inner beauty which is not to be discerned by the cold light of reason.

Still, it is likely that most works which fulfilled the requirements indicated would also possess the last; but the mere demand for "beauty," which is apt to sink into the petty and meretricious when unaccompanied by the other qualities of truth and sincerity, will lead at last to the utter neglect of these.—London Musical World.

Surer foundation cannot be laid than the real merit which is the solid base for the monumental success of Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Boston Annexation Scheme.

The Boston Herald has outlined a plan for a grand annexation to the Hub of all the contiguous cities and towns within a 10 mile limit. This scheme would take in Chelsea, Revere, Winthrop, Cambridge, Somerville, Everett, Malden, Medford, Melrose, Stoneham, Wakefield, Winchester, Woburn, Arlington, Belmont, Watertown, Waltham, Newton, Brookline, Hyde Park, Milton, Quincy, Lynn, Saugus, Swampscott, Nahant, and would increase Boston's present population of 448,471 to $44,815 and increase its valuation from $812,000,000 to over a billion dollars. This scheme looks beautiful.

New England Shoes.

A Boston shoe salesman who had just returned from the Pacific slope said recently: "New England made shoes were never so popular in California as they are to-day. The manufacturers in San Francisco, through their operatives, have tried to induce members of the farmers' alliance to pledge themselves to buy shoes that were made in California. The alliance have replied that, while they be lieve in patronizing home industries, they must continue to buy eastern footwear, because it is cheaper and better."—Natick Citizen.

It is reported that one of those specialists who go around hunting for bacteria has found perhaps fifty million on a square foot of roller towel used in a school at Buffalo, N. Y. He ought to see the towel in use at the Boys' Club, or a towel in use at the printing office of a country weekly newspaper. This is a new terror to add to those who already suffer by the boy who hates to wash his hands and face. Every parent knows something of the trouble which cleanliness involves, but if the children are to be attacked by fifty million bacteria every time they use the towel what will become of the innocents? This doctor is worse than a bacterium, and should be suppressed.—Lynn Item.

A MYSTERY EXPLAINED.

The papers contain frequent notices of rich, pretty and educated girls eloping with negroes, tramps and coachmen. The well-known specialist, Dr. Franklin Miles, says all such girls are more or less hysterical, nervous, very impulsive, unbalanced; usually subject to headache, neuralgia, sleeplessness, immoderate crying or laughing. These show a weak nervous system for which there is no remedy equal to Restorative Nervine. Trial bottles and a fine book containing many marvelous cures, free at William T. Lee's, who also sells, and guarantees Dr. Miles' celebrated New Heart Cure, the finest of heart tonics. Cures fluttering, short breath, etc.

Boggs—Is it possible Miss Beauty refused your hand and fortune again?

PARALYSIS.

Fearful Increase of This Terrible Disease.

Read This and you May Prevent Becoming One of its Victims.

It is an alarming fact that paralysis is becoming more and more common, and the medical profession have discovered at last a remedy which is almost certain to cure this terrible disease, if taken in time. What started the cure?

Failed to Heed the for this medicine First Symptoms. among physicians was the wonderful and almost miraculous cure of Alexander Horn of the Marine Asylum, Philadelphia, Penn. Thousands of physicians all over this country are to-day prescribing the same marvellous remedy which cured him and made him able to walk again, when for twenty-one years before he had been so paralyzed that he had not lifted his foot from the floor. Some doctors recommend and prescribe this medicine openly, others secretly. At any rate, it seems unfair that sufferers should pay a fee to physicians when they can purchase at any drug-gist's for $1.00 per bottle this wonderful remedy, which is acknowledged at the present day as the great paralysis cure and preventive.

The remedy is Dr. Greene's Nervura, and J. S. Phillips, Esq., the prominent notary public of Philadelphia, was the first to certify to Mr. Horn's remarkable cure, and thus bring it before physicians and the public.

In talking with the well known John S. Doremus, Esq., 233 Elliston St., Paterson, N. J., he referred to the really astonishing curative powers of Dr. Greene's Nervura. In the following emphatic terms: "Miss Pauline Roe had a terrible stroke of paralysis, and having myself received such great benefits from Dr. Greene's Nervura, I persuaded her to use it as a last resort. She did so, and the change since taking this medicine has been most remarkable. Surely through the mysterious effects of this wonderful curative remedy, Dr. Greene's Nervura, Miss Roe has received a new lease of life. I shall be ready at any time to testify to the remarkable restoration to health of this lady, and the wonderful effects of Dr. Greene's Nervura."

Paralyzed.

Afterwards Miss Pauline Roe, of 806 7th Ave., New York, herself substantiated the facts. "The suffering I endured," she said, "was unbearable. My speech was impaired, my mouth drawn to one side, and the pains in my head were maddening. I used Dr. Greene's Nervura, and before I had used a bottle I felt a marked improvement, and now feel myself again. It gives me great pleasure to recommend this really wonderful medicine."

Mrs. J. Fisher of 44 Vanderbilt Ave., Brooklyn, was restored from paralysis by the same remedy in a no less wonderful way.

Now that all may realize the approach of this treacherous disease and take it in time to surely prevent it, the first premonitory symptoms are given. Paralysis is curable, and it can always be prevented by the use of Dr. Greene's Nervura if taken in time.

Among the first symptoms will be noticed a nervousness and restlessness, with weak and tired feeling in the limbs and general sense of exhaustion; any unwonted exertion will be followed by great fatigue and the weakness will be very marked. These symptoms will often be accompanied by bad feeling in the head, and the person often wakes each morning more languid than when retiring. As the disease progresses there will be a coldness and Sudden Stroke, and bad circulation in the feet and limbs, followed after a time by a slight numbness or tingling, at first hardly noticeable, but gradually becoming more marked. Among the first symptoms also are a weakness, tired feeling or trembling of the limbs, with an exhausted sensation.

Proofs like the above cures are almost certain guarantee that all similarly affected can be cured by Dr. Greene's Nervura. Do not hesitate for a moment when perfect restoration to health is within reach. By no means neglect the first symptoms as they surely lead to prostration and paralysis. Save yourself from the terrible disease while there is time by the use of this wonderful remedy and prevent a serious or fatal issue. Dr. Greene's Nervura is purely vegetable and perfectly harmless and is for sale at druggists for $1.00 per bottle.

Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., its discoverer, is the famous specialist in the cure of nervous and chronic diseases. The doctor has devoted special attention to the treatment of all forms of chronic diseases through letter correspondence, and will give by mail his opinion and advice free of charge. The perfection of this system renders a complete cure almost assured, as his success in treatment by correspondence is wonderful and unequalled.

N. B. Send for symptom blank to fill out, or write Dr. Greene about your case, and a carefully considered letter, fully explaining your disease and giving you a perfect understanding of all its systems will be returned free of charge.

The people who cannot keep good resolutions are the very people of all others who keep making them.

Recently Judge Story, of the Somerville Police Court, had before him an Italian charged with shooting a comrade. The weapon, a heavy calibre bulldog revolver, was submitted in evidence. The pistol was self-cocking, and loaded in all but one of its chambers.

As it was laid upon the Judge's desk by the court officer, his honor looked at it curiously, and then picked it up. As he was evidently handling it en amateur, the court officer informed the judge that it was loaded and was a "self-cocker."

The judge nodded and continued his examination of the weapon, the muzzle thereof, as his honor turned to get the benefit of the light, covering at different times each person present. A reporter left the room, followed by another, and in the corridor he was heard to say: "When the judge handles a gun, I quit."

JUDGE NOT.

Judge not; the workings of his brain And of his heart thou canst not see; What looks to thee dim eyes a stain In God's pure sight may only be A scar, brought from some well won field, Where thou wouldst only faint and yield. The look, the air, that frets thy sight May be a token that below The soul has closed in deadly fight With some infernal fiery foe. Whose glance would scorch thy smiling grace, And cast thee shuddering on thy face! And judge none lost, but wait and see, With hopeful pity, not disdain; The depth of the abyss may be The measure of the height of pain And love and glory that may raise This soul to God in after days!—A. A. Proctor.

DICK HUYL.

The writer owes to Dick Huyl a debt, not exactly of gratitude, as the story will demonstrate, which she, by writing his biography, seeks to discharge. Dick Huyl's history will never be written by me, nor by any one else who knew him, to adorn a Sunday school library; he was not that kind of a boy. Dick was an Apache Indian, with all the characteristics of total depravity that the word Apache conveys or suggests. We were children together, Dick and I. We lived, fought and played together for two years in the same army post. On one memorable occasion, Dick, instigated by the devil—for I firmly believe in the devil, if only for Apaches—dropped down the neck of my frock a live toad. It was the cause of my first fit of hysterics, and I determined, if I ever grew old enough, I would tell the whole world how bad a young Apache could be.

In 1872, if I remember rightly, Gen. Crook had succeeded, after years of bloody war and the loss of hundreds of good men, in subduing most of the bands composing the Apache nation of New Mexico and Arizona. They had dwelt in the strongholds of mountain and desert, from which they frequently emerged to rob and murder all miners or emigrants that they could ambush, leaving nothing for the human mind to conceive of in the way of cruelty whenever a white man fell into their power.

At the reservation, although they were well fed and quite decently treated, it was necessary to watch them constantly, and large bodies of troops were detailed for that purpose. Nevertheless, scarcely a week passed but a small squad of Apaches, usually led by some attractive squaw, would slip quietly past the guards and escape through the darkness into their beloved cactus plains and mountain barrens. Roll call nearly every morning developed these absences, and next day would come news of murder, rapine and horrors generally. A favorite Apache mode of disposing of the unsuspecting freighter, miner or emigrant whose camp they had succeeded in raiding, was to tie the victim by the four limbs to stakes, and then to build a fire on that portion of his body designated in the old fashioned almanacs as "virgo."

There seemed to be something particularly fascinating to the Apache temperament in this form of torture. Death being long in coming, it gave the squaws and papposes plenty of chance to invent small tortures, on the side, as it were. The women and children emigrants—but enough. Suffice it to say that the absolute hatred entertained by these Indians for the whites was fully reciprocated, especially by the soldiers. It was no easy matter to track and successfully follow the runaways through the cactus and mesquit thickets, over the barren deserts and desolate mountains that make up the topography of Arizona. But in that parched country water is only to be found at certain springs and "water holes," between which days of travel often intervene, but which are equally well known to soldiers and to Indians.

So when the morning report showed to Gen. Crook that so many warriors, squaws and papposes were missing, the grim old warrior would make no sign of pursuit, but on the night following, or perhaps the next one, a squadron of mounted men would file silently out of the reservation bearing orders to move as rapidly as possible to the water hole of Palo Pinto, or to Agna Grande Spring, or to some other place where the presence of the precious fluid favored a camping place for the renegades. The troops were always positively instructed to bring back no prisoners, all matters of detail being left to the officers in command. One June morning there was reported missing eight Indians, eleven squaws and papposes, including Wahemo, that from whom a more depraved and cruel Indian never existed, even in Arizona.

Two nights afterward a squad of the Twenty-third infantry, Crook's own regiment, under Lieut. Huyl, a splendid young fellow, who has since left the service, was sent out on a scout with the usual orders. No trace of the renegades was found, but a burned ranch and stage station and a cremated cowboy gave sufficient evidence of Indians at large. The next night, or rather just at dawn, after a long and fatiguing march, the scouts reached a natural rock basin at the foot of one of the steepest and most inaccessible knobs to be found in desolate Arizona. This basin had often collected a supply of acrid water, which, however, was drinkable enough in that country. A thin vapor of smoke from a nearly spent fire convinced the troops that their night's march had not been in vain, and on creeping up as close as possible the hostiles were outlined against the rocks, fast asleep.

The little squadron silently deployed out so as to avoid missing a single shot, and at the word of command fired, killing nearly every one of the Indians. The others jumped up only to be cut down by the reserve fire. The only two unhurt were Wahemo and his 4-year-old pappose. Grasping the child, he sprang from the mountain side, scaling the rocks like a chamois, amid a shower of bullets, soon distancing his pursuers and getting out of range of their rifles. Halting on a shelf of rock, he set the child down and proceeded to indulge in every exhibition of contempt and derision that his imagination could invent to aggravate the discomfited troopers, who gnashed their several sets of teeth in rage at the insults of the old heathen. They were relieved at last by the arrival of Lieut. Huyl, who bore in his hand a new target rifle, received only the day before the scouts started.

This wonderful gun was guaranteed to carry—I forget—1,100 yards with accuracy, and the lieutenant, who was one of the best fellows in the world in garrison, but quite cold hearted and blood-thirsty where Apaches were concerned, announced that while he was doubtful of his gun carrying near the Indian, yet he was going to try. The Apache, feeling secure against their carbines, continued his taunts until Huyl, taking deliberate aim, with sights raised for 1,500 yards, fired. His aim was true, and the gun all that it was boasted. The old savage plunged face forward over the ledge, and crashed down the rocky mountain side at the very feet of his slayer.

The attention of the soldiers was now directed to the pappose—the subject of this sketch. That interesting infant still calmly occupied the ledge and was evidently turning the situation over in his mind. The troopers, with Lieut. Huyl at their head, slowly and painfully clambered up the rocks and finally approached the orphan, who, instead of squalling as a civilized Christian child would have done, commenced throwing stones at his pursuers, hitting Lieut. Huyl squarely on the nose with a half pound rock and drawing blood copiously. He followed this success by other good throws, causing as nearly a panic as possible. At last, by flanking him, our Apache was knocked down by a blow from a saber and stunned. His capture was now easy, but the lieutenant's orders were to return no prisoners.

"What shall we do with the little devil?" asked one of the men. "Shoot him or throw him over the cliff after his father?" The "little devil" had regained consciousness by this time, and deliberately set his teeth into the calf of the soldier's leg. Lieut. Huyl wiped his bloody nose and replied: "A baby who fights this way ought not to be killed in cold blood. By George, I'll take him back to San Carlos if it costs me my commission!"

A gag was put into the young one's mouth to prevent any more biting, and with a soldier holding each hand he was landed on the plain below. There he was placed on horseback, a lariat tied to one foot, passed under the horse and tied to the other, and thus the troopers returned to the reservation.

Lieut. Huyl was a great favorite with Gen. Crook, but he had disobeyed orders and confidently expected to be put under arrest. But the general had already heard something of the stone throwing affair, and had enjoyed a hearty laugh over Huyl's broken nose. When the lieutenant in making his report reached the point where Wahemo was killed the general interrupted with, "By the way, I think you had better not let me know officially any more of this scout than you have already told." Then glancing at the swollen nose he burst into a roar of laughter, in which all the other officers joined.

The young Indian was confined in the army until his first fright was overcome. The soldiers of Company A named him Dick Huyl, and fitting him out with a uniform fashioned from the lieutenants' old clothes regularly adopted him into the service.

In less than a month the small recruit learned to express himself tolerably in English, and in a very short time had accumulated all the accomplishments of tobacco chewing and profanity possessed by the soldiers. He also picked up a wonderful knowledge of bugle calls and evolutions, always turning out at roll call and taking his place at the extreme left of the company when in line.

When I first knew him he had been under the refining influences of the United States service two years. If that Indian had improved in that time I am very glad I did not know him before. He was not beautiful according to classic standards.

The Apaches flatten the heads of their babies between boards, and this, as much as anything else, served to render Dick unattractive to us children. Then he had such a predilection for carrying snakes in his pocket. The soldiers spoiled him, of course, and upheld him in every villainy he chose to perpetrate. When he shot the mules in an ambulance filled with women and children, causing a runaway and a smashup, one soldier thrashed him with a barrel stave, and a dozen more gave him five cent pieces to comfort him. They alternately pounded and petted, but it was all one to him. He seldom laughed and never cried; he was an Apache.

I said he never cried. I will note an exception. Every Saturday afternoon the men took him out behind the quarters and gave him a bath. This process was very simple. They stripped off his clothing and turned the hose on him. On these occasions the shrieks of the little savage could be heard all over the post.

I have not seen Dick since I was 9 years old, but I like to think that he grew up and regularly enlisted in the old regiment and is now an honor to the service.—"Spusskerriwe" in New York Tribune.

Prospects Good.

"Florry, dear," faltered the Washington youth, "I—I couldn't summon courage to tell you what was in my heart and I wrote it. You got my letter, didn't you?"

"Yes, George, I got it." "And you read it, didn't you?" "Yes, I read it. In fact, I—I read it over twice."

"And now, Florry," he said, growing bolder, "I have come to learn my fate." "The best I can promise you, George," said the blushing daughter of the distinguished congressman, withdrawing her hand from the ardent clasp of the infatuated young man, "is that I will advance your letter to a third reading to-morrow."—Chicago Tribune.

LADY OF THE CLICKER.

Daily Round and Hedged Up Dignity of the Woman Who Telegraphs.

It occurred to a citizen the other day on approaching the fair telegrapher in an uptown hotel that a woman in such a place must often have her temper and her fortitude taxed by thoughtless members of the opposite sex.

The young woman in question was possessed of a personal makeup that would attract attention in a crowd, yet through all the rush of business and hurry of work she never once seemed conscious of herself. Men came and went, their messages were received, the words picked off by the lead pencil measurer, the charges announced, and her seat resumed without, as Francis Wilson has it, her "moving a muscle or wincing a wince."

To the inquirer after facts she turned, and for the first time raised her eyelids, that disclosed a pair of sharp, honest, blue gray eyes, full of business, yet suggestive of a happy, laughing temperament, if you only knew her outside her "cage."

"Oh, no," she said, "we are too busy for idlers, and always of necessity too deeply interested in our work to allow us to pass the 'conversation lozenge.'"

"There are those who fancy we are here only to look pretty and impress the gentleman guest with the idea that he has delayed for a whole week to send a telegram of utmost importance."

"This is not the case, however, and the man most likely to forget himself and bother us is not the fellow who spends a quarter for an unnecessary telegram as an opener to conversation. We see him, of course, occasionally, but his business generally amounts to inquiry as to the location of the perfectly visible hotel desk or of the nearest postoffice or letter box. We make short work of him, and in a discreet way can force the blush on him that sets him on his gentlemanly feet again."

"Others there are, and thank goodness they form the great majority that rules, whose business is transacted promptly, politely and with an evident sense of the fact that they are dealing with a lady. These persons it is a pleasure to serve, for there is no superfluous dialogue or attempt at jesting, or suggestion of anything but the perfect gentleman."

"A boor gets loose at us once in a while, to be sure, but we manage him on the plan of 'the quiet answer that turneth away wrath.' He's apt to be old and gouty, and to find fault with us for that his 'darter' hasn't telegraphed him since his arrival. On a suggestion to such a one that perhaps his worthy girl at home has not been informed of his stopping place in the metropolis, he is frequently awakened to his own sense of carelessness, and then rises the smile that shows the good heart underneath, and all is serene again."

"Yes, we work constantly, and we must work well, for oftentimes much depends on the correctness of our transmission; but we have no cranky overseer, we are well paid for young women, and our trials are fewer and not so spirit rending as those that fall to the lot of the saleswoman."—New York Herald.

The Yosemite Valley.

For every hundred persons living west of the Mississippi river who have seen St. Peter's at Rome hardly ten, I think it may be safely said, have visited the Yosemite. Two small hotels in the valley are ample for all who may at any one time seek accommodations, and on an average two coaches a day during the season will carry all who seek conveyance to that place of grandeur. One thing is certain, the foreigner "doing" the United States seldom omits the Yosemite; yet many an American tourist traveling in California leaves the coast in ignorance of the wonders and beauties of the famous region. On a beautiful Sunday in May, out of sixty-five guests at the Stoneman house over forty-five were foreigners, most of them on a trip around the world; and that proportion is not unusual during the season. To the foreign tourist the Yosemite ranks with Niagara, and from those who have seen the wonders of nature on every continent the verdict seems to be that the Yosemite stands pre-eminent—the greatest of all.—New England Magazine.

The Wandering Jew.

Calmet's "History of the Bible" has this to say of the Wandering Jew: He was the porter of Pontius Pilate, and was called Calaphilus. When the mob was dragging Jesus to the judgment hall Calaphilus struck him, saying: "Go faster, Jesus! Go faster. Why dost thou linger?" Jesus replied, "I am indeed going; but thou shalt tarry till I come." Soon this man was converted and took the name of Joseph. He is supposed to live forever, but every 100 years he falls into a trance, upon awakening from which he finds himself at the same age as when the Saviour said these words to him. The Wandering Jew is grave and stern, is never seen to smile, and perfectly remembers the death and resurrection of Christ. No place is his home for more than a few hours, and thus does he fulfill his title of "Wandering Jew."—Detroit Free Press.

Canada and Newfoundland.

When was the Dominion of Canada constituted? Is not Newfoundland in it? The Dominion was formed in 1867, and is composed of the provinces of Quebec, Ontario, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward's Island, New Brunswick, Manitoba, British Columbia, with certain territories and arctic islands. Newfoundland was invited to come in by the act of confederation, but she holds aloof, and remains an independent crown colony.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Better Not Sigh.

A chemical analysis of the food cooked by our grandmothers, which men sigh for once in a while, would show it 35 per cent more dangerous to the stomach than food prepared in the modern kitchen. As a matter of fact, American women knew nothing of cookery up to twenty-five years ago.—Detroit Free Press.

About Displayed Goods.

There is an old English law, I am told, whereby a "shopkeeper" can be compelled to take from his show window and sell at the price marked any article a customer points out. Several comparatively recent arrivals in this country have cited this to me, and kicked with both feet because of refusals to spoil a show window display by taking a pair of shoes of a brand and size of which there are hundreds in stock. As far as I can learn the enactment was intended to prevent the manufacture of samples for windows and the palming off on persons attracted thereby of "something equally as good."

However true it may be that the old English common law regards the price on an article in a window as a contract between the store owner and any passer-by who tenders the money, there is no such ordinance or law here. Often people insist on having something from the window, and decline to accept its exact duplicate. In that case, if the article is an expensive one, we strain the point, and get it down; but if it is something low priced we give the customer the alternative of taking a duplicate, or nothing.—Interview in St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Professor Lane's Famous Ability.

Among men of letters the most prominent ambidexter is probably Professor George Martin Lane, pope professor of Latin in Harvard. It is his habit to stand facing the middle of the blackboard. He begins to write a sentence with his left hand, and runs along until he reaches a point in line with his face. Then he shifts the chalk from his left hand to his right, and continues writing until he reaches the end of the blackboard. When calling the roll the students know by the motion of the professor's hands just the mark he intends to make.

He writes with his right hand until he comes to a scholar who answers "not prepared." The pen is instantly changed, from the right to the left hand. Everybody knows that means a goose egg. Professor Lane is noted for being one of the finest Greek and Latin scholars in America. His most famous contribution to contemporaneous literature, however, is a little out of this line. He is the author of that piscicultural epic, "The Lone Fishball."

The waiter roared it through the hall. "We don't give bread with one fishball!"—New York World.

New Magneto Telephone.

A new magneto telephone gives promise or being largely used in England. The invention consists of an arrangement for combining a telephone for domestic purposes with a crank bell pull, such as is ordinarily met with in houses, and the special merit in it lies in the fact that it may be fitted without disturbing any of the existing arrangements or requiring a skilled workman to be sent to fix it. Indeed, any man of ordinary intelligence may fit it for himself without trouble. A similar telephone being fitted, say in the kitchen, a bell is used in the usual way to call the servant's attention, and upon her taking up the telephone the order is transmitted without rendering it necessary for her to enter the room. The telephones being magneto-instruments no battery is required at all, and the possibility of future trouble and cost of maintenance is avoided.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Self Locking Envelopes.

Doctors have inveighed against the dangerous gum which is used on some envelopes, and mishaps have been frequent as the result of damping the gum on envelopes with the tongue. All possibility of such accidents is removed by the automatic lock envelopes which have been patented. On the flap of the envelope are two projecting flanges, and all that is necessary to do to close the envelope is to fold these flanges by ready stamped lines, and insert the flap thus narrowed in a slot provided, whereupon the folded flanges automatically lock themselves in the slot, and the envelope cannot be opened without tearing it. The operation sounds much more complicated than it really is in practice, for one of these new envelopes can be closed as readily as the better known gummed envelopes.—New York Telegram.

Another New Gas Lamp.

A new type of gas lamp that has been introduced abroad consists primarily of an argand burner inclosed in a globe, with the air for supporting combustion admitted both above and below the flame. The lower supply of air passes through the center of the burner, while the upper supply enters from above the burner into the globe, which incloses besides the burner a metallic deflector upon which the flame impinges and is conducted to a porcelain bell mouthed exit above. The supply of air entering from above is thus highly heated in its passage. The result of the well balanced proportions of gas and air admitted to the globe, which practically becomes the combustion chamber, results in a brilliant bulb shaped light of high illuminating power.—New York Telegram.

Talked Too Much.

A farmer always had a prodigious number of last words to say whenever he was leaving the farm for the city. On one occasion the hired man's patience gave out. "Mr. F—," said he, "you'd have so many last words that the undertaker's bill would come in before you were dead."—Christian Union.

Kept In.

Servant—Mr. Maccay wants his breakfast served in bed this morning. Landlady—What is the matter? Is he ill?

Servant—No, ma'am. But the tailor came a little while ago to crease his trousers.—Clothes and Furnisher.

Lots of Thieves.

Easterner—Have you any horse thieves in your section?

Westerner—Lots of 'em. "Lots!" "Yes. Cemetery lots."—Good News.

THE PRACTICE of ringing door bells and hiding around the corner, seems to have as much fascination for the juvenile mind to-day, as it had in days of yore.

THE "SALEM CALL" has changed hands again, Morrill Smith of Marblehead having purchased the plant. The paper is having a hard struggle but we believe it is destined to ultimate success.

WE ARE pleased to notice that Arthur L. Huse, formerly one of the proprietors of the Newburyport Herald, has received the appointment of Deputy Collector of Customs, to fill the vacancy caused by the decease of Charles W. Davenport.

THE SUBJECT of legislative free passes is taking a good deal of valuable time, to little purpose. Why not cut the knot at once, as has been suggested, by requiring railroad companies to furnish passes. Nobody will find any fault, not even the roads, and the main purpose will be thus accomplished.

IT is the opinion of the Herald, that if Senator Hoar will put one-half the energy into the passage of the Torrey National Bankrupt Bill that he bestowed upon the Force Bill, he could make it certain to become a law before this session closes.

If this is true, his constituency will be glad to see him bestir himself in that behalf.

THE COMPLETION of the reciprocity treaty with Brazil, which was proclaimed officially by the President, last week, will take effect April 1st. It will be a valuable aid and stimulus to trade between Brazilian ports and those of this country. It will enable American products to compete successfully with those of European countries by placing them on as favorable footing as regards duties. It is expected also to increase the export from Brazil to this country, of sugar, which that country is admirably situated to produce in immense quantities.

THE SUBJECT of Bi-ennial elections will quite likely engross the attention of our legislature during the present term. It may be submitted to the people for expression of their opinion at the next State election.

If such an opportunity is offered, the voters of this Commonwealth will display a degree of wisdom not often apparent in the legislature, by speedily signifying a willingness to make the proposed change. Too much time is now spent in tampering with laws that better be let alone.

WE REGRET to say that George H. Powell, formerly manager of the PRESS has left Peabody, to engage in a new line of business. He was a fine printer, a genial companion and a man of strict integrity, and during his stay in this town, which was about five years, made hosts of warm friends, who wish him prosperity in his new home and calling. We shall all miss his pleasant smile and cordial manner. The PRESS has been extremely fortunate in securing the services of B. F. Lord of Boston, who as an artistic printer and reliable superintendent, is well worthy to fill the position made vacant by Mr. Powell. Mr. Lord has had eighteen years experience in metropolitan offices, and not only comes well recommended, but during the few weeks he has been with us, has proved himself thoroughly competent for his new position.

FROM A period of remote antiquity, the custom of sending valentines has prevailed; being traced by some to the Roman Lupercalia, February 15, by others to the ancient pagans of Northern Europe. The exact origin of the custom like many others is largely a matter of conjecture. One account of the cause that gave rise to exchange of sentimental missives at this season, is attributed to an alleged habit of birds of selecting their mates in February, but it is generally acknowledged, that whatever may have furnished the first suggestion, the custom has been perpetuated in commemoration of St. Valentine, a bishop or presbyter, who during the religion's persecution of Claudius, was condemned by the Roman Council, and beheaded A. D. 270 for his religious sake. Within the memory of the present generation great changes have crept into the forms and styles of valentines. Years ago there were the ever abominable comic specimens, while those of a more tender or serious character, took the form of delicate embossed and open work, followed later by the more elite valentine box, which in time gave place to fans, books and other kindred devices; then, when about ten years ago, the card fad held sway, the missives of St. Valentine's Day yielded to the popular style, and assumed the form of cards in rare and elegant designs. In olden time too, the entire week following the 14th of February, was given over to the sport among the younger participants, and many a bell had silk handkerchiefs or old stockings stuffed in to save the strain on sensitive nerves of the older members of the household, while that fashion was in vogue.

Something Valuable for You.

The renowned physician, and specialist in the cure of nervous and chronic diseases, Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., has decided to give consultation free to the sick by letter. Dr. Greene is the discoverer and proprietor of the world famous remedy, Dr. Greene's Nervura, and the doctor himself is no less famous as the most successful physician in the world in curing sufferers from disease through letter correspondence. You have the privilege of writing him a description of your case, or sending for his symptom blank to fill out. A carefully considered letter fully explaining your disease and giving you a perfect understanding of all its symptoms will be returned free of charge. As he makes a specialty of treating patients at a distance by mail, there is no doubt that he can and will cure your case. It will cost you nothing to write and get his advice, and we should advise you to do so, as it may lead to your recovery.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL.

On the 23rd inst. that most laughable of comedies, "The Solicitor," will enter upon its third month at the Boston Museum, and, according to the present indications, with no abatement of its present extraordinary success. This play with its charming skit, "Betty's Finish," makes the term, "the laughing season," employed by the Museum management a most appropriate one, for, from rise to fall of curtain, in each play, the house resounds with the hilarious merriment of the audience. The business, even for the prosperous Museum, was never finer. Some audiences are so large that the orchestra are obliged to leave their seats, and the advance sale is always great. Laugh when you can, and thereto "The Solicitor" serves admirably.

Next Monday night the established favorite and highly regarded artist, Annie Pixley, will take the stage of the Tremont Theatre to occupy it with her bright presence for the stage of two weeks. The first week of this engagement will be devoted to a reproduction of "22, Second Floor," which will be remembered as so eminently successful last season. Miss Pixley in the dual role of the gentle wife and the dashing actress, the complications arising from the "mixing up" of these twin sisters, the extreme comicallities engendered by the capital plot of Mr. George H. Jessup's excellent play, all have so won the regard of our theatregoers, that little need be said now regarding this offering. Personally as well professionally, Miss Pixley is counted one of the home attractions of the Tremont, and no one is more certain of a welcome, no one more certain of a host of friends to greet her. The charm of her acting is kindred to the charm of her disposition which has by its inherent happiness the lovely effect of making all about her also happy. During her second week here Miss Pixley will present, with superb new scenery painted by Chas. W. Witham, her new drama, "Kate: A Romance of the War," and there will be an extra matinee Monday, Feb. 23, in celebration of Washington's Birthday.

Sir Arthur Sullivan's latest comic opera is "Ivanhoe."

Dvorak the great Bohemian composer has accepted the honorary degree of Musical Doctor at Cambridge University, England. He proposes to be in England in June, when he will be invested with the degree, his "exercise" being his "Stabat Mater," the work which has brought him into special prominence in England.

Patti has given a holiday dinner to over a thousand poor and idle people in the vicinity of her Welsh castle.

Mr. G. Cutter is the new conductor of the Orpheus Club, Springfield, Mass.

Mr. B. T. Hammond has given the last recital of his present series at Worcester, Mass.

Rubenstein will not vacate the directorship of the St. Petersburg Conservatory until June.

Sig. De Valence, of Philadelphia, has composed an opera entitled "Christopher Columbus."

Jules Levy is forming a brass band, the initial appearance of which will be soon.

BOSTON THEATRE.

"A Trip to China Town" with its variety of specialties, wit and melodies has attracted large houses at the Boston Theatre this week.

GLOBE THEATRE.

Dixey in the charming drama, "Seven Ages" has had a good reception. Before the conclusion of his present engagement he will give his popular "Adonis."

GRAND OPERA HOUSE.

At the Grand Opera House, "The Inspector" is announced.

Hon. Marcus Morton Passes Quietly Away.

The late Chief Justice of the Supreme Judicial Court, Hon. Marcus Morton, died peacefully at his home in Andover at 9 o'clock Tuesday evening, after an illness of several weeks, of heart failure.

Judge Morton was born at Taunton, April 8 1819. He was a son of the late Ex-Governor Marcus Morton who, also, was a justice of the Supreme Court; and received his early education in Bristol County Academy, from which institution he passed to Brown University, at the age of 17 years, and graduated two years later.

He inherited from his father a fine legal mind and excellent disposition. After graduating at Brown, he entered Harvard Law School, where he remained two years and followed up his legal studies by a years stay in the office of Sprague & Gray. In 1841 he was admitted to the Suffolk bar and devoted himself to an active and lucrative practice. In 1843 he was married to Miss Abby B. Hoppin, a daughter of one of the first families of Providence, where he met her during his course at Brown. In 1850 he took up his residence in Andover and has continued to reside in that town ever since. He has represented his adopted home in the legislature as well as in the constitutional convention of 1853. In 1858 he was raised to the Superior Court bench and in 1882, when Judge Gray was promoted to the United States Court, he was appointed to fill the vacant Chief Justiceship, by Gov. Long. He had been an associate justice of this court fourteen years prior to his final advancement and had always distinguished himself, as he ever continued to do, by his legal acumen, courtesy and good temper, up to the time of his resignation last August, since which time he has sought a much needed rest.

As a story teller he had few equals, which accomplishment alone would have gained him many warm friends. He dies deeply regretted by all who knew him either personally or professionally, having filled the measure of human usefulness to the hilt.

LITERARY NOTES.

The Amateur Photographic Contest carried on by Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper has ended. The award of prizes are given this week, and copies of the prize winners' pictures are given. They are beautiful. The prizes range from a small amount of cash up to two hundred dollars, and a prize schedule is announced for still another competition, which is to follow immediately. The pictures in this week's Leslie's include a very interesting foreign page, a number of scenes of the Indian war, the picture of a noted Virgin belle, a page of views in the United States Senate during the discussion of the Lodge bill, and a large number of entertaining features. Get it from your newsdealer. Price, ten cents.

The first original article by Count Tolstoi, that has ever been published in an American Magazine, appears in the February issue of the Cosmopolitan, with a number of interesting photographic reproductions, one of them being a picture of Tolstoi guiding a plow in his Russian fields. Brander Matthews appears with his first article on Some Latterday Humourists. Mr. Matthews' contributions constitute one of the most interesting features of the magazine. The third in a series of colored frontispieces is a delightful sketch by McVicker, illustrating a character in Mrs. Van Rensselaer Cruizer's new story, "Mademoiselle Reseda." Ex-Postmaster General James presents an article upon the Welsh in the United States, liberally illustrated by portraits of prominent men who are of Welsh extraction. Women Clerks in New York, by the Marquise Clara Lanza. A charming article on the Old Chateaux in Touraine by Miss Elsie DeWolfe; Prince Talleyrand and his Memoirs by H. de Bury. Amateur Portraiture in Photography, and a Remarkable Musical History by William Pole, F. R. S., the well known Englishman, are other prominent features of the February issue. Price 25 cents. Cosmopolitan Pub. Co., Madison Square, N. Y.

Prof. Drummond's famous address on "Love; the Supreme Gift," sometimes called "The Greatest Thing in the World," which has had a wonderfully large sale at 35 cents a copy, and has undoubtedly done a great deal of good, is now published by Alden, unabridged, in large Pica type, for three cents! It ought, now, to circulate by the million. The same publisher issues Drummond's "Natural Law in the Spiritual World," in large type, fine "half-seal" binding, for 35 cents, plus postage, 10 cents. These are two items characteristic of the 132-page Catalogue, which is sent free on request, by the publisher, John B. Alden, 333 Pearl Street, New York.

A calendar of entirely unique design has just been issued by Sidney Perley, Esq., of Salem. It covers a period of 300 years, gives the days of the month with all the allowances for this inequality of the Georgian calendar. It is in pamphlet form and is both useful and convenient.

A very handy volume has been issued by the Salem Press Publishing Co., giving the rules for whist. No society lady should be without it.

All lovers of dogs will find profit and enjoyment in Dr. H. Clay Glover's article on "The Proper Care of Dogs," to be published in Harper's Young People for February 10th. Frank French has engraved for the same number of the Young People a beautiful picture appropriate to the season of St. Valentine.

John Needham's Double, dramatized by E. S. Willard, was successfully presented, for the first time on any stage, at Palmer's Theatre on Wednesday evening, February 4th. The story from which the play is derived is Joseph Hatton's novel of the same name, published by Harper & Brothers.

Every one wants to make money, and to every body Wall Street has an attractive sound. One of the best financial articles printed in the United States, full of information for those who want to speculate, is "Jasper's" Wall Street contribution to Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper. A citizen of this place remarked the other day that if he had followed the points of "Jasper's" articles he could have made a fortune. Everybody who has a life-insurance policy ought to read the entertaining column regarding various life-insurance swindles and other schemes, published under the signature of "The Hermit" in Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper. The pictures in Frank Leslie's this week are all exceedingly good. Get a copy at your newsdealer's. Prices 10 cents.

The Event of the Season.

Miss Alice M. Gustine, the talented elocutionist and teacher, will give a very select programme, consisting of literary recitals, varied by vocal and instrumental music, at Lyceum Hall, Salem, Wednesday and Thursday evenings, the 13th and 19th inst. Tickets are on sale at H. P. Ives' book store. Single admission 35 cents. Tickets for both evenings 50 cents.

"Be wise with speed, a fool at forty, is a fool indeed." And yet all over the world there are men still older clinging fondly to their rheumatism and gout, when wide-awake people know very well, that Salvation Oil certainly kills pain. It is sold everywhere for only 25 cents.

PROBATE NOTICE.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

ESSEX, SS. PROBATE COURT. To the Heirs-at-law, Next of Kin, creditors and all other persons interested in the Estate of STEPHEN FERNALD, late of Peabody, in said county, leather-merchant, deceased. WHEREAS, a certain instrument purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased has been presented to said Court for Probate, by William F. Sawyer, and John P. Fernald, who pray that letters testamentary may be issued to them the executors therein named, and that they may be exempt from giving a surety or sureties on their bond for the reasons alleged in said petition. You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be held at Salem, in said county of Essex, on the first Monday of March, next, at nine o'clock, before noon, to show cause, if any you have, against the same. And said petitioners are hereby directed to give public notice thereof, by publishing this citation once a week, for three successive weeks, in the newspaper, called the Peabody Press, printed at Peabody, the last publication to be two days at least before said Court.

Witness, Rollin E. Harmon, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this twenty-ninth day of January, in the year one thousand eight hundred and ninety-one. J. T. MAHONEY Register. 31-3t

ESSEX COUNTY.

Danvers has appointed the following committee to look after its petition to the legislature to legalize the installation and continuance of its light plant, viz.: Charles B. Rice, D. N. Crowley, Ira P. Pope, Malcolm Sillars and F. J. Lynch.

A. B. Johnson of Lynn, who fell back from a tower wagon on Boston street, Salem, on the eleventh of January, has recovered partially from his injuries. He has brought suit for damages against the Edison Company, and is able to walk.

A Boston & Maine depot at Lynn will cost $100,000 exclusive of the building and will be a fine building with modern improvements.

Have been granted to the Essex County inventors K. Bradford of Lynnfield, a thinking device; J. F. Newcomb, shutter worker; G. F. Lawrence, pulp digester; H. H. Haverhill, machine for the uppers.

A hotel at Magnolia will be a large and well appointed building to be six stories high, with ample piazzas and well lighted. The entire establishment will be lighted by electricity, employing incandescent lamps. Mrs. F. M. Safford of the First District court, has filed his findings in the clerk, in the case of the fatal accident that occurred on Salem Common in July, 1889, during the pyrotechnic display which formed a part of the Fourth of July celebration. The finding is quite fullsome, describing the mortar and bomb which caused the fatality. The court finds that the committee on fireworks were not chargeable with negligence or want of due care. That they trusted, as they had a right to, to the intelligence and prudence of the agents of the manufacturers. He finds also that no neglect is chargeable to Mr. Frost or his assistants in managing the fireworks. Regarding the culpability of the United States Fireworks company, the court says: "Upon the question whether the company was chargeable with any want of caution in furnishing the mortar and bomb it is to be considered that in a somewhat extended experience with similar fireworks no accidents had previously occurred, but I am of the opinion that the said company was wanting in due care in furnishing to the city of Salem for display in a large crowd, a kind of fireworks in which lurked the possibilities of such disastrous consequences in case of the failure of some of the conditions of its successful operation."

In the case of the murder of James Lane, formerly of Peabody, who met his fate upon the night of Dec. 13, last, Judge Safford finds that Lane came to his death by a "wound from a bullet fired from a pistol by either Michael J. Callahan or Charles S. Chute." These are the men who are now under arrest upon suspicion.

Henry M. Meek of Salem, President of the City Clerk's Association of Massachusetts, spoke in behalf of the Australian ballot system at a hearing in the Representatives' Chamber at the New Hampshire State House in Concord. Mr. Meek cited the success of the ballot system in Massachusetts.

Mr. John G. Graves of Marblehead tried his strength upon a punching machine at Salem, recently. He succeeded in sending the indicator around the dial, but, upon his return to his home, he experienced a pain in the hand. Dr. Morse was called, and found a small bone broken.

Marblehead will hold a caucus under the Australian System, to nominate town officers. The movement has been started by the Temperance people, who are opposed to the present board of town officers.

The stockholders of the Lawrence Coffee House have voted to petition the Supreme Court to terminate the corporation. The entire capital—$7000, has been sunk and the experiment proved a complete failure. The same establishment, under management of the Page Catering Co., has been quite successful.

H. F. Longfellow, the recently elected County Commissioner, states that he expects that by the middle of May, a Truant School will be in successful operation. The Board is looking around for a location. Sites in Haverhill, Lynn, Hamilton, Ipswich and Lawrence have been offered, all of which are quite desirable.

Mr. Fred Goodwin has been chosen leader of the quartette choir of the Maple-street Church, Danvers. His services have been engaged for one year.

A painting of Marblehead Harbor by M. F. G. De Haas sold recently in New York for $500.

Marblehead will hold its town meeting, Monday, March 9th.

The November Club, of Andover, held a very successful Kirmess last week.

Among the delegates from Massachusetts, at the International Congregational Council at London Prof. Smith of Andover will go as a delegate from the Seminary, and Prof. Tucker as a delegate by appointment of the Committee who arrange for the addresses at the meeting.

Mrs. J. K. Cole of Peabody is spending a short time with her mother, Mrs. Johnathan Poor.—Andover Townsman.

Lincoln Lodge A. O. U. W. of Andover is preparing to observe its fourth anniversary by an entertainment the latter part of this month.

"The Haymakers" was presented at the Universalist vestry at Danvers, Monday evening, and drew a large audience. The programme was divided into two days, the first and second. In the first day scene there was a duet by Miss Moore and Mrs. Beckford; soprano solo by Miss Nettie White; quartette chorus, by Messrs. Giles and Richards, Miss Moore and Mrs. Beckford; trio, by Misses Moore and Green and Mrs. Beckford; soprano solo by Miss Lillian Jelly; contralto solo, by Mrs. R. L. Cunningham, and soprano solo with male quartette accompaniment, by Miss White, Messrs. Giles, Forness, Rich-

Peculiar

Peculiar in combination, proportion, and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the curative value of the best known remedy of the kingdom. Peculiar in its strength and economy, Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "One Hundred Doses One Dollar." Peculiar in its medicinal merits, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown, and has won for itself the title of "The greatest blood purifier ever discovered." Peculiar in its "good name at home"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell than of all other blood purifiers. Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad no other Sarsaparilla preparation ever attained so rapidly nor held so steadfastly the confidence of all classes of people. Peculiar in the brain-work which it represents, Hood's Sarsaparilla combines all the knowledge which modern research has developed, with many years practical experience in preparing medicines. ards and Bates. The second day gave opportunities for a contralto solo by Mrs. Beckford; quintette, by Messrs. Spofford, Forness and Bates, Miss Moore and Mrs. Belle Wright; bass solo, J. O. Richards; ladies quartette, Miss White, Mrs. Williams, Mrs. Cunningham, Mrs. Wright; soprano solo by Miss Jelly, and duet by Mr. Giles and Mrs. Beckford. All the selections were well rendered and brought hearty applause.

Regarding the inaction of the County Commissioners in the matter of establishing a Truant School, the Lynn Item of Feb. 6th says:

The question of the establishment of a Truant School in Lynn is still absorbing public attention, and all eyes have been turned toward the County Commissioners in natural expectancy that they would make some movement in the direction indicated by the court. But up to this hour nothing has been done, and what is still more surprising the County Commissioners have had no provisions made for its erection in the appropriations for the ensuing year. It will be remembered that early in November, 1889, they gave answer to a writ of alternative mandamus as to why they had not erected the school, but failed to give good reasons therefor. The peremptory mandamus issued by the court on Jan. 12, of the present year, absolutely demands that they shall proceed forthwith in the erection of the school. The writ served on the County Commissioners is one of the most interesting legal documents that has ever emanated from Essex County Courts for many years. It directly charges the Commissioners with continued neglect of duty. Such harsh documents have indeed been rare in the history of old Essex and even the learned Clerk of the Court was obliged to search for a considerable time to find a dusty formula for copy to place in the Sheriff's hands. Then follows a copy of the writ, which is an interesting document."

Regarding the Merrimac water supply, the Lawrence American, says editorially. "Our Lowell neighbors need not be unduly alarmed; the citizens of Lawrence are disturbed, seriously, no doubt, in relation to the condition of the water, arising largely from the pollution poured into it from the mills and sewers of the cities above us; but Lawrence recognizes the fact that while some heroic remedy must soon be applied, it is in a degree a siner with Lowell, Nashua and Manchester,—in that it pours all its own sewage into the same stream. True, there is no city or town below us taking its water for domestic use from the Merrimac, but on the other hand, Lowell made use of the river for this purpose before Lawrence had an existence, and our city knew what was being done in this direction when it chose that source of water supply. If the sewage now deposited by the cities above us is to be diverted from the Merrimac, Lawrence must be prepared to pay her share of the cost of a big sewer to the sea, or to take care of her own sewage in some other way, precisely as would Lowell: the people of the latter city need not be unduly alarmed; we will not ask anything in the way of the legislation affecting our neighbors up the river which we are not content to have apply to ourselves. It is, however, a serious question whether the existing exemption from pollution of the Merrimac, ought not to be stricken out and Lowell and Lawrence alike compelled to make some other disposition of their sewage."

"Saved by Death."

BOSTON, Feb. 2.—The sensation of the year among the story readers of New England has been "Saved by Death," by Scott Campbell, which was printed in the Boston Daily Globe—all except the final chapter. The readers of the Globe were invited to guess the result for prizes of $200, $50 and $25. The final chapter and the nearest guesses were printed in the Sunday Globe, Feb. 8. A synopsis of the story is given, and even if you did not read the story you will be interested in it, and should order the Sunday Globe.

James J. O'Connell Escapes the Clutches of the Law.

The case of James J. O'Connell and Leonard P. Smith for breaking and entering George H. Jacobs' store in Danvers came up for trial in the Superior Court yesterday afternoon. H. P. Moulton, Esq. counsel for the boys had a long consultation with them endeavoring to have them plead guilty, but as they refused to do so, he withdrew from the case. The trial was then proceeded with, the boys taking the stand and testifying in their own behalf. The jury retired and in a few minutes returned a verdict of guilty. It was too late to proceed with the other case against them, for breaking into the store of F. M. Davenport of this town and the sentence was therefore deferred. District attorney Moody moved to increase the bail from $1000 which was done, the Court fixing the bond at $1800. No sureties offering upon the new recognizance, the boys were taken by Deputy Sheriff Bridges to Salem jail.

The prisoners were manacled upon either side of O'Brien, who had been on trial for breaking into the store of John Pickering, formerly of this town, now of Boston, and started on their way. On arriving at the jail gate however, O'Connell, who has very large wrists slipped his hand through the handcuff, and ran. Just what direction he took seems to be rather uncertain as one account says he ran down Bridge street, toward Beverly, and another that he ran up City Peter street and through Church street. Chief Peasley and officer Crowley came out after O'Connell had left, and stood for some minutes upon the corner of Church and Washington street, looking at the new Odell Block, to see where the coping had fallen, which came down some days ago. They had just started up Washington street toward Essex, when a Salem officer informed them that Connell had "skipped." They proceeded down Essex street to see if any trace of him could be found, and met a man who informed them that Connell ran up Church street ahead of him, and when near Washington street, stopped suddenly and walked back a short distance, then proceeded as at first headed, but appeared uncertain what to do, and walked back and forth several times, finally pushing on and going up Lynde street, where he disappeared.

It is possible that he may have seen the Peabody officers and thus killed time on Church street until they had left him a clear track.

Connell's father and mother are sureties for him on the indictment for breaking into Davenport's, the bail in that case being $800.

When last seen he was dressed in a stiff rimmed hat, light overcoat and dark striped pants.

The pyramids were erected between 2,000 and 3,000 years before the Christian era, and consequently are the oldest works of human labor in the world. The lower stones are immense masses, brought from a considerable distance, apparently without any such machinery as we have now. No one knows what mechanical means were used, but it has latterly been guessed, from the discovery of large circular holes in some of the stones, that they had been dragged along and hauled into place by machinery. The question remains, What sort of machines? It has been calculated that at the present time, with our machinery worked by steam, 10,000 men could produce an exact fac-simile of the great pyramid of Cheops in ten years. It would cost a large sum, however.—Troy Times.

KING COPHETUA THE ELDER.

Beneath the palm she found a seat
(Her image made the river smile),
And bathed her little ivory feet,
And slender ankles in the Nile.

I faith, a pleasant sight was this!
Of all the pretty maidens that be
The circling sun might never kiss
A prettier maid than Rhodope.

By chance an eagle fierce and proud
Came flying over land and sea,
And stooping from his lofty cloud
Looked down on lovely Rhodope.

Then, uttering a scream of joy,
He seized her little slipper bright—
A dainty, silken, pearly toy—
And bore it swiftly out of sight.

The king, he sat in golden crown,
About him stood a glittering band;
When lo! an eagle gliding down,
Had placed a slipper in his hand.

He kissed it once, he kissed it twice;
"Sweet slipper—sweeter foot!" quoth he,
"Go, find it, slaves!" And in a trice
They brought bewitching Rhodope.

One little foot was sandaled fair
In pearly slipper, as was fit;
The other little foot was bare,
No pearl on earth could equal it.

The courtiers sang "Long live the king!"
"But not without a queen," said he;
Then gave his crown and everything
To pretty little Rhodope.

MORNING GLORY.

Once upon a time, somewhere, in Somebody's garden, there grew a Morning Glory vine. Nobody knew how it came there, for no one had planted it, but it was a pretty little thing, with green hearts for leaves and cunning little pale green curls here and there upon its fuzzy stem.

She wanted to get up off the ground where she had been all of her short life, so she crept slowly along to find something to take hold of that she might climb high up into the bright sunlight. She put out her tender tendrils and felt carefully along, for she was blind, poor little thing, and could not see where she was going.

As she reached out she felt something hard. "Ah, perhaps this is something high," thought the Morning Glory, so she crawled up the side quite to the top, but she was not high at all—not much higher than the ground—for it was only a small stone that he had found; so she sadly crept back down the other side, and she lay there quite discouraged.

There was an old man who used to take care of Somebody's garden, and he saw this plant growing there and groping about for support, so he fastened a string from a peg stuck into the ground up to Somebody's window sill, and then he quite forgot all about it.

The next morning the Morning Glory felt more cheerful, and she started upon her search again. She had not far to go this time, because the kind old man had fastened the peg very near to where she lay; so she reached about with caution to avoid another stone, and took hold of the string.

The poor, sightless little thing did not know that the old man had put it there for her, but somehow she felt that it would lead her to where she wished to go—up toward the beautiful blue sky and the great golden sun.

So she climbed along the string, slowly at first, then faster each day as she began to know the way, until, like Jack's bean stalk, she had reached the window sill.

Now Somebody, the person who owned the garden, was ill; so ill that he had to lie in his room with an ugly stage over his eyes, and he never saw the plant that he might never see.

When the poor, sightless little thing was ever unhappy, and was often strewn across, and the servants, when he spoke to them in his injured authoritative voice.

30,000 relatives, and he lived quite alone, with many people upon him, and with ever so many things to make him unhappy, and he was a little wretched in his big, fine house.

One day, when he was groping his way to the side of the frame, and he felt a sharp nail. Now if he had been a little wiser, he would not have hurt him, for it was a harmless little thing, but he made a rough, impatient movement, and it caught his finger and bruised it a little.

This made Somebody very angry, and said some very unpleasant things to the person who dared to put a nail outside his window, and he felt how very cautiously this time, to find out all once more, that he might tear it.

He moved his hand slowly along the sill, and the Morning Glory, reaching her little hand about there at the same time, and their two hands met.

He did not look at all like a hand, it was one just the same, and the little green hand grasped the great white one and they seemed to know and understand each other at once, for the little hand said to the large "white one" very tenderly: "Oh! so you are blind, too! I am so sorry!"

The great hand did not try to find the nail after that; it just touched the Morning Glory with a soft caress and two great drops fell upon the leaves. They felt strangely and not at all like the cool rain drops which sometimes watered the Morning Glory, and something told her that these drops were tears.

Now, after this these two—Somebody and the Morning Glory—grew to love each other very dearly, and each day they would feel about for one another, and the dainty Morning Glory would nestle against his guarded cheek and Somebody would pet her and stroke her leaves very gently.

And the cheerful hopefulness of the little green plant helped Somebody to be a little bit hopeful, too. You see it was harder for him, for he had not always been blind, while she had never seen, and so was used to it that now she hardly minded it at all.

One morning the Morning Glory brought her friend a surprise. She had kept it a secret all the while, and now she proudly put a great, beautiful pink blossom into his hand. He could not see that it was pink, but he felt that it was lovely, and he kissed the pretty flower and murmured, "You little beauty!" and that made the Morning Glory very happy, for all mothers dearly love to have their babies admired, you know.

And the next morning Somebody had a surprise for the Morning Glory. That was a secret, too. No one knew it yet but the doctor, and Somebody drew the little Morning Glory close to his lips and whispered it into her ear. Then the little green hand twined about the great white one, and this is what it said, "I am so glad that you are not going to be blind any more." And Somebody understood it, and the Morning Glory again felt two great warm drops which she knew to be tears; but they were not bitter like the first ones; they were very sweet, because they were tears of joy.

After this Somebody went away and was gone a long time. The weeks passed and he did not return, and the little Morning Glory was very sad; she felt hurt that he had left her so suddenly and with no word of adieu.

Everything was in a state of great bustle and preparation all over the place. Little Morning Glory could hear them hammering and running about, and she felt that something was going to happen. Once she caught the word "bride," and something told her what it all meant, and a little jealous pain went through her heart, for she had once overheard the housemaid telling the cook that all men were fickle, and that when they were away from one they never thought of one at all, and were taken up with whoever was nearest them, and the cook had agreed fully with all that the housemaid had said, and the cook knew men if any one did, she said.

So little Morning Glory hung her head in sadness and quite forgot to feel proud of her pretty pink babies—for there were a great many of them now.

He could not see that it was pink, but he felt that it was lovely, and he kissed the pretty flower and murmured, "You little beauty!" and that made the Morning Glory very happy, for all mothers dearly love to have their babies admired, you know.

So little Morning Glory hung her head in sadness and quite forgot to feel proud of her pretty pink babies—for there were a great many of them now.

Once she felt something tug at her roots and a rough hand grasped her; then a kind voice said, "Don't touch that; master loved the little vine, and it must be left as it is." Oh, how relieved little Morning Glory felt at these words! She reached out and tried to touch the speaker, but the maid hurried away and never saw the little green hands at all.

Soon the nights began to be chilly, and one by one her babies left her and fluttered to the ground, and she herself grew pale and felt very weak and ill, and she feared that she was going to die. How she wished that Somebody would come back; she was afraid that he would be too late.

One morning she heard the window open, and Somebody again stood there; there was some one with him now—a beautiful lady—and he held her in his arms and called her "Sweetheart." In his new happiness he had quite forgotten his little friend, and Morning Glory's heart ached as she remembered what the maid had told the cook.

Just then Somebody looked out and saw poor little Morning Glory with her leaves all faded and brown, and he reproached himself because he had not thought of her before.

"Here, dearest," he said to the lady, "this is the little friend I told you of, and he laid the withered little stem in the lady's delicate hand.

A glad thrill ran through the Morning Glory, and she dropped sixty tiny seeds into the soft open palm; then as the wind swept around the corner a sudden shudder seized her, and little Morning Glory was dead.

"See! my pet!" said Somebody, pointing to the little black seeds, "that means good luck; it is her gift to the bride."

And the beautiful lady smiled and she put the seeds in a little box, saying, "Next year we will have another Morning Glory vine there just like the old one."

"No," said Somebody, "never one quite like that, for that one was like a little friend; it really seemed to understand me. But then I don't need any one to understand me now, for I have you," and again the lady was folded in a loving embrace and Somebody kissed her softly.

The Poets of Ireland.

No critic has yet given us a scientific analysis of Irish genius, but there are certain features of it which all recognize as distinctive—as peculiarly Irish. The most marked of these, perhaps, is the delicate subtlety of the language used in expressing the emotions.

Through all the ages this has been noted. No matter whether the poet or orator was Celtic or Norman, Dane or Saxon, if only his family had been in Ireland long enough, his effusions showed the same exquisite perception of the delicate shades of meaning in all words expressive of sorrow or love, anger, humor or hatred, devotion or patriotism. Is it in the air or the scenery?

The verses of Tom Moore, Oliver Goldsmith, Dr. Maginn, Charles Lover and many others might be cited in this connection.

These are but specimens of the most cultured Irish poets, but the great point of interest in this connection is the enormous mass of poetry and song floating among the common people. And this has distinguished Ireland from the earliest times. The Druids and the bards, the early Christian missionaries and later heroes, even the transplanted Danes, Normans, Scotchmen, Saxons, all were poetic after their kinds, and in many sections of Ireland the trained ear often detects a sort of rhythm in the common speech of the peasantry. To sketch ever so briefly the writers of popular Irish songs in recent times would simply be to write a book. And the supply is apparently without limit, the music as sweet, the language as tender, as delicately shaded as ever. No popular movement is without its poets; no corner of Ireland but enjoys many local ballads. Yet, it must be in the air.

An instrument for testing the speed of electricity on English lines gives the rate at 288,000 miles a second. This is pretty lively going, especially for bad weather, and if the man who receives the message would stir his stumps with equal speed there'd be some fun in closing up a wheat deal. —Detroit Free Press.

NOTED BOOK THIEVES.

HISTORICAL PERSONAGES WHO STOLE UNIQUE VOLUMES.

The Well Dressed and Intelligent Looking Class Which Librarians Fear—A Bishop, an Inspector General, a Pope and a Noted Priest Were Thieves.

Book stealing is an art upon which much ingenuity has been expended. One never knows in what form it will next break out. It is an incident by no means uncommon in Booksellers' row for a bibliophile to be offered a book which had been stolen from his next door neighbor. There is something more than a tradition to the effect that a bookseller has on occasion purchased a book taken a minute or two previously from the shelves outside his shop!

A favorite mode of stealing books from public libraries is to procure a book, sit down to read it and then wrap it up in an overcoat, and after this to take up a paper or magazine. The rest is easily guessed. The public libraries suffer in all sorts of ways, for here the accumulated wisdom of the thief finds plenty of scope. Some of the tribe have a mania for old directories. Librarians complain frequently of the clerical thief of sermons and theological literature.

Novels and "books of the bibliophile" (as the French call them) one can understand being stolen; but sermons and theology! Women, more or less—generally more—respectably dressed, are often objects of suspicion with librarians; for the "receptivity" of cloaks is infinite, and the "feelings" of the culprit must also be considered. As a general rule, the thief is well dressed and educated, and frequently well to do.

HISTORICAL THEFTS.

Whatever may be the causes which prompt a person to steal books there is always this consolation—he is in good company. This balm may not be a very healing one to the soul of the person whose books are stolen, but it must be consolatory to the thief, when repenting in prison, to know that some great and good men have been touched with the same species of insanity. Hearne, in his "Johannes Glastoniensis," more than hints that Sir Thomas Bodley had a weakness in this direction. "If you hold," he warns Sir Henry Saville, "any books so dear as that you would be loath to have him out of your sight, set him aside," etc. Moore, Bishop of Ely has likewise come under such a stigma.

The anecdote runs to this effect: A gentleman calling on a friend who had a very choice library found him unusually busy in putting his best books out of sight. "Upon asking his view in this he was answered, 'Don't you know the Bishop of — dines with me today?'"

The very king of book stealers was Libri, who, as inspector general of French libraries under Louis Philippe, had special facilities for helping himself and whose known thefts have been valued at £20,000. The most interesting illustration of this man's depredations was exposed in 1868, when Lord Ashburnham issued a translation of the Pentateuch from a Latin MS. which had been purchased by the late Lord Ashburnham from Libri, who had sold it under the condition that it was not to be published for twenty years. It had been stolen in 1847 from the Lyons library and the last clause of the agreement, therefore, could be easily understood. Libri evidently was not one of those whom Jules Janin describes as "people who don't think it thieving to steal a book unless you sell it afterward."

POPE AND PRIEST.

Innocent X, when still Mgr. Pamphilo, stole a book from Du Moustier, who was himself a book thief, and ought to have been in court with the devices and designs of his own weaknesses. It is refreshing to come across an example when the tables are so completely turned; and if anything would induce an honest man to turn book thief it should be the exhilarating fun of stealing from another thief. It is reported, however, that Du Moustier recovered the book, and kicked the Cardinal out of the house. Catherine de Medici went in for stealing books by wholesale and barefaced; she seized the fine library of Marshal Strozzi and promised to pay his son for it in installments, but never a farthing did he get.

Of another and equally extreme type was the Spanish priest Don Vincento, who sold books and then murdered the purchasers to regain possession of his coveted treasures. Like most of the biblioclept tribe he came to grief at last. The original edition (1483) of the "Furs e ordinations fetes per los gloriosos Reys de Arago als regnicols del Regne de Valencia," was offered for sale by auction, and after a long and obstinate competition was knocked down to a bookseller named Paxtot.

A week afterward Paxtot's shop was burned down, and he was suffocated at the same time. Suspicion was directed toward Don Vincento, whose residence was searched, and there at length was discovered the incunabula above named. The priest was arrested, and at the hearing he confessed—not from contrition or the fear of torments in the next world, but because it appeared that the volume was not unique, as had been supposed. He sobbed violently when he was condemned to be strangled, and the only defense he vouchsafed was, "Ah! your worship, my copy was not unique."

Married Women Don't Work.

As to married women working there is a bit of statistics that shows how few married women do work for wages. Out of over 200 women who had received training as professional nurses thirty-five afterward married, and only one of these thirty-five ever again worked at her profession of nursing the sick for pay. —Boston Transcript.

Those who say that our soldiers cost as much as Germany's count the expense of the pensioners with that of the regular army. On the average there is about one commissioned officer to every twelve enlisted men in the United States army.

"With My Body I Thee Worship."

When the wedding service of the Church of England was adopted for use in this country the adoring sentiment in the above line was dropped out of it, the Protestant Episcopal church retaining the word "obey" in the woman's vow. Now, it is easy to see that there was no great risk in the promise to obey a man who had just pledged himself to "endow" his wife "with all" his "worldly goods," and also to worship her. The attitude of possessing all that the poor fellow owned, and of having him besides in the attitude of "adoration," might be supposed to be fully the equivalent and balance to the word "obey." As it now stands the promise to obey is only balanced by the equally neglected promise to give the wife all that the man owns.

Neither is carried out, although the last one is frequently made sound, for the first time, by the husband's last will and testament. If he does not live up to his bridal promises he frequently dies down to them. Taken as traditions that convey the sentiment of an entire union of interests, obligations and desires, the whole service should be restored, if poetry is to rule. Taken as the common sense contract solemnized in the midst of the most sacred surroundings, the word "obey" ought to go out promptly, since the correspondingly worshipful words of the old service were dropped out long ago. —Philadelphia Ledger.

Discontent Among Railroad Clerks.

A railroad clerk in this city writes: Will you oblige many railroad clerks by saying that we are the most dissatisfied class in business? A railroad clerk is seldom advanced on account of merit. I know many who have been at the same desks and for the same salary for years and years, and they are acknowledged to be valuable and competent. The men under whom they work are not to blame because they are not advanced. The fault is at the fountain head. The directors of most companies live in the east and in London and other European cities.

Whenever one of those directors has a son or nephew, or the son or nephew of some influential friend, he sends him out west to take a position in the office of the company of which he is a director, and the young man gets a fat place. Please understand that we do not blame the young man. As a rule he is a gentlemanly fellow and does his work to the best of his ability, and some of them have done well. But it is poor encouragement to an old timer to see this principle in vogue. I do not believe it prevails in any other line of business. —Chicago Tribune.

A Mouse in a Surplice.

We have heard of a "bee in a bonnet" and a "flea in a man's ear," but never until a few days since of a "mouse in a surplice." It happened, however, that on a Sunday morning, when a parsonic visitor was unearthing from the parish chest a spare surplice, there fell out from its folds a nest containing several brown mice. Anent the church going mouse a capital story is told. A certain venerable dignitary, remarkable for a profusion of white hair, was one day leaving his cathedral when he thought he felt something moving under his hat. This creature he endeavored to capture, but in vain. On arriving home, however, it was discovered that a small mouse had taken up its abode in the canonical hair. Possibly this little creature was deputed by a chapter of cathedral mice to plead before the benignant canon their proverbial poverty. He, they thought, being a large hearted man, might take their case into consideration. —Pall Mall Gazette.

About Writing One's Name.

People who sign their letters with wild flourishes, or initials only, and give no address, offer one of the worst of compliments to their correspondent by egotistically assuming that their handwriting must be of such familiar importance to him, or that they and their affairs are so present to his mind that further identification is unnecessary. Having their signature cut from the end of a letter, and the address from its inclosure a reply, is a bad compliment which many persons bring upon themselves by an unpardonable illegibility. It is a singular fact the accidental misspelling or mispronunciation of one's name generally constitutes a greater affront and is provocative of more annoyance than a studied insult. —All the Year Round.

Germany's Celebrated Library.

In Germany, fifty of the largest libraries have a total of 12,700,000 volumes; in this country the same number of libraries have 6,100,000 volumes, and in England 6,450,000. One hundred and twenty-five librarians and assistants are employed in the celebrated Madie's circulating library in London. The proprietor, Mr. Charles Madie, who died at the age of 72, founded the library thirty-two years ago, and it has now 25,000 subscribers. Its annual income is £100,000. —New York Ledger.

Sitting Bull's Pipe.

George Connor has in his possession a relic which he prizes very highly. It is nothing less than a pipe which Sitting Bull had in his possession when killed. It was sent to Mr. Connor by a acquaintance who took it from the dead chief's body, and vouches for its genuineness. The pipe is a quaint looking affair. —Manchester Union.

Honesty the Best Policy.

He (trying to play a trump card)—As I passed your house last evening I thought I heard an angel sing. She (stiffly)—I was at the theatre last evening. Mrs. Mulhooly and her twins were at our house visiting the cook. —Good News.

In France steam races are not permitted. Instead, an official test of the power, speed and steadiness of locomotives on different lines of the republic has been made, and a prize awarded to the winner.

Plush Ornaments.

We have closed out, from one of the largest manufacturers of these goods in this country, his entire stock of broken assortments, a matter of over 1500 dozens, and offer them for sale in unbroken box lots (each box holds one or two dozen) at less than one half the cost of making.

In the lot are silk plush, chenille and sewing silk balls, tassels and drops. Lines of colors are not complete in each of the 12 styles, but the assortment as a whole is magnificent. Prices:

25, 37 1-2 and 50 cents a dozen. Regular prices 75 cts. to $1.50.

And about 300 dozen of plush balls at 6 to 12 cents a dozen—regular prices 12 to 37 cents.

Buy enough plush ornaments now for all the fancy work you intend doing in years, for there'll never again be such a chance.

To be seen in the window. West transept.

As a great injustice was done to Mr. Elmer L. Blake of North Peabody, by an article repeated by me, through the mistake of another, to the Salem News of the 5th inst. accusing Mr. Blake of sending false items of news to that paper, and as that article may have reached some who did not see the correction of the misstatement published in the News on Feb. 7, I desire to state that the article reflecting upon Mr. Blake was entirely without foundation, and that I hereby retract any and all statements coming through or from me reflecting on Mr. Blake's character in any respect. Beer is a far more dangerous enemy to Germany than all the armies of France.—Gen. Von Moltke.

The State of Iowa with its two millions of people has less than seven hundred convicts, all told, in her prisons. Does prohibition prohibit there?

In the city of London, last year, five hundred children, under ten years of age, fifteen hundred under fourteen, and two thousand under twenty-one years, were picked up in a state of intoxication.

A petition was signed last month by 500 of the teachers in attendance on the meeting of the State Association at Topeka, asking the Kansas Legislature to so amend the school laws that a teacher's certificate cannot be issued to any one who uses profanity, intoxicating liquors or tobacco in any form.

The United States Senate will miss the shower of star-dust that was wont to fall when Senator Ingalls opened his mouth in meteoric speech. Strangely off key with his famous declaration against the Decalogue as authoritative in American politics, is the prophecy of his successor. In an informal speech before the joint session of the Kansas Legislature, the senator-elect, Judge Peffer, predicted: "By the time the nineteenth century closes in upon us, these United States of America will be governed by the people that are in them. Now, gentlemen and ladies—this People's movement recognizes ladies—when that time of which I have spoken comes, the women will vote and the men will quit drinking."

Life insurance companies have found that applicants who drink alcohol are too risky an investment for the good of their business, and are refusing to insure them. The business is placing a premium on total abstinence. The Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York recently sent out the following instruction to its medical examiners: As we have seen, whatever form these beverages may be indulged in, there will be taken a certain amount of alcohol. We have also found that a habit of such indulgence is soon formed. We may continue our observations by saying that this habit once formed is seldom abandoned entirely; it is rather continued to a greater or less extent through life—which is often a short but a merry one. Frequent drinking is the worst form of indulging. It is well known that moderately small doses of medicine, frequently repeated, will keep the system under its influence continually, while larger doses given at long intervals permit it to recover in measure. So with alcohol. Continual tipping will keep the system in a constantly stimulated, and therefore abnormal condition, with a chance for an occasional over-indulgence. We sometimes hear of such persons reforming; but reformed drinkers, like reformed politicians, are not always to be depended upon. They are unknown quantities in the calculation, and are not good stock for an insurance company to invest in. The reformed alcoholic applicant is an insurance bric-a-brac—very rare and very costly; and can be indulged in only by those who have superabundance of cash for such pleasures! The consequences of immoderate indulgence in alcoholics are often very grave. In death reports alcohol is credited with a very small proportion of the actual deaths recorded, but it is a well-known fact that as remote cause leading up to the immediate cause of death this agent is largely responsible. Pollock says "it ranks before phthisis (consumption) in its deadly effects on human race;" and Dr. E. J. Marsh, now a Medical Director of this Company, in his Mortality Report, vol. ii., p. 115, makes the following observations touching various points in this connection: "The majority of deaths from alcoholism occurred under forty years of age, ninety per cent. under fifty, and none after sixty years, showing that the excessive use of alcohol as a habit is acquired at an early age, and no constitution can long withstand its destructive influence. Nearly twenty per cent. died within the first year of insurance, indicating that the applicants had probably concealed their habits of life by false statements to the medical examiner." The doctor also called attention to the fact that these figures represent only the deaths resulting from the use of alcoholic drinks as a sole cause, and are of little importance in comparison with the more numerous cases where life has been indirectly shortened; they do not represent the larger class in whom "chronic diseases of various organs and tissues have been produced, or a thus debilitated constitution has given way before an acute disease."

During the prevalence of the epidemic of la grippe last winter, many instances were known in which persons kept themselves in a state of semi-intoxication for days, either to prevent an attack, or as a means of curing a slight attack, of the disease. An eminent French physician publicly recommended alcohol as a preventive remedy for la grippe; in consequence of which fifteen hundred persons were arrested on the following day for drunkenness. Twelve hundred of these people declared that they had done nothing more than follow the prescription of the physician referred to. Much mischief is done by this indiscriminate prescribing of alcohol.

W. A. PEFFER,

who will be U. S. Senator from Kansas.

The bitter struggle in Kansas for United States senatorial honors has been ended and that doughty republican champion Senator Ingalls has been beaten. The alliance men united on Judge W. A. Peffer. He is well known in his State as a writer on farming topics and is the author of a popular book, entitled "The Way Out" advocating the loaning of money by the government on farm and farm products. He has resided in Missouri, Indiana, Illinois, Tennessee and Kansas, and has been by turns farmer, teacher, soldier, lawyer and editor. He figured prominently in Tennessee during reconstruction times, opposing the extreme radicalism of Governor Brown. He is at the present time editor of the Kansas "Farmer," a position he has filled since 1881. Under his direction the paper has become one of the best paying properties in the newspaper line. Before joining the "Farmer" Judge Peffer had been an editorial writer on the Topeka "Capital" and has but recently become a member of the Alliance and a champion of its principles. He is tall and slender and wears a full beard, reaching nearly to his waist.

His voice is hoarse, gruff and low toned and a frequent cough shows that he has but a slender stock of health. He is recognized as a man of education and culture and one of the most vigorous writers the alliance movement has brought to the front. He has published a great many articles and pamphlets that have had wide circulation, discussing various economic matters from the farmer's point of view and his articles in the "Forum" of December 1889 on "The Farmers' defensive movement" should be read by all who want to know how this general uprising among farmers has come about.

There is represented in Hood's Sarsaparilla all the knowledge which modern research in medical science has developed, combined with long experience and careful experiment.

Senator Walcott of Colorado is accused of voting for Grover Cleveland in 1884. This with his opposition to the Federal election bill, will make his path a hard one when he comes up for more political honors.

SALEM, JAN. 1, 1891.

One year ago we issued our last club check; we then decided it was hardly a straightforward way of doing business to charge one class of customers five dollars per dozen for pictures and another class but little more than half as much for the same thing. Instead of adopting the motto of most photographers, viz., anything is good enough for club work—we have made our club work equal to our best.

We believed it was a good business principle to charge all our customers the same price for the same thing, and by adopting this course and charging for our work what we believed it was worth, and trying to make it worth as much as any, we should gain their respect and good will.

Our business the past year having been much the most satisfactory of any year in Salem, proves that our judgment was not at fault. We are so well satisfied with the course we took that we shall pursue the same during '91 and shall not cater to that class who are satisfied with anything if it is cheap.

The demands upon our time in the way of large portraiture, particularly frolicsome crayons—have the past year been so great that we have decided to introduce colored pastell portraits, and we had made by Mr. E. L. Hutton of Boston, than whom there is no more skillful artist in his specialty in America, a complete line of samples of those very beautiful pictures.

Remember that no better work than this can be produced in this country, and the price is but little more than is charged for the ordinary grades. Call and see these pictures if you are interested in fine portraiture. W. G. HUSSEY, 222 Essex St., Salem.

Connell And Smith Receive Their Sentence.

Jakey Connell, whose escape from deputy sheriff Bridges was chronicled in the last issue of the PRESS, is again in custody and has received his sentence from the court.

After eluding the officer last Friday night, Connell ran up St. Peter street, turning up Church street, from which he entered the Essex House through the rear door, and found a friend from whom he tried to borrow a dollar, which was refused. He next proceeded to go about the city in search of some friend to lend him money, and while on Essex street, passed by State officer Shaw, who had just left the court house and knew Connell, and would have probably recognized him and taken him into custody had he not thought that surely had been furnished on the new recognizance. The reckless boldness of the young man quite likely saved him from recapture, by throwing the officers off their guard. He finally came to Peabody and stopped with a cousin on Fulton street, where he was concealed until Saturday evening. Officer Bridges came to Peabody and had a consultation with Chief Peasley, who with a posse, started out on a raid to find the missing prisoner, Mr. Bridges remaining at the station during their absence. The Peabody officers visited several well-known resorts, where it was thought Connell might be concealed, but finding no trace of him, separated, the Chief and some of the officers returning to the station, while officer John J. Sweeney wandered over toward "Dublin." Going down Grove street, he saw two men, one of them a brother of Connell; the other man being back-to, was not recognized by officer Sweeney, but as he noticed something peculiar in their actions, he concluded to shadow the pair. He followed them to Fulton street, where they disappeared into a yard in rear of the house of Mary Gallagher. Mr. Sweeney shadowed the premises and presently saw heads appear from several windows; expectation began to run high in the mind of the vigilant minion of the law, and as he watched closely for the next act in the drama, lo! the missing Connell appeared and just as officer Sweeney stepped forward to seize his prey, the unknown man turned and was instantly recognized as officer Neville of Salem. The situation was then apparent. Connell had made arrangements to surrender himself to the Salem police. Mr. Neville, ignoring the courtesy of allowing officer Sweeney to take the surrender, which he should have done, as it occurred within the precinct of the latter officer, took the prisoner himself and started for Salem.

Connell was arraigned upon the charge of breaking and entering the store of F. M. Davenport, on Monday, and being found guilty, was sentenced upon both cases. The sentence on the indictment for entering the store of George H. Jacobs in Danvers, was two years in the house of correction, and upon the Peabody case, one year.

Leonard Smith, his partner in the Danvers robbery, received the sentence of two years. No indictment was found against Smith for complicity in the Peabody case.

It is quite probable that at the next sitting of the grand jury, some action may be taken upon the "escape."

LOCAL LINES.

We want a boy at the PRESS OFFICE to learn the trade.

H. A. Besse has a force of men trimming the trees of the town.

William F. Sawyer, the dry goods merchant, is in New York on business.

J. W. McIntosh has been elected to the State Executive Board of the British American Association.

We publish today on the second page a full account of the life and deeds of the late, lamented Gen. Sherman.

Work is progressing slowly with the Registrars of Voters; but three names being added this week.

The Old Ladies' Home association have decided to hold a fair to continue three days, next December, in Town Hall.

The G-Clef Chorus will give their second concert at Peabody Institute, March 12th. Tickets will be on sale Wednesday.

At the Unitarian Church, Sunday morning, Rev. Mr. Hudson will preach on the place of Washington in American history.

We received a call from John J. Cahill on Thursday. He has recently received a formal appointment to the Boston and New York route, and will return to Peabody to reside as soon as a satisfactory tenement can be secured.

R. v. S. Linton Bill occupied the pulpit of the South Church last Sunday, Rev. George A. Hall being absent on account of sickness.

Rev. A. F. Welch will lecture in the Universalist Church, Sunday evening, on the Life and Services of General Sherman and Admiral Porter.

The Ladies Benevolent society will meet in the vestry of the Universalist church Tuesday, Feb. 26, 1891. Supper will be served at 6.30. All are invited.

Rev. G. A. Hall will give an address in the vestry of the South Church tomorrow evening at 7 o'clock on the "Life and Labors of Robert Moffatt," a pioneer Missioner of Africa.

We have missed the smiling face of our popular expressman, Charles E. Teague, this week. He has been confined to the house by a severe cold, but we were pleased to see him out again yesterday.

The regular Sunday services will be held at St. Paul's Episcopal Church tomorrow. On Tuesday evening, at 7.30 o'clock, Rev. J. W. Hyde of Danvers, will deliver an address.

The Selectmen, Saturday, ordered the Superintendent of streets to see that no more cars are left on Central street, as has been done for a long time, in the evening by the Naumkeag Railroad Co.

The shop of Merritt Cook which was considerably damaged by fire a short time ago, has been repaired by Calvin Pierce. John J. Cunney who occupied the building when burned, has removed to Salem.

William Trofater met with a painful accident at the lumber mill of A. F. Clark on Grove street. He was having a friendly wrestling match and catching his foot, fell and broke two bones in the ankle.

The barn of Robert R. Emerson on Lynn street was broken into on Monday night and a grindstone was smashed, a mowing machine damaged, and a harness mutilated with a knife by the miscreants. A reward of $25. is offered for their capture.

An illustrated lecture will be given by Thomas E. Cummings in Town Hall, Sunday evening, March 8th, subject, Passion play of Oberammergau. Tickets exchangeable at Lee's for coupons, March 2nd, are now for sale, at 35 cents.

Thomas J. Putman, formerly of this town, but who has for many years been connected with the Congressional Library in Washington, D. C., is spending his vacation, which he usually takes at this time of the year, in town with his relatives.

A special horse car carried 54 members of Holten Lodge to Lynn Wednesday evening, to visit Glenmere Lodge, where the Degree Staff exemplified the second degree. A supper was served before their return and a general good time enjoyed.

Action upon the petition to remove the Bushby buildings in the rear of Walnut street which has been pending before the selectmen, has been indefinitely postponed. An arrangement having been made by some of the owners to make necessary repairs.

Miss Mamie Trask of this town made her initial appearance upon the stage at the recital and concert of Miss Gustine, in Salem, Wednesday evening. She acquitted herself very creditably Thursday evening, she received great applause for her character recitation of "Barbara Frietchie."

The petition for laying out Fountain street, has been referred to the next Board of Selectmen, as no one appeared last Saturday before the Board to favor the scheme. The street should be laid out and accepted by the town, and undoubtedly would have been, had the interested parties put in an appearance.

The Co-operative Temperance committee is doing effective work and good results are expected when the votes are counted up in March. Meetings are held every Wednesday evening.

Attention is called to the advt. of "10 per cent Dividend Paying Investment," in another column. This is worth investigating, and our readers would do well to write to the Atkinson House Furnishing Co., Boston or Portland, for full information.

The joint committee of the Fire Companies, "Three Ones and a Two" have perfected arrangements for their grand annual ball, Fast Eve. The concert and dance music will be furnished by the 8th Regiment Band and Orchestra. There is an unusual interest among the people of the town this season, and the event will be the grandest success of the season, surpassing the former parties given by these companies.

In the History of the Cotton Industry just published by J. A. & R. A. Reid, in the account of Firemen's Day Parade, we notice among those who fire carriages, the names of B. B. Humphrey, P. L. Winchester, W. P. Wilkinson, George Stevens, J. O. Buxton, C. K. Mallard, J. M. Benson and C. H. Porter of this town.

Harvey C. Strout has secured a patent for an improved metallic air-tight cover for oil barrels. It is so effective that the strongest peppermint can be covered so that no trace of the pungent fluid can be detected. He has received a very handsome offer for his patent, to be employed in shipping perishable goods. The invention consists of four screws worked by cams.

The annual town meeting will be held March 9th this year. Meeting will be called to order at 8 o'clock when the moderator will be chosen, at 9 o'clock the polls will be opened and kept open until 4.30 o'clock. There will be no business transacted on the first day except the choice of town officers, and balloting on the license question.

The addition that George Stevens has made to his establishment, in the matter of serving hot lunch at noon and other times, is being appreciated by the citizens. Hot coffee, sandwiches, Frankfurt sausages, and the like are always on hand, and there is now a smoking room connected, where patrons can sit and enjoy the fragrant Havana after their lunch.

About twenty-five Armenians availed themselves of the opportunity of listening to a sermon in their vernacular, by Rev. Hitchcock, at the Chapel of the South Church. Dr. Hitchcock was for several years a missionary to Turkey and is familiar with the fatherland of the Armenians. In the evening, he gave an interesting lecture on the Armenians, their customs and country. There are at present about 1500 of that nationality in New England, of which 50 are located in Peabody. They are mostly Christians. Meetings will be held frequently for the benefit of these people. A service will be held tomorrow.

John L. Colcord has appeared among us again, after his painful accident sustained three weeks ago, while driving through a frozen swamp with a loaded wagon. When the wagon slued upon the ice, the shaft was forced against his back, injuring his ribs quite severely and a large piece of flesh was torn from his gloved hand, before he could extricate himself from the painful situation. Had he not been fortunate enough to get on to the wagon and ride home, he would perhaps have perished before assistance reached him, as it was cold and he was in an unfrequented spot.

The report of the Chief Engineer of the Fire Department has been received by the Town Clerk. It recommends the location of three more alarm boxes and the purchase of new apparatus to take the place of the Hose Carriages, Nos. 2 and 4. In case the town thinks best not to replace with Hose Wagons, he adopts a former recommendation of Ex-Chief Lord, that the two companies be consolidated, and a horse and driver be kept in readiness for duty at all times. He also recommends a repeater for the fire alarm, as a prevention against failure of alarm in case of a break in the lines. He suggests further the necessity of placing indicators in the houses of Hose 2 and 4, and the purchase of several new hydrants. He gives the number of men enrolled on the books of the Department 101. The total valuation of the Department is given as $60,040.

SUPPLIES FOR THE ARMY.

The contract for supplying baking powder to the U. S. Army, bids for which were recently opened in New York, has been awarded to the Cleveland Baking Powder Co. Before the award was made the different baking powders offered were submitted to a thorough analysis, with the sanction of Commissary General DuBary, so that the result is a high tribute to the merit of the Cleveland Baking Powder.

Brother Shepard, now consul to Gothenburg, Sweden, has undertaken the task of sending foreign letters to his former paper—the "Danvers Mirror." Sometime since, a communication was mailed, a part of which reached the publishers, but being in Swedish dialect, was hardly appreciable to the numerous readers of our contemporary. The balance of the missive has since reached its destination, after a short sojourn in the mud of the North Sea. We presume the editor would hardly presume to publish it as fresh news.

The Statesmanship of the Don Cameron is shown in his silver transactions too.

SHE FOUND RELIEF.

HALLDALE, ME., Oct. 2, 1890.

DANA SARSAPARILLA CO.—
Gentlemen:—I have been troubled with Muscular Rheumatism ever since I was thirteen years old. I am now forty-seven. And for years I was subject to the most terrible attacks of headache, that would almost drive me distracted.

About every week I would have to call a physician. I would have such awful distress in my stomach, caused by Indigestion. My agony was so intense I often thought I should die. I was unable to sleep nights. Would have to sit up hours and hours; and it was but natural that I should feel all dragged out. Life was a burden to me. Such was my condition when I began to take DANA'S SARSAPARILLA. I have taken but three bottles as yet, and had but one attack of the old distress in my stomach after I commenced taking it. It has cured my headache, taken the tired feeling all out of me; and I can go to bed and sleep all night. It has helped my Rheumatism a great deal, and I have no doubt will cure it. Yours respectfully,

PHOEBE A. GILCHRIST.

Don't be a bigot! We offer you relief, or charge you nothing.

An Enterprising Firm.

The Ames Fertilizer Co. have just issued their annual catalogue of fertilizers, the printing being done at this office. The testimonials therein contained, while few when compared with the stock of approving letters, constantly received by them for the high standard of their goods, are of a very flattering nature, and are convincing proofs of the pains that this firm has taken in improving the quality of fertilizers made at their works since they purchased the plant of A. L. Ames, a little over a year ago.

By energy, honesty and a faithful attention to their business, they have increased the annual out-put very materially. Their goods reach every state of the union and are much used in Canada and other countries.

The Osborne Investigation.

Hearing upon the charges of Mayor Matthews against Commissioner Osborne was commenced at the State House on Tuesday, Lieutenant-Gov. Haile presiding. The charges are ten in number, and include charges of engaging in private business; entering into business engagements with brewers, liquor dealers and others dependent upon the official action of the Board for right to carry on their business; attempting to use his official position for pecuniary gain; attempting to influence the Boston Aldermen in the case of the New England Telegraph Co.; taking to his own use seized gaming implements; allowing his name and influence to be so used in the "Globe" sword contest, as to bring the police force into discredit, and generally for violations of statutes and police regulations, particularly articles 23 and 27 of the Police Rules.

Civilities Exchanged.

A French gentleman who was staying at the Bellevue hotel stepped out of the hotel one morning and walked to the corner of Broad and Walnut streets to wait for a Chestnut street car. An organ grinder with a monkey started to play the "Marseillaise." The monkey tripped across to the French gentleman and held up his paw. The foreigner placed therein a coin, and the monkey took off his little red cad.

Without a thought the polite Frenchman immediately raised his own silk hat in return to the salute, and the monkey ran to his master chattering with delight, a broad grin spreading over his little brown face.—Philadelphia Press.

GEN. W. T. SHERMAN.
[From his latest photograph.]

It is interesting to note the stock from which heroes spring. The Sherman family came from Sussex, England. One branch produced Roger Sherman, William M. Evans and George F. Hoar. Another gave us the two brothers, Senator John and Gen. William Tecumseh Sherman. The father of these two distinguished men, Charles R. Sherman, was a judge of the Ohio supreme court, and during the war of 1812 had acted as commissary of subsistence. Being a great admirer of the Shawnee chief Tecumseh, when the child destined to become one of the great chiefs of the civil war was born Judge Sherman gave him for a second name "Tecumseh."

William Tecumseh Sherman was born at Lancaster, O., on the 8th of February, 1820. His father died when he was 9 years old, and the boy was taken into the family of Hon. Thomas Ewing, who always treated him as a son. At the Lancaster academy he studied the ordinary branches, besides Latin, Greek and French. Mr. Ewing being a United States senator, and having a cadet's appointment at his disposal, notified the youngest to prepare for West Point. In 1834, however, Sherman was employed as rod man with the engineers locating the Hooking Valley canal, receiving a silver half dollar a day for his work. Leaving Lancaster in the latter part of May, 1835, he went to Washington to report to Senator Ewing, traveling over the great National road to Frederick, Md. There he was told that he could take cars to Washington, but "not having faith in the novel and dangerous railroad," he says in his memoirs, he stuck to the coach. From Washington he went to Baltimore by rail, thence by boat to Havre de Grace, thence by rail to Wilmington, Del., and thence up the Delaware by boat to Philadelphia. After a few days of delightful sightseeing he took boat to Bordentown, rail to Amboy, and boat to New York. There he met William Scott, the husband of one of his cousins, "a neatly dressed young fellow," he says, "who looked on me as an untamed animal just caught in the far west, 'fit for gunpowder' and nothing else." The steamer Cornelius Vanderbilt took him to West Point, where he arrived on June 12.

Sherman was a good scholar. He stood sixth in a class of forty-three, and but for the demerits for his inattention to rules and regulations would have stood even higher. Upon graduation he was commissioned a second lieutenant in the Third United States artillery, to report at Governor's Island, New York, where he was assigned to the command of a company of recruits preparing for service in Florida. In Florida, South Carolina and California. Gen. Zachary Taylor was then in chief command in Florida, and Col. A. J. S. M. Gen. Worth commanded the Eighth infantry at St. Augustine. Sherman went with his company to St. Augustine, and seems to have learned more there about spearing fish than shedding blood. The Seminole war was over, the Indians were scattered, and the duties of the soldiers were principally hunting up the fragments of a field strewn with dead men and horses." Thus does Gen. Sherman graphically picture his entrance to his first battle. Then followed the period of reorganization. McClellan was soon to command of all the armies of the United States. Sherman was made a brigadier general, and on the 24th of August was ordered, with his former classmate, George H. Thomas, to the department of the Cumberland to report to Gen. Robert Anderson, once captain of the battery in which Sherman served at Fort Moultrie, S. C.

Buckner was at the time supposed to be marching on Louisville; the state of Kentucky was endeavoring to preserve her neutrality, and there was a very small Union force at hand with which to make a defense. Sherman advanced to Muldraugh's Hill with such volunteers and home guards as could be collected. Gen. Anderson's health was not equal to the command of so many conflicting elements, and on the 8th of October, 1861, he published an order relinquishing his command, which fell on Sherman as next in rank in that department.

It is impossible for the student of war history to peruse the record of Sherman's administration in Kentucky and his subsequent advance to Atlanta without wondering that the same Sherman acted in both fields. Sherman in Kentucky found himself an unwilling commander. "Looking at his field," says Messrs. Nicolay and Hey in their "Life of Lincoln," "with a purely professional eye the disproportion between the magnitude of his task and the immediate means for its accomplishment oppressed him like a nightmare."

His impatient temper soon set his rather sarcastic tongue in most injudicious action. Secretary Cameron came in person to listen to his complaints and asked what he wanted.

"Sixty thousand men at once, and 200,000 before we are done," was his reply. It is definitely recorded that for once in his life Simon Cameron was shut up. When he repeated this to Adj. Gen. Lorenzo Thomas he added: "Sherman is crazy. He wants 200,000 men sent to Kentucky!" The next day it was in the papers that the secretary thought Gen. Sherman crazy—a newspaper correspondent was present to hear the remark. And every word that Sherman said to Cameron was in print within a week. In another week Gen. Sherman was "relieved and ordered to report at St. Louis"—to Gen. Halleck.

Shiloh and Vicksburg. One of the most fortunate things that happened to Sherman and the Union cause was the order for him to report to Grant at Paducah. He had started out with the same disposition as other generals, who were destined to become gigantic failures, to magnify the difficulties in the way and take a discouraging view of his own resources. In Grant he found a man who was always ready to act with what materials were at hand, who from the first was looking at his front rather than his rear. Sherman was a man who could profit by the contact, and doubtless to this fact more than any other is due his final triumph as one of the great leaders of the war.

He was at Paducah when Fort Henry and Fort Donaldson were taken. On the 10th of March, by order of Halleck, he embarked his division at Paducah and at Fort Henry reported to Gen. C. F. Smith, by whose orders he joined Grant at Pittsburg Landing.

At the battle of Shiloh Sherman commanded his division. For the second time he had an opportunity to take part in a great battle, and in command of three or four times as many men as he led at Bull Run.

On the 11th of April Gen. Halleck arrived at Pittsburg Landing and assumed personal command. Commanding his division with the right, Sherman was a witness to Halleck's illustration of the art of war as laid down in the books by advancing an army of over 100,000 men, by regular siege methods, on Corinth, a place of no especial natural strength and defended only by dirt and about 50,000 Confederates. Grant knew that the siege of Corinth was a farce, but Sherman, who was full of impulse and still had a great deal to learn, spoke of it as "a victory as brilliant and important as any recorded in history."

Then came the operations about Vicksburg and on the Yazoo river. Sherman's command consisted of four divisions. He attacked the Confederate fortifications above the Chickasaw bayou and was driven back, having lost 1,900 men to a Confederate loss of 200.

His failure in Kentucky had been followed by his failure at Vicksburg, and he was neither trusted by the people nor by the administration. McClellan assumed command of Sherman's army, except two divisions, and Sherman issued a farewell address. Then with his two divisions he crossed the river and moved down to Bull Run, and waiting for Hunter's approach on the other side from the direction of Sudley Springs, away off to the right; the terrible scene of a poor negro, who was caught between our lines; the crossing of 'Bull Run' and the fear lest we should be fired on by our own men; the killing of Lieut. Col. Haggerty, which occurred in plain sight, and the first scenes of a field strewn with dead men and horses." Thus does Gen. Sherman graphically picture his entrance to his first battle. Then followed the period of reorganization. McClellan was soon to command of all the armies of the United States. Sherman was made a brigadier general, and on the 24th of August was ordered, with his former classmate, George H. GEN. SHERMAN IN '65.

Gen. Sherman thus reports the interview in his memoirs:

"Ah," said Mr. Lincoln, "how are they getting along down there?" I said, "They are getting along swimmingly—they are preparing for war." "Oh, well," said he, "I guess we'll manage to keep house." I was silent, said no more to him and soon left. I was sadly disappointed, and remember that I broke out on John, saying: "You've got things in a h— of a fix, and you may get them out as best you can," adding that the country was sleeping on a volcano that might burst forth at any minute, but that I was going to St. Louis to take care of my family and would have nothing to do with it."

The apparent cheerfulness and hopefulness of the president was doubtless discouraging then to many others, who did not know of the load behind it. Of all the eyes that looked into the future none saw farther than Mr. Lincoln's.

Sherman was elected president of the horse railroad, and entered upon his duties April 1, 1861. Twelve days after came the firing on Sumter. Sherman was offered the chief clerkship in the war department through Montgomery Blair, with a prospect of being assistant secretary of war, but declined. He says Frank Blair intimated to him that he would secure his appointment as brigadier general, and to the position Lyon afterward held, but that he declined this offer. For the work to be done in the field Lyon was per man; but there was little or nothing to work with, while Sherman's strength was only developed when the means were at hand and the machinery in fine working order. Sherman formally offered his services by letter to the secretary of war on May 8, 1861. Six days later he was appointed colonel of one of the new regular regiments, the Thirteenth infantry.

Delays and Disasters of '61. In June, 1861, he was assigned to the command of a brigade in the Army of the Potomac, and Bull Run was the first military contest of any kind that he saw or took part in—"when," he says, "for the first time in my life I saw cannon balls strike men and crash through the trees and saplings above and around us, and realized the always sickening confusion as one approaches a fight from the rear; then the night march from Centerville, on the Warrenton road, standing for hours wondering what was meant; the deployment along the edge of the field that slopes down to Bull Run, and waiting for Hunter's approach on the other side from the direction of Sudley Springs, away off to the right; the terrible scene of a poor negro, who was caught between our lines; the crossing of 'Bull Run' and the fear lest we should be fired on by our own men; the killing of Lieut. of the rear of Vicksburg. Having been ordered to make a feint against Vicksburg, Sherman ran up to Haines' Bluff, disembarked under a heavy gunboat fire, and kept the enemy in momentary anticipation of an attack till he had reason to suppose that the crisis with the main army had passed. Then he joined Grant in time to engage in the general advance. The oft told history need not be retold here.

The Atlanta Campaign. For his brilliant services in Mississippi Sherman was made a brigadier general in the regular army, and was left in command of the division of the Mississippi, embracing the departments of the Ohio, Cumberland and Tennessee and Arkansas. The army of the Ohio was under Schofield, that of the Cumberland under Thomas and that of the Tennessee under McPherson.

On the 10th of April, 1864, the total force of these three armies was 252,000 men—on paper. Those present for duty were 180,000. Out of this force Sherman prepared 100,000 men for active operations, leaving 80,000 to guard the immense territory, the lines of communication, railroads, bridges, depots, etc., behind him. The force of engines and cars required to carry food for his army he estimated at 100 locomotives and 1,000 cars.

There were but 60 locomotives and 600 cars at hand. Sherman instructed his master of transportation to hold all rolling stock arriving from Louisville at Nashville. In this way he accumulated sufficient cars and engines to transport food to his armies.

Gen. Joseph E. Johnston was in his front with an army of 42,000 men. Johnston was afterward joined by an additional force of 22,000 men. Thus the armies stood at 100,000 to 64,000. By the 1st of June Sherman had lost 10,000 men, and Johnston 13,000. The force then stood, Sherman 90,000, Johnston 51,000, showing a surplus of 39,000 for Sherman.

In a limited space it is impossible to give an account of the different battles fought in this campaign. It will be more interesting to note the features of the struggle, the objects to be gained and the advantages and disadvantages on either side. Sherman having a superior force, and being each day drawn farther from his base, was anxious to bring on a battle. Johnston must either fight a force exceeding his own by nearly 40,000 men, or at last demoralize his army by prolonged retreat. The two armies would come together; each would throw up breastworks; the country being mountainous, usually protected Johnston's right; Sherman would throw his surplus to his own right, on the outer extremity of which was his cavalry, and when about to get in Johnston's rear Johnston would retreat.

Sherman, grown impatient, decided to attack at Kennesaw. The armies of the Cumberland and the Tennessee marched forward to the assault. The result was a failure scarcely less bloody than Fredericksburg. Then Sherman once more threw out his flanking column and Kennesaw fell. Union pickets took possession one morning without a shot. Sherman, who with a glass was watching the pickets climb the heights and saw them go over the crest, at once ordered a quick pursuit. So the game went on till Sherman was in sight of the spires of Atlanta.

Then Johnston was relieved of his command by Jeff Davis, and Gen. Hood was put in his place. Hood fell upon Sherman's flank, McPherson was killed and the Union forces driven back with great loss. Sherman was held at bay in sight of Atlanta for a month. The check was discouraging, but the great flank movement forced Hood to evacuate.

A southern writer has told a story of the surrender of Atlanta in most graphic fashion. It was known that Sherman with his army was nearing the city, and the mayor, accompanied by a little band of citizens, rode out to meet the general.

A sudden turn in the road brought them face to face with a marching detachment of men in blue. A brief halt, a hurried explanation. A Federal colonel rode up to the spot and asked a few questions. The white flag, the appearance of the strangers in citizens' garb and the calm, measured words of Mayor Calhoun satisfied the officer, and an orderly was at once detailed to guide the visitors to the commander's camp.

When the mayor and his friends were introduced to Gen. Sherman they saw before them a man of 45 who looked fully ten years older. His bronzed face was seamed with lines of care, and his eyes told a tale of sleepless nights. His wrinkled brow and his rough, closely trimmed beard, together with his weather beaten field uniform, made him look like anything but a holiday soldier, and his appearance contrasted strikingly with the glitter and flaring colors of the imposing staff around him.

The stern commander, after a searching scrutiny of the faces before him, looked down at the ground, while Mayor Calhoun quietly informed him of the latest condition of the city, and briefly surrendered it upon the condition that life, liberty and private property should be protected.

Then the general looked up again, and in a curt, businesslike way said that he would grant the conditions required. Gen. Sherman said: "You know," he said in his abrupt way; "yes, — it, this is war, and I must place your town under martial law. That won't hurt good citizens, but it will play the devil with the bad ones."

Shortly after midday the streets were blue with companies and regiments of Federals. All night the wagons and troops were moving into the city, and the next day the place was crowded.

A dozen generals occupied the best houses, in some cases compelling the original occupants to move into other quarters. Gen. Sherman established himself very comfortably in the present high school building, on the corner of Mitchell and Washington streets, and engaged for a housekeeper an old lady who two days before had been denouncing him as a savage for whom even the worst fate was too good. The two got along very agreeably, and in less than a week the housekeeper told her friends that the general was the nicest man in the world, and had been shamefully slandered.

The rejoicing in the north at the fall of Atlanta knew no bounds. Sherman from having suffered unpopularity became an idol. Many expected the war to end at once, but there was still a fox at large who would be caught. Hood had only limited regard at Corinth when the Confederate army disappeared before a superior force to turn up elsewhere.

But when we consider Sherman's onward movement, with a line of several hundred miles in his rear extending through a hostile country, we see how far superior was the Sherman who followed Johnston's army to Atlanta, to the Sherman who was bewildered in Kentucky.

March to the Sea. Sherman entered Atlanta on the 1st of September. While the people of the north were rejoicing at his success, Sherman himself was puzzling his brain as to the next move on the chess board. With an army of 100,000 men, several hundred miles from his base, his enemy gone from his front and liable to strike at any other point along the whole Confederate and Union front, Sherman might well listen to the plaudits of his countrymen, feeling that they might at any moment be turned to blame. Hood, as anticipated, soon appeared in Sherman's rear, and began to attack the railroad supplying the Union army.

Atlanta. In the cut the upward curves show the general line of march of the Twentieth corps, the broken black line that of the Fourteenth corps, and the unbroken line that of the Fifteenth corps, while the stars show the prescribed range of the cavalry; but it is to be noted that the cavalry swept over a large and flanking body of the infantry often departed from the main line.

Sherman cast longing eyes on Mobile and Savannah—anywhere to shorten his line of supply. Meanwhile he sent Thomas back to Chattanooga to look after Hood and protect his present line from Atlanta to Louisville. He then conceived the plan of marching to the sea, there to meet transports loaded with provisions. Gen. Grant strongly advised him to turn and destroy Hood before entering upon his proposed move.

Sherman replied that if he could hope to overhail Hood he would turn against him with his whole force, but that he feared Hood would retreat southwestward with a view of drawing him from Georgia. "Still," said Sherman, "if he attempts to invade middle Tennessee I will hold Decatur, and be prepared to move in that direction; but unless I let go of Atlanta my force will not be equal to his." Sherman also added in another dispatch to Grant, "If I turn back now the whole effect of my campaign will be lost." Grant replied: "I do not see how you can withdraw from where you are to follow up Hood without giving up all we have gained in territory. I say, then, go on as you propose." So the great march was begun.

Sixty thousand men made a holiday march over the territory lying between Atlanta and the ocean. The march to the sea has doubtless done more to attach fame to the name of Sherman among the masses than any campaign he planned or executed. There is something in it so different from the ordinary lead and powder and blood of war. The men were so happy.

"Uncle Billy, I guess Grant is waiting for us at Richmond," they called out as Sherman passed them on the march. There were shots fired, but at sheep and chickens; there was blood spilled, but it was the blood of November turkeys. It was a jolly, roistering, reckless army—an army that had fought for and won the privilege of roving at will over the territory that was laid open to it. In about thirty days the advance came to the banks of Oostahaw sound, where frowned Fort MacAllister, but Gen. Hazen's division formed in line and walked over the parapets with but little trouble. Supplies were at hand, sent down from the north by sea; the goal was won. Sherman had a new and safe means of supply, and the moral effect of the move was tremendous.

Sherman says in his "Memoirs": "I considered this march as a means to an end, and not as an essential act of war. Still then, as now, the march to the sea was generally regarded as something extraordinary, something anomalous, something out of the usual order of events; whereas, in fact, it simply moved from Atlanta to Savannah, as one step in the direction of Richmond, a movement that had to be met and defeated or the war was necessarily at an end."

Finishing the Struggle. On the first day of February, 1865, Sherman started with 83,000 men in pursuit of

A sudden turn in the road brought them face to face with a marching detachment of men in blue. A brief halt, a hurried explanation. A Federal colonel rode up to the spot and asked a few questions. The white flag, the appearance of the strangers in citizens' garb and the calm, measured words of Mayor Calhoun satisfied the officer, and an orderly was at once detailed to guide the visitors to the commander's camp.

When the mayor and his friends were introduced to Gen. Sherman they saw before them a man of 45 who looked fully ten years older. His bronzed face was seamed with lines of care, and his eyes told a tale of sleepless nights. His wrinkled brow and his rough, closely trimmed beard, together with his weather beaten field uniform, made him look like anything but a holiday soldier, and his appearance contrasted strikingly with the glitter and flaring colors of the imposing staff around him.

The stern commander, after a searching scrutiny of the faces before him, looked down at the ground, while Mayor Calhoun quietly informed him of the latest condition of the city, and briefly surrendered it upon the condition that life, liberty and private property should be protected.

Then the general looked up again, and in a curt, businesslike way said that he would grant the conditions required. Gen. Sherman said: "You know," he said in his abrupt way; "yes, — it, this is war, and I must place your town under martial law. That won't hurt good citizens, but it will play the devil with the bad ones."

Shortly after midday the streets were blue with companies and regiments of Federals. All night the wagons and troops were moving into the city, and the next day the place was crowded.

A dozen generals occupied the best houses, in some cases compelling the original occupants to move into other quarters. Gen. Sherman established himself very comfortably in the present high school building, on the corner of Mitchell and Washington streets, and engaged for a housekeeper an old lady who two days before had been denouncing him as a savage for whom even the worst fate was too good. The two got along very agreeably, and in less than a week the housekeeper told her friends that the general was the nicest man in the world, and had been shamefully slandered.

The rejoicing in the north at the fall of Atlanta knew no bounds. Sherman from having suffered unpopularity became an idol. Many expected the war to end at once, but there was still a fox at large who would be caught. Hood had only limited regard at Corinth when the Confederate army disappeared before a superior force to turn up elsewhere.

But when we consider Sherman's onward movement, with a line of several hundred miles in his rear extending through a hostile country, we see how far superior was the Sherman who followed Johnston's army to Atlanta, to the Sherman who was bewildered in Kentucky.

March to the Sea. Sherman entered Atlanta on the 1st of September. While the people of the north were rejoicing at his success, Sherman himself was puzzling his brain as to the next move on the chess board. With an army of 100,000 men, several hundred miles from his base, his enemy gone from his front and liable to strike at any other point along the whole Confederate and Union front, Sherman might well listen to the plaudits of his countrymen, feeling that they might at any moment be turned to blame. Hood, as anticipated, soon appeared in Sherman's rear, and began to attack the railroad supplying the Union army.

Atlanta. In the cut the upward curves show the general line of march of the Twentieth corps, the broken black line that of the Fourteenth corps, and the unbroken line that of the Fifteenth corps, while the stars show the prescribed range of the cavalry; but it is to be noted that the cavalry swept over a large and flanking body of the infantry often departed from the main line.

Sherman cast longing eyes on Mobile and Savannah—anywhere to shorten his line of supply. Meanwhile he sent Thomas back to Chattanooga to look after Hood and protect his present line from Atlanta to Louisville. He then conceived the plan of marching to the sea, there to meet transports loaded with provisions. Gen. Grant strongly advised him to turn and destroy Hood before entering upon his proposed move.

Sherman replied that if he could hope to overhail Hood he would turn against him with his whole force, but that he feared Hood would retreat southwestward with a view of drawing him from Georgia. "Still," said Sherman, "if he attempts to invade middle Tennessee I will hold Decatur, and be prepared to move in that direction; but unless I let go of Atlanta my force will not be equal to his." Sherman also added in another dispatch to Grant, "If I turn back now the whole effect of my campaign will be lost." Grant replied: "I do not see how you can withdraw from where you are to follow up Hood without giving up all we have gained in territory. I say, then, go on as you propose." So the great march was begun.

Sixty thousand men made a holiday march over the territory lying between Atlanta and the ocean. The march to the sea has doubtless done more to attach fame to the name of Sherman among the masses than any campaign he planned or executed. There is something in it so different from the ordinary lead and powder and blood of war. The men were so happy.

"Uncle Billy, I guess Grant is waiting for us at Richmond," they called out as Sherman passed them on the march. There were shots fired, but at sheep and chickens; there was blood spilled, but it was the blood of November turkeys. It was a jolly, roistering, reckless army—an army that had fought for and won the privilege of roving at will over the territory that was laid open to it. In about thirty days the advance came to the banks of Oostahaw sound, where frowned Fort MacAllister, but Gen. Hazen's division formed in line and walked over the parapets with but little trouble. Supplies were at hand, sent down from the north by sea; the goal was won. Sherman had a new and safe means of supply, and the moral effect of the move was tremendous.

Sherman says in his "Memoirs": "I considered this march as a means to an end, and not as an essential act of war. Still then, as now, the march to the sea was generally regarded as something extraordinary, something anomalous, something out of the usual order of events; whereas, in fact, it simply moved from Atlanta to Savannah, as one step in the direction of Richmond, a movement that had to be met and defeated or the war was necessarily at an end."

Finishing the Struggle. On the first day of February, 1865, Sherman started with 83,000 men in pursuit of the rear of Vicksburg. Having been ordered to make a feint against Vicksburg, Sherman ran up to Haines' Bluff, disembarked under a heavy gunboat fire, and kept the enemy in momentary anticipation of an attack till he had reason to suppose that the crisis with the main army had passed. Then he joined Grant in time to engage in the general advance. The oft told history need not be retold here.

of the rear of Vicksburg. Then he joined Grant in time to engage in the general advance. The oft told history need not be retold here.

The Atlanta Campaign. For his brilliant services in Mississippi Sherman was made a brigadier general in the regular army, and was left in command of the division of the Mississippi, embracing the departments of the Ohio, Cumberland and Tennessee and Arkansas. The army of the Ohio was under Schofield, that of the Cumberland under Thomas and that of the Tennessee under McPherson.

On the 10th of April, 1864, the total force of these three armies was 252,000 men—on paper. Those present for duty were 180,000. Out of this force Sherman prepared 100,000 men for active operations, leaving 80,000 to guard the immense territory, the lines of communication, railroads, bridges, depots, etc., behind him. The force of engines and cars required to carry food for his army he estimated at 100 locomotives and 1,000 cars.

There were but 60 locomotives and 600 cars at hand. Sherman instructed his master of transportation to hold all rolling stock arriving from Louisville at Nashville. In this way he accumulated sufficient cars and engines to transport food to his armies.

Gen. Joseph E. Johnston was in his front with an army of 42,000 men. Johnston was afterward joined by an additional force of 22,000 men. Thus the armies stood at 100,000 to 64,000. By the 1st of June Sherman had lost 10,000 men, and Johnston 13,000. The force then stood, Sherman 90,000, Johnston 51,000, showing a surplus of 39,000 for Sherman.

IT APPEARS brighter for the success of the International Copyright Bill than for some time. Amendments innumerable have been tacked on in the committee of the whole, the only effect of which, appeared to be total annihilation of the measure. It is highly probable that the bill will be enacted as it passed the House of Representatives.

WEST PEABODY comes forward with a petition asking the town to appropriate $1200 for a hearse and the other necessary appurtenances for funerals, including a hearse house. The petition is headed by Charles W. Felt.

It seems hardly necessary for the town to incur such indebtedness at the present time. One hearse is already in possession of the town, and as we believe there is no undertaker in that part of the town, so that in case a funeral should take place it would be necessary to call in the services of an undertaker from this part of the town or out-of-town, it seems to be almost a useless expenditure. It might be otherwise, if an undertaker were located in the West village, and deaths were of more frequent occurrence.

This seems to be a dead issue.

THE RETIRING members of the Trustees of Peabody Institute are George H. Poor and G. Fred Osgood. They have been faithful and efficient members of that board, and if the custom which has for some years obtained shall be adhered to, a great loss will result to that institution. We do not say that their places cannot be filled, for experience has demonstrated the contrary in scores of instances, but with the clamor that is usual, for election to the vacancies, there is great danger that men as well qualified may not be chosen to fill the position. The old rule has been relaxed some within the past year or two, and with the Australian system of ballot and nomination, it is possible to re-nominate these gentlemen, even if the caucus neglects to do so, and a re-nomination which would be certain re-election would be appreciated by most of the citizens of the town.

WE ARE pleased to notice the mark of confidence and esteem conferred upon our representative to congress, General William Cogswell, by speaker Reed of the national house of representatives, in appointing the General, as the New England member upon the committee, to attend the funeral of the late General Sherman.

General Cogswell is the highest rank officer of any in New England who accompanied Sherman in his "March to the Sea." A cordial friendship has ever existed between General Cogswell and his former superior, and it is an open secret that some years ago General Sherman so far interested himself in behalf of General Cogswell, as to secure a very favorable consideration of his name as a candidate for an appointment to an important position in the Boston custom house. The appointment would undoubtedly have been made, but the place was coveted by a dependent of a harder political fighter than the late hero.

General Cogswell was the youngest brigadier general in the army during the rebellion. He was appointed upon the field, for acts of especial gallantry, when but 26 years of age, and assigned to the corps of General Sherman.

While our esteemed congressman cannot fail to appreciate the mark of distinction just conferred upon him, he will be pained by the sad duty which that appointment imposes, of attending the obsequies of a superior officer and friend, so deeply loved and respected.

The Marblehead Messenger seeking to score a point against the trolley system of railroad travel system:

The opposition to trolley wires in the public streets has looked to some people like obstructing the march of progress. Well, New York is reasonably progressive, almost as much so as Peabody, for instance—yet this is the way the ablest Republican daily speaks of the trolley system:

There is no telephone, telegraph, electric light, or other form of electric overhead wire at once more ugly or more dangerous than this same trolley system. It makes every street on which it is stretched look as unsightly as a back yard with a naked clothes-line stretched over it, or a vacant lot with derelict ropes crossing the horizon everywhere. The disagreeable poles are on both sides of the street, and when some other wire parts and dangles down on a trolley wire, there is apt to be a lively if not a fatal electric disturbance, for the voltage is very large.

The above is only the opinion of the New York Press, but Mayor Grant, the Board of Electrical Control and Commissioners after a thorough investigation of the system in Boston unanimously voted to grant the company the asked for permission, notwithstanding the opposition of the Press. Surely we agree with the Messenger that "New York is progressive enough for us."—Beverly Times.

The position which the Beverly Times has taken in the proposed extension of the trolley system to its town is a progressive and reasonable one. That system of propelling cars by electricity has had a fair trial during the present winter in Boston, and its success in every way has been amply demonstrated. The West End Co. has constructed lines enough to ensure the presence of a large number of cars in different parts of the city. The verdict of the public is almost unanimously in favor of the system. Transit is made more rapidly, more frequently and with as little obstruction as, in the long run, is found with the cars to which horses are attached. Now and then, during the very severe storms, a car has been temporarily hung up by loss of power, but in the main the electric cars have made better time, have met with less obstruction than the other cars. At the same time the horses have been retained and those who are familiar with the hard usage to which the companies have been compelled to put the horses in severe snow storms cannot fail to see the improvement. The system allows the propulsion of cars double the size of those which have been formerly in use, the cars on the Shawmut line having more the appearance of a car on a steam railway than of a street car. The cars run as easily, in fact easier, if anything, than the small ones, and at times when travel is larger are a great convenience as well as comfort.

Electrical cars have come to stay. That is beyond question and the opposition to their use comes from the same source that has made opposition to every improvement in the age. I will be no more possible for these conservatives to stem the march of progress in this direction than it has been in the past, and in years to come the opponents of electrical transit will look back with wonder at their folly. In this vicinity the cars have been a success, and there are few of our citizens who have come to patronize the electrical cars, either on the Naumkeag or Essex Electric Street railways, would wish for a return of the old system. Transit is more comfortable and rapid; the cars are run with sufficient frequency to enable the passengers to reach Salem or return in less time than under the old method. Hills are no obstruction; cars can be stopped anywhere, and in every respect the person who should propose a return to the old fashioned system would be pronounced a fit subject for a lunatic asylum.

With all these advantages—and they are patent to nearly every one—the attitude of Beverly and Danvers seems almost incomprehensible. Electrical cars have got to come, as we have said, and there is no system that has proved satisfactory except this system. Progress will undoubtedly be made in this motive power; the motors will be so improved that the cars will glide along as noiselessly as if no apparent power was propelling them. But after a trial of all the systems the trolley has been a success when others have failed, and when a method is devised, if it ever happens, that will supplant it in usefulness, the companies not using the trolley system will be equally glad to make the change. Existing companies can no more resist the march of progress in this direction than can conservatives of to-day resist progress in the present direction. In Beverly another system has been in operation to a limited extent, but its most strenuous advocates are not sanguine that it can be utilized to the extent needed for the transportation which is at present afforded by either the Naumkeag or Essex Electric railways.

An extension of the trolley system to both Beverly and Danvers would be one of the best things that could come to the travelling public, and would be of great advantage to the citizens of both these towns. The people who ride from Salem to Beverly and are obliged to change cars because of their own foolishness in declining to grant a franchise to the Naumkeag R. R. are already beginning to grumble, and to wonder if, after all, they have not made a great mistake. And some of the objections to the poles and wires are of the most trivial character. We hear of one man who objects to the system because of the noise made by the cars in transit. The erection of the poles is not always, we are willing to admit, an ornament to the thoroughfares on which they are placed. But the same people will make no objection to the erection of any number of telephone or telegraph poles, or the poles for a fire alarm. And surely the effective, easy and rapid transportation of the public from one place to another is of as much advantage to the body politic as the conveniences of the telephone or telegraph, or the necessity of a fire alarm. While the people of Beverly, Danvers and Marblehead are behind the times, Peabody is in line with the march of improvement, and its citizens are enjoying the advantages of two electrical lines to Salem.

And all this has been brought about, not because of the liberality of its citizens, for at the outset there were as many growlers here as in the towns to which we have referred, but because of the broad minded and liberal judgment of the Board of Selectmen of this town. Those who were ready to condemn the Board at the outset are now its strongest supporters. The franchise which was given was of great benefit to the people of the town. Far more so, in every respect, than to the companies. It is but a short time, as our readers will remember, when, during the hearings that were held before the Board, the complaint at the poor accommodations and crowded cars was earnest and persistent. Then the people were told, and reasonably so, that the companies were doing the best that they could under the old system. Demand for transportation had increased, as it has in Boston and other large cities, and a new motive power must be devised to meet this increasing clamor. It has been met, with what success is patent to every one. And in granting this franchise, the Board of Selectmen has shown wisdom, good judgment, and a knowledge of coming events far in advance of our neighboring towns. If no other official act had been done during its time of service, it would be entitled to the applause and gratitude of our citizens. This will be demonstrated more and more as the years pass.

THE NEW PLAN OF CONVEYING REAL ESTATE.

As a rule, the reforms and discoveries in any pursuit in life do not come from within. The tendency to precedent, to habit, is so strong in human nature, that the subject must be looked at from some new and unusual standpoint before any serious change is made. It is not a farmer who usually invents a new agricultural implement. Sewing machines were not devised by tailors. Lawyers, as a rule, oppose the slightest deviation from established rules, and precedents, and reforms in the application of justice and equity will come from outside the bench and bar. It is but a variation of this law, that the newer country, the standard of intelligence being equal, the greater the measure of progress. From Australia we have received a ballot law that is universally admitted to be a great advance upon our old system, and now from the same country it is probable that we are to adopt a plan for transfers of land that will do away with our present costly, troublesome and insecure system of verification of titles to land. Under the latter system, the task of the conveyancer grows more difficult and more unsatisfactory every year. Glance at the numbers of volumes in the Salem Registry of Deeds, and particularly notice the great ratio of increase in the last ten years. It may cost many hours to look up a title to any piece of land in this town, and then only to find that it is by no means sure to resist a legal attack upon it.

The new method cuts away the complicated and uncertain web that is woven about land titles, at a stroke. By it, the title is registered, and not the mere deed. The owner of a piece of land has his title examined, once for all, by the proper official, and if approved of, the title is declared good, and registered, and this registration is conclusive as to all future transfers, which are recorded by the same official. The superior safety, ease and cheapness of this plan over the present one is seen at once. Mortgages of the land can be made with much greater ease and safety than at present, and no one has as yet been able to give any reason why this last gift from the antipodes shall not be adopted as quickly, and work as satisfactorily, as the former one.

Take Advantage of This.

We do not as a rule praise one physician above another, but since the famous Dr. Greene of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., so well known through his wonderful discovery, Dr. Greene's Nervura, and who is the most successful specialist in the cure of nervous and chronic diseases, announces that he will give free consultation and advice to all those who write him about their cases, it should be made known in order that the thousands of sufferers from these long standing diseases may take advantage of the free consultation.

Write him about your case in full, all of you sufferers, or send for his symptom blank to fill out, and he will return a carefully considered answer, fully explaining your disease and giving you a perfect understanding of all its symptoms, free of expense. His experience is so vast, his practice so enormous, and his vegetable remedies of so marvellous a curative power, that you can certainly be cured.

HOW TO SUCCEED.

This is the great problem of life which few satisfactorily solve. Some fail because of poor health, others want of luck but the majority from deficient grit—want of nerve. They are nervous, irresolute, changeable, easily get the blues and "take the spirit down to keep the spirits up," thus wasting money, time, opportunity and nerve force. There is nothing like the Restorative Nerve discovered by the specialist, Dr. Miles, to cure all nervous diseases, as headache, the blues, nervous prostration, sleeplessness, neuralgia, St. Vitus dance, fits and hysteria. LITERARY NOTES.

A department devoted to the interests of amateur sport has just been established in Harper's Weekly. The leading object of this department, which is in no sense of the word reportorial, is to keep sportsmen in touch with current questions, and furnish them with unbiased and expert criticism and the best literature obtainable in their particular field. It is in charge of Caspar W. Whitney, late editor of The Weed's Sport.

Admirers of Sir Walter Scott will find many things of interest concerning the author of Waverley in the March number of Harper's Magazine. Lawrence Hutton, in a paper on "The Literary Landmarks of Edinburgh," describes the present appearance and condition of his homes and haunts in the Scottish capital; George William Curtis, in the "Editor's Easy Chair," discourses upon the immortal Wizard of the North as painted by himself and by that other great Scotchman, Thomas Carlyle; and William Dean Howells, in the "Editor's Study," calls the reader's attention to the recently published Journal of Sir Walter Scott, and, in some discriminative remarks which follow, hints at certain possible human weaknesses in the character of the man whom we refuse to regard with any but unmixed admiration.

One finds it hard to believe that Mrs. P. T. Barnum's article, "Moths of Modern Marriages," in The Ladies Home Journal for March, is really the first she has published. Her keen comment touches the very heart of existing difficulties, and transforms an old subject into one of fresh and genuine interest. The timely suggestiveness of the article is attracting wide attention.

The March Cosmopolitan exhibits a table of contents made up to cover the widest possible field. The magazine is edited upon the principal of giving something that will interest every member of the family circle,—the young woman as well as the philosopher. It opens with an exquisite frontispiece, a reproduction of a painting by Seifert Munich, purchased by the Cosmopolitan for use in this way. There is given first a light article treating of the French stage and illustrated in a way that gives an excellent idea of some noted French beauties. Protestant Missions appeals to all who contribute to the great works performed in the name of religion and charity, while the Darkest America is a concise discussion of the Indian question with a great variety of pertinent illustrations. Mrs. Van Rensselaer Cruger writes of the slovenly dressing of Americans, and no one is better qualified to review the subject thoroughly. A departure in magazine work is the long expected autobiography of Frederic Villers, the famous war correspondent. Villers writes as well as he illustrates and his "Story of a War Correspondent's Life" is as entertainingly written as it is skillfully illustrated by this prince of newspaper correspondents and artists. A striking short story of thrilling adventure "How I Shot My First Elephant," by MacMahon Challinor, and "Labor Unions and Strikes in Ancient Rome," an illustrated article by Dr. G. A. Danziger, are among the best things in North Cosmopolitan. The regular departments of Current Events and Social Problems, by Marrant Halstead and Edward Everett Hale, respectively, are as usual, maintained with the accustomed wisdom and ability excepted of these two well known writers. The brief essays of Brander Mathews on purely literary subjects, are becoming a prominent feature of the Cosmopolitan. Mr. Mathews treats of "Certain Recent Volumes of Verse" in the March number. Cosmopolitan Publishing Co., Madison Square, New York, 25 cents a copy.

The eighteenth number of the Salem "Visitor," published this week, contains an interesting article by Charles S. Osgood, Esq., Register of Deeds, on the "Court Houses of Salem." The article is fluently illustrated. John W. Holly & Co., Newsdealers have it.

A great revolution is looked for in evening dressing. Heavy fabrics are to be discarded and only thin and gossamer dresses worn. The cause of this improvement in style may be traced indirectly to the popularity of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup, which has proven such a panacea for exposure and colds.

Dyspepsia

Makes the lives of many people miserable, causing distress after eating, sour stomach, sick headache, heartburn, loss of appetite, a faint, "all gone" feeling, bad taste, coated tongue, and irregularity of the bowels. Dyspepsia does not get well of itself. It requires careful attention, and a remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which acts gently, yet efficiently. It tones the stomach, regulates the digestion, creates a good appetite, banishes headache, and refreshes the mind.

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. After eating I would have a faint or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. My trouble was aggravated by my business, painting. Last spring I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, which did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced." GEORGE A. PAGE, Watertown, Mass.

Mr. D. Howard Roberts, a teamster, was struck by a bullet on Friday at 1.30 o'clock while standing in front of Guilford's Mill, on Commercial street, Lynn, just as he had returned from dinner. Suddenly throwing up his hands and giving a cry, he fell bleeding to the ground. The ambulance was summoned and he was taken to the hospital, weak from loss of blood from a wound over his right hip. Search was made for the source from which the shot came, but it was not ascertained whether it was fired intentionally or carelessly.

Day, Boxford, $23,183.17; Sophia R. Mayhew, Peabody, $2850.

A large audience gathered at Laster's Hall, Lynn, last Sunday evening, to listen to an address by Henry K. Lloyd of Boston, President of the District Council of Massachusetts, K. of L. The meeting was in the interest of the locked-out morocco workers. The speaker reviewed the general labor situation. He thought the labor problem should be made a subject of education. The object of the organization has not been accomplished, and he thought the organization of trades unions should be made perpetual. He made the usual tirade upon capital and capitalists and recommended the use of the ballot box as a means of relief from the alleged oppressions of the working men. He denounced the bi-annual election law as a scheme of the capitalist, and did not want the matter to be carried on to the "stump", as the campaign orators would deceive the voters. He declared himself a socialist and recommended state control of transportation. The whole tenor of his remarks was a diatribe on capital.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL.

At the Boston Theatre next week commencing with a matinee Monday, Rich & Harris' Howard Athenaeum Specialty Company will furnish the attraction.

Special Holiday matinee will be given at the Park Theatre Monday, "Ship Ahoy" being the drawing card.

A matinee will be given Monday at the Grand Opera House, George Wilson's Minstrels occupying the boards.

At the Boston Museum a matinee performance of "The Solicitor" and "Betty's Finish" will be given Monday. Next Saturday finishes this engagement. It has had a long and highly successful run, this being the third month.

At the Hollis Street Theatre, next week will be the last but one, of Mr. and Mrs. Kendall's engagement Monday (last time) "All for Her"; Tues. eve'g, Wed. Mat. and night, "A Scrap of Paper"; Thurs. "Impulse"; Friday night and Sat. Mat. "Ladies Battle" and Uncle's Will; Sat. night, "Impulse."

The Tremont Theatre will celebrate Washington's birthday with a matinee in addition to the regular evening performance—Annie Pixley in "The Deacon's Daughter." Commencing Tuesday, and continuing the remainder of the week, the same talented actress will appear in her new play—"Kate," a Romance of the war. Seats are now on sale.

The Globe Theatre will present Monday, Lydia Thompson, in the latest New York success, "The Dazzler."

The new theatre to be completed in New York by next season. Hammerstein's new theatre on Forty-second Street, Richard Mansfield's on Forty-ninth Street, and Hoyt and Thomas' on Forty-first Street. Work has also begun on Mr. Miner's new Fifth Avenue Theatre, and T. Henry French is talking about building a house of his own.

E. E. Rice is again afloat with his new play, "Never Better," which is being whipped into shape in one night stands.

"Never Happened" is the title of a new musical comedy which will be sent on the road next season by Geo. Washington Lederer.

The Springer Lithographing Co. has been enlarged, and a job printing establishment added.

Mrs. George Drew Barrymore is seriously ill at her mother's home in Philadelphia.

Jennie Eddy, a niece of Mrs. Geo. S. Knight, who has been "soubretteing" with "The Fakir," will star next season in a comedy entitled "My Girl." It is from the pen of a well-known New York journalist, and is described as a novelty, being "a sobrette play without a will." A feature will be a bicycle race on the stage between two professional riders.

The souvenir craze is destined to attain the utterly-utter in the ivory autographic fans contemplated for the approaching 150th performance of "Men and Women" at Frohman's Twenty-third Street Theatre.

Lydia Thompson in "The Dazzler," is one of the most amusing farce-comedies on the road this season.

Stuart Robson's Southern tour has proven a perfect ovation. Last Monday he appeared to a packed house in New Orleans, which gave the warmest kind of a reception.

"The Crystal Slipper" returned to Pittsburgh last Monday, and was received by a tremendous audience. Next week it goes to Philadelphia.

Mr. James Meade, of "Bluebeard, Jr.," is in New York.

It is current that Charles MacGeachy has abandoned "Old Jed Prouty" and formed a mysterious syndicate of some kind of over a dozen of the leading successful companies.

Nat Goodwin in "The Nominee" is doing the biggest business ever done at Bijou Theatre, New York.

Joseph Murphy will retire from the stage next season.

"Ship Ahoy" is to remain in Boston where it has made a very big hit, owing much to the ability of Frank Blair and Edith Murrill.—Exchange.

Charles Frohman has signed a contract for next season with Miss Elsie Anderson de Wolfe, a well-known amateur actress. Miss de Wolfe is twenty-four years old, and a good-looking brunette. She is at present studying in Paris.

Donnelly and Girard's "Natural Gas" after a very successful California trip, are slowly but surely returning eastward.

Quay's Reply.

In the Senate on Monday, Senator Quay read from typewriter copy, a fifteen minute speech in which he attempted to answer the charges made against him. He denied all of the accusations, branding them as falsehoods. For a long time he has been at work on the speech, boiling it down and paring off whatever could be dispensed with, so that when finally delivered, it was pretty thoroughly condensed. His hearers were comparatively few, and he was obliged to wait patiently all day, until nearly 5 o'clock in the afternoon for the executive session to terminate before an opportunity offered for him to free his mind.

The speech was not interrupted during its delivery, nor did it call forth any applause at its conclusion.

It is thought he will go to Florida to recuperate now that he has made an answer to the charges that have been made against him. His health is considerably impaired, possibly by the mental strain he has sustained for sometime. It is also intimated that he may now resign his seat.

"Render therefore unto Caesar, the things which are Caesar's" and accept a fact that is delighting the civilized world. This is, that pain will no more walk the earth, it is being fast killed out with Salvation Oil.

A Burdensome Vice.

It has been estimated that one fifth of the inhabitants of the United States use tobacco, and average twenty-five pounds each, per annum.

The amount of tobacco annually used is estimated at 310 million pounds. 70 million pounds are used in the production of domestic cigars; 222 million pounds of smoking and chewing tobacco are consumed; 8 million pounds are used in the manufacture of snuff; 6 million pounds are required in the manufacture of cigarettes; and four million pounds of cigars are imported.

If the tobacco-users of the United States would abstain for a period of two years from the chewing, smoking, and snuff-taking habit, and place the money they would spend for tobacco in that period in a common fund, there would be almost enough money in the fund to wipe out the entire national debt, and five years abstaining would give the head of each family in the United States enough money to invest in an eighty-acre homestead farm in the far Western States and Territories; or it would give a navy of fifty first-class war vessels, fully equipped, and create a fund that would maintain and the Navy Department for at least twenty-five years.—The Price Current.

A very prominent Chicago physician was desirous of making some experiments with opium. Relieving that he would never allow the drug to fasten itself upon him, and fully convinced that he could not become a slave to it, he commenced his task. He proved to be weakest where he thought himself strongest, and the direst narcotic servitude was the result. He squandered his estates, lost his practice, sold his house and furniture, abandoned his family and became an inmate of an inebriate asylum.

There is no doubt that a large share of the hysterical girls, and the boys that have a tendency to inebriety, owe their condition to the tobacco habits of their fathers. I have seen numerous dreadful illustrations of this. One gentleman brought his boy to me, who, he said, "seemed to have been born with the nerves all on the outside of the body." When a child, he had the St. Vitus' Dance. As he grew older, and recovered from this, it was found impossible to keep him in school; for he became exhausted at the least exertion, could not sleep nights, and his nervous system seemed a complete wreck. I looked into the case carefully, and could find no reason in the boy for his extreme nervous condition. Finally, I asked the father if he used tobacco. He replied, "Yes, I've used it all my life; began when a mere boy, and it hasn't hurt me a particle." I told him that his son was suffering from its injurious effects, and that the only time to cure him extended back of his birth. —Dr. J. H. Kellogg, in National Baptist.

Mrs. Dix—Why does your husband call you his "good resolution?" Mrs. Hicks—He says I am always "broke."

Kickshaw—I can't understand Glim's chronic bachelorhood. Mrs. Kickshaw—Neither do I. He surely can't have inherited it.

He—Well, Hedwig, did you think of me during my absence? She—Oh, yes, love! You remember the beautiful set of jewelry I pointed out to you the other day in a shop window, and which you admired so much. I went and bought it.

Anxious Mother—As I passed the parlor door last evening, I saw Mr. Niccelfello's face very, very close to yours. Lovely Daughter—Y-e-s, ma, he's so near sighted.

RELICS FROM THE SHIPS.

SOME OF THE QUEER THINGS SEEN IN OLD SOUTH STREET.

Quaint Figureheads Which Have Interesting Histories—How Some of Them Were Handled During the Draft Riots. A Pessimistic Old Salt.

A battered looking old fellow, wearing an antiquated chin beard that was the color of picked oakum, stood on South street yesterday, gazing at one of the big clipper ships that was loading preparatory to a trip around the Horn to San Francisco. His gaze was somber. He seemed in some way discontented with affairs as they stood. Evidently he was not pleased with his immediate surroundings.

"Handsome ship, that," remarked a bystander to the veteran. "Humph," snorted he of the oaken beard. "Mebbe you're a jedge o' ships." "Well, no, but I thought"—"Oh, you did," retorts the veteran. "Well, I thort you did. Well, that air clipper she air well enough for her. I ain't sayin' she ain't a bit handsome to look at, but I've seen a heap better. Thar wuz the Davy Crockett. She wuz a ship as was hansom an' as did hansom. An' there wuz—but what's the use? Times is changed an' ships is changed an' South street is changed. There's more wrecks along here than anything else."

"What d'ye think I seen along here a while ago? Well, I went in one of them junk shops where they keeps all sorts of things that they picks up from old ships, an' shiver me ef thar in that shop wuzn't the figurehead of a ship I sailed in thirty years ago. 'Twuz all battered an' broke, but I knew it at once. Well, I bought it, an' I'm goin' to take it up to Chettykut, where I live, an' keep it there. An' I ain't goin' voyagin' through South street any more. It makes me feel like a castaway hulk myself!" With this the ancient one re-lapsed into a silence which he would not break.

THE OLD STYLE FIGUREHEAD.

In one respect the old salt was right enough. South street can show an abundance of queer relics of wrecks and relics of brave men who have gone down to the sea in ships within the last thirty years or more. There are a number of shops that keep all sorts of queer things on hand. They pick these things up in a variety of ways, and there is a considerable sale for them.

There are figureheads, for instance. In the old time every ship of any pretensions had a figurehead. Owners of vessels vied in their efforts to secure fine designs, and the enterprising gentlemen who modeled the representations of fair maids, sea nymphs, of trim midshipmen or of admirals in uniform did a right pretty business. A simple sort of scroll work has taken the place of the dashing figures of the past.

Of course there are exceptions. The big English four master, the Falkland, has an excellently modeled representation of the Fair Maid of Perth above her entwater. The clipper ship Seminole has a Seminole brave in full war paint, and there are others. In the main, however, the old time figurehead has fallen into desuetude.

Just off South street, before a shop in which nautical instruments are sold, there is the figure of a sailor that has evidently seen many a many a storm. He looks as though he had been crimped and shanghaied times beyond number. Part of his nose is gone, some one has made a pot shot at one of his eyes, but there is a jaunty, wicked leer upon his face and an expression that says:

"Here's a salt as has sailed, an' be blowed to ye!"

EFFIGY OF GEN. BOLIVAR.

There are a couple of old figureheads to be seen on South street that have had very hard experiences on land as well as on sea. One of these is an effigy of Gen. Bolivar, and was the figurehead of the ship of that name.

Originally the effigy was so painted as to appear dressed in full naval uniform, cocked hat and all. At the time of the draft riots the rioters, having nothing else to do at one time, stood across the street and fired bullets at him. He received full many a wound that day, but he stands in his place still, stiff and erect.

Another figurehead fared even worse at the same hands. It was intended to represent Samuel Kimball, of Kennebec, Me.; but it left the sea some forty years ago. It was then placed where it now stands, to call attention to a store. The draft rioters had rare sport with it one day. They tied a rope around its neck, dragged it here and there in wild glee. Then they made it the central figure of a bonfire. Just as it was being consumed the police came down and rescued it. It was repainted, and today, impassive and dignified, it passes its time studying human nature as it is on South street.

But there are other curios to be found in this locality besides figureheads. There is one shop where more or less warlike articles can be found. There you can see ugly weapons taken from Chinese and Malay pirates; you can find queer looking weapons taken from natives on the African coast or the war clubs of the Patagonians—at least you will be told they are.—New York Mail and Express.

It is not alone the composition which determines the quality of a bell; very much depends upon its shape. Moreover, the proportions between its height, width and thickness are all to be taken into consideration. The dimensions, roughly stated, which are deemed to be the best for large bells, are one-fifteenth of the diameter in thickness and twelve times the thickness in height.

There are vacant public lands in the United States amounting to 586,216,861 acres, exclusive of the undesirable domains in Alaska, and not counting the Indian reservations, some of which are already falling into the general territory of the nation.

ART OF VENTRILLOQUISM.

ONE WHO CAN "THROW HIS VOICE" SAYS IT IS NOT A GIFT.

With Perseverance Any One Can Learn the Trick—There Are Three Divisions of What Is Generally Called Ventriloquism—A Few Practical Hints.

Ventriloquism is without doubt an ancient art, one which was and is at the present time surrounded by a halo of mystery. It is remarkable that in this advanced age so much doubt and misconception prevail respecting ventriloquism. This is due in a great measure to the fact that the happy possessors of the gift are inclined to retain the secrets for their own profit, and so prevent a host of competitors from taking the field.

Ventriloquism is not a gift; it depends in a great measure on the histrionic ability of the student as to whether he will succeed in making a mark or not, but it is nevertheless true that any one possessing a certain amount of perseverance and zeal can become to a certain extent an exponent of the fascinating art, causing their friends to wonder at the number of voices within them. Those so endowed are able, if they seize the opportunity, to cause considerable amusement or annoyance to their fellows, but not to the extent that a great many people believe.

The writer has been asked on numerous occasions to "throw" his voice to the side of a person some distance off, so that it would appear to proceed from his own pocket or some other equally absurd place.

Now as to the meaning of the word ventriloquism. It is derived from the Latin roots venter, the belly, and loqui, to speak; but belly speaking is certainly a misnomer, and leads many people to imagine that the voices are produced from that portion of the body. That is not so. The ventriloquial voice being formed purely and simply in the throat, the muscles of the stomach only being requisite to give sufficient strength or power to the voice. Ventriloquism may be classed under three heads: Ventriloquism proper, colloquism and polyphonia. Under the first of these heads comes the distant voice; that is, imitation of sounds as they appear when heard from a distance and in various places and directions. The "man-up-the-chimney, on-the-roof and down-the-cellar" illusions, which nearly every one has had an opportunity of hearing, are the outcomes of this voice. Again, there are the "street cries," in which the performer has a miniature drawing room window, and gives imitations of varied and humorous well known street cries, heard first a long way off; then gradually the man is heard coming nearer and nearer, passing the window, and going slowly away again in the distance. The window being made to open and close makes the illusion perfect.

Colloquism consists of the imitations of various human voices; for instance, it is usual for most ventriloquists to introduce comical, life size, talking automata, the heads of which are made of papier mache, the interiors being fitted with springs and cords, by the aid of which the performer controls the mouth, eyes, hair, etc., of his talking family—the mouths of which being made to move at the same time as the words are uttered by the performer, and, owing to the uncertainty of the direction from which sounds emanate, and which, by the way, is the true secret of all ventriloquial illusions, the voice really appears to proceed from the figures.

Polyphonia or mimicry is the imitation of cattle, sheep, sawing, planing, etc. This branch of ventriloquism is rather difficult to acquire, although there are numerous sounds that can be copied without any particular gift. A great many persons are excellent mimics without being ventriloquists, for in nearly every school can doubtless be found a youth who amuses his fellows in the playground corner with his crowing and cackling.

A few practical hints as to the modes of procedure to be followed by would be learners may not be out of place here, although half a dozen lessons from a good professional would do infinitely more for them than all the books that have ever been written upon the subject, and which, by the way, are usually a mass of theoretical phraseology. Before any attempt is made with the voice the student must be prepared to devote the same time and attention to the breath, which he must get entirely under control, so as to be able to hold it for a considerable time without straining. This, of course, must be a gradual process. Before commencing to practice a strong inspiration should be taken, as the lungs require to be furnished with a plentiful supply of fresh air, which has to be well controlled and allowed to escape gradually. He must endeavor to breathe through his nose and keep his mouth shut. This is a hint which it would be as well for every one to remember, and so save a great deal of cold catching and illness. The learner must study at all times to imitate sounds, not as they are heard at their source, but as they fall upon the ear after traveling from a distance. That is the golden rule of ventriloquism, and if it is continually kept in mind success is certain. As conjurers endeavor to deceive the eye, so ventriloquists try to deceive the ear.

The "distant voice" originates at that spot in the throat where the "click" takes place when drinking, so without any facial contortions or movement of the lips the words must be forced against the back part of the palate one by one, with a series of short, quick breaths, at the same time strengthening the sounds by using the muscles of the stomach, which will give them increased power, so that they will reach the audience clear and distinct. The farther off the sound is supposed to be the smaller the quantity of breath must be expired. The great fault with beginners is straining after effect. No sooner do they make a little headway and begin to feel their feet than they want to run, a proceeding which will bring their endeavors to a dismal failure.—Chambers' Journal.

Pretty Big Eels.

On Dutch Neck is Gross pond—said to be bottomless, but at the deepest place it is only fifty-six feet deep.

At its outlet one fine morning Christopher Waltzgrover discovered an enormous eel. He at first thought it a near relation of some of the snakes he often found in his boots. The creature was nearly out of water in a shallow spot. He attacked it with a club and the monster showed fight. After a tussle the eel was slain. It was 4½ feet long and dressed 9½ pounds. Mr. Waltzgrover had eel steaks for a long time. The skin hangs today in the office of A. R. Reed, the prominent ship builder. It has shrunk much, but is now eight inches wide. The head is more than half a foot long, and the eyeholes are an inch long.

The largest eel outside of that giant with which I have had a personal acquaintance was one taken from Adam's pond at Boothbay harbor weighing four and one-half pounds. When that pond was drained in order to fit it for a reservoir the bottom was alive with eels, and two enterprising young men skinned a barrel full and shipped them to Boston. They usually net from eight to ten cents a pound.—G. W. Singer in Lewiston Journal.

His Curiosity Was Too Strong.

A delightful story of the exhibition in an 8-year-old boy of weak human nature that fails sometimes to be equal to the strain put upon it comes from Brooklyn. This small boy has not the virtue of humility very prominently developed. Indeed, he is what is known among children of his own age as "proud," and went to remind such of his playmates as are less fortunate than he in worldly station of his advantages. Now his mother, who has a class in Sunday school, to which her little son also belongs, had given his outgrown overcoat to another boy in the class.

And then, knowing the failing of her offspring, before setting out she told him he must not tell the new owner that the coat had ever belonged to him. And the boy promised. But it was terribly hard work, especially as he sat next the object of his self restraint during the entire exercises. But he didn't say anything, and the mother's heart was easier. At last, however, just before school was over, his state of grace departed from him. Leaning over the other boy, with cautiously extended fingers, he said, "I just want to see if that hole is in that pocket yet."—New York Evening Sun.

The Best Way to Buy Bananas.

The banana, which is the greatest of all tropical fruits, comes to us chiefly from Panama and the West Indies in great shiploads, and in the banana market in New York the big green bunches—"heads" they call them in South America, just as we speak of heads of cabbage—containing from five to ten dozen each, can be bought for a dollar to two dollars and fifty cents, according to the variety. They are not so expensive after all, and a big green bunch hung in a cool cellar will ripen gradually, so as to furnish a dozen of ripe ones each day until the whole bunch is gone. In this way you can enjoy your bananas just as they do in the land of palms, for even there they eat them while they are green, and allow them to ripen as we do in the North.—Courtenay de Kalb in Harper's Young People.

Those Life Preservers.

"I often have a strong desire," said a ferryboat traveler, "to pick up one of those life preservers under the seats and hold it up by one of the strings, just to see if it wouldn't fall to pieces from its own weight. They look rotten, and I believe they are rotten. They never seem to change positions. The dust is always an inch thick on them, and so I assume that they are never examined. Fancy the despair of a man who seized one of them to assist him in saving his life, and when he tried to tie the straps around him found them falling apart like a worn out shoestring."—New York Tribune.

A Prophecy.

A Pittsburg student, while reading the book of the Vision of Nahum, the Elkashite, came across a passage that seemed to him to be a prophecy of the discovery of the use of electricity as a motive power in the electric railways of the present day. The passage is from Nahum ii, 4, and reads as follows: "The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall jostle one against another in the broadways; they shall seem like torches; they shall run like the lightnings."—Boston Transcript.

His Idea of Fame.

"Ambition is my life," said the enthusiastic youth as he sketched out a marvelous future for himself. "I intend to live only for success, power. But how best to achieve that? Shall I command arms, dictate to senates, or wield the mighty pen?"

"Do none of these things," said his father with the wisdom of years: "the secret is this: discover a new bacillus."—St. Joseph News.

A FOOLISH ACT.

Frank Smith of Lynn Discharges a Revolver at his Temple.

Frank Smith, of Lynn, a boy 16 years of age, accidentally shot himself through the head with a 32 calibre revolver Sunday evening. He took a young friend to his room who saw the revolver lying on a table. Smith took the weapon to show it to his companion. It was loaded and cocked. He flourished it about several times, finally putting the muzzle to his head and pulled the trigger. The contents was discharged into his head. He fell to the floor bleeding. At first his friend thought he was fooling with blank cartridges, but presently he perceived the situation and gave the alarm. Dr. Donovan was summoned who found the unfortunate lad bleeding and vomiting. All attempts to locate the bullet failed. He was taken to the hospital and several doctors summoned but still the ball could not be found. He probably will not recover.

Under the new arrangement of the Naumkeag Road $250,000 worth of stock is owned by seven individuals, the smallest proportion of stockholders to capital of any road in the state. Its funded debt is $475,500, and the unfunded debt is $183,333.05, a total of $658,833.05. This indebtedness is reduced to $586,756, because of the $72,576.89 cash and cash assets. The total cost of road, equipments, land and buildings was $846,761.27, a net addition of over $83,000 during the year. The road collected $228,503 from passengers and about $3000 from other sources. It paid out about $20,000 for repairs of road bed, equipments and buildings, bought $6757 worth of new horses, paid salaries in general office to the amount of $5770, paid $87,392 in wages and $33,541 for provender for horses. Its taxes, rents and insurance, together with $5269 paid out for injuries to person or property, swelled the total expenses to $176,677, which was 76 per cent. of the gross earnings. Out of the 24 per cent. net income ($55,114) it paid $30,926 for interest, $15,000 for dividends (6 per cent. on $250,000) and carried ahead to the new year, as a balance, $9187, which with the $817 surplus last year made a surplus of a trifle rising $10,000, Sept. 30, 1890, when the fiscal year so far as the commissioners' report ends.

In the number of cars and horses, only two roads, the West End and Lynn & Boston, overreach the Naumkeag, which has 110 cars and 404 horses. The Lynn road has double the amount, and the West End about twenty times as many. Worcester, Somerville and Taunton come next, in the order named. In length of road the West End has 217 miles, Lynn 50, Naumkeag 33. Black Rocks & Salisbury Beach 21. Springfield 20, Worcester Consolidated 19, Framingham Union 16, Newburyport & Amesbury 15, and so on down the list. The Naumkeag ran 630,176 miles, making over 130,000 round trips, and carried 4,475,950 passengers. There are 170 persons employed on the road. In the number of cars and horses miles of track as well as in mileage and in passengers carried the Naumkeag numbers 3rd, being outdone only by the West End and Lynn & Boston. The West End carried one hundred and fifteen million passengers, and the Lynn road eleven million. The Naumkeag made a clear profit of one cent and twenty-three one hundredths on every passenger carried, which was about the average of the state.

The $50,000 stock of this road is divided among 25 stockholders. The net debt at the time of the report was $25,259. The road was not operated during the year, so no further figures are given.

Thirty-seven men hold the $12,000 capital of the Beverly & Danvers road. Its net debt is $10,599.47, all unfunded. The cost of the road was $20,015, but the figures of the equipment are not given, because the Union Electric Car company did that under contract, and has made no return of it. The building and cash assets bring the total property of the road up to $23,827.77. The number of passengers carried, income therefrom and expenses, with the average cost per mile and per passenger, in fact, all the data necessary for a comparison with other railways—are missing from the report, because the road is operated by the Union company, under contract, and the laws evidently do not cover such contingencies, hence no return is made to the board. This is a very disappointing feature of the report, as it gives no chance for a comparison which just now would be very interesting. With no data at hand, the ordinary observer can take his choice between two conclusions, viz: Either the profits to the operating company are so large that it hesitates to tell them for fear some one will build a parallel line and tap its territory, or else the expense of the operating was so great that the company is averse to putting it on record. In justice to the believers in a storage battery system some return should be made the board by the operating company.—Salem Evening News.

The final installment of one million pounds in gold, borrowed in bullion, of the Bank of France during the recent Baring-Argentine financial difficulty, has been returned. All of the loan was returned in the identical metal borrowed as there proved to be no necessity for using any of the loan.

A dispatch from Madrid says 19 conservative senators have been elected.

A messenger from the London branch of the Bank of Scotland entered the National Provincial Bank in that metropolis Monday, depositing upon the counter a leather bag containing £11,590, in Bank of England notes. A stylish looking gentleman asked the messenger a few questions which were answered, and while the conversation was going on, which was a matter of a moment, an accomplice snatched the satchel and ran out of the Bank. Descriptions of both men have been furnished the police, but capture is thought to be hardly possible.

ALEXANDER HARRISON.

Alexander Harrison, one of the most distinguished of American painters, is of New England stock, belonging to the Connecticut branch of the family, but was born in Philadelphia January 17, 1853. He began the study of art while in the U. S. Coast Survey Service, working from time to time, as his regular duties permitted, in the studio of George Pettit of Philadelphia. He then studied at the San Francisco School of Design and in 1879 went to Paris, where he became a pupil of the celebrated Gerome, exhibiting for the first time in 1880. In 1882 he sent to the Salon his well known picture "Castles in Spain," which at once established his reputation. At the Universal exhibition in 1889, Mr. Harrison was represented in the American section by a number of his most important works and was awarded a medal of the first class by the jury, receiving from the French government the decoration of the Legion of Honor. He came to New York last summer and spent some months painting landscape and seashore motives from Newport. At the recent exhibition of his work in New York, there was nothing more characteristic of his methods in painting than some studies of the effect of out-door light on nude figures. Mr. Harrison is chiefly a great colorist. Among his fellow-artists, both in France and America, his talent is fully recognized, and his diligent study of nature and earnest search for truth, so apparent in his works, are generally commended. The individuality of his art is one of its chief merits; he is so highly appreciated by lovers of good pictures, that he may be considered as one of the most successful of American artists.

Mussey

SALEM, Jan. 1, 1891.

One year ago we issued our last club check; we then decided it was hardly a straightforward way of doing business to charge one class of customers five dollars per dozen for pictures and another class but little more than half as much for the same thing. Instead of adopting the motto of most photographers, viz., anything is good enough for club work—we have made our club work equal to our best.

We believed it was a good business principle to charge all our customers the same price for the same thing, and by adopting this course and charging for our work what we believed it was worth and trying to make it worth as much as any, we should gain their respect and good will.

Our business the past year, having been much the most satisfactory of any year in Salem, proves that our judgment was not at fault. We are so well satisfied with the course we took that we shall pursue the same during '91 and shall not cater to that class who are satisfied with anything if it is cheap.

The demands upon our time in the way of large portraiture, particularly freehand drawings—have the past year been so great that we have decided to introduce colored pastel portraits, and we had made by Mr. E. L. Hanlon of Boston, than whom there is no more skillful artist in his specialty in America, a complete line of samples of those very beautiful pictures.

Remember that no better work than this can be produced in this country, and the price is but little more than is charged for the ordinary grades. Call and see these pictures if you are interested in fine portraiture. W. G. HUSSEY, 292 Essex St., Salem.

Death of Samuel L. Ham.

Samuel L. Ham, for many years a resident of Peabody, died at his home on Main Street, Sunday evening at 9 o'clock, after an illness of several weeks. The cause of his decease was Bright's Disease. Deceased was born at Hampton Falls, N. H., August 6, 1825, and when a child, came to live in South Danvers with his father, who for many years conducted the old hotel on the Square, which at that time was known as "Ham's Tavern." When a young man he engaged in the woolen business, being employed by a Boston firm, and later carried on the business on his own account, removing after some years to New York City, and was associated with the house of Fred Butterfield & Co., one of the largest wholesale and importing firms in the country, in that line, with which establishment he remained for nearly twenty years. After severing his connection with the New York house, he returned to Peabody and has since resided here, in the old homestead of his father on Main Street. For several years past he has been in the habit of going to Boston every day. In fact he spent most of his time outside of Peabody, his social connections being almost entirely out of town. He was an interested member of several clubs, having been for more than 30 years connected with the Union League Club. He was also connected with several Boston social clubs.

Last September Mr. Ham's wife died after a long term of invalidism, and about a month ago his faithful coachman met with a fatal accident in Salem, and thus the household establishment is completely broken up.

The funeral services took place on Wednesday afternoon.

Reunion of Veterans.

Company D., first Heavy Artillery, which was made up very largely of South Danvers boys, and saw a good deal of fighting during the dark days of the Rebellion, held its annual reunion at Danvers Hotel on Monday. It has been the custom of the company for several years to hold reunions on Washington's birth-day, generally meeting at some hotel in this vicinity. Laundlord Southwick gave them a nice, enjoyable spread, at which thirty-four "vets" were seated. After satiating the palate, considerable time was spent in short speeches by the members. Thos. J. Putnam, formerly of this town, who for some years has been in the Congressional Library at Washington, was present with his old comrades, for the first time in several years, and gave a short talk on "Washington as it is." Frank E. Farnham Esq., read a historical sketch of the company, covering the first year, and short as the time was, embraced by the article, it made quite a lengthy budget. At the conclusion of the ceremonies, it was voted to hold a joint reunion next year, with company "G" of Marblehead which is closely connected by ties of friendship formed during the service.

A Mean Trick.

On Monday evening as the electric car on the Essex Electric road was making the 7.15 trip to Salem, she had proceeded as far as the turn-out on Balcon street, and when the up car passed, the signal was given to go ahead. The motorer turned the rheostat way round, but the car did not budge. Several attempts were made but to no effect. The reversing switch was applied and worked all right; but the forward motion was impossible. Fortunately a horse car followed directly behind which took the switch and passing the electric bore away her freight, all condemning electric cars. The experts were sent for. They examined the mechanism, and found that some vandal upon the rear platform had opened the main switch, so that no current could pass through the motor to send it ahead.

It was a dastardly performance and if the scoundrel is detected, he will be dealt with severely.

Extracts from Auditor's Report.

The Auditors' Report shows the following receipts for last year; water rates $22,684.01; Taxes $122,925.23; rent of town hall $1,209.02; fees $530.58; liquor licenses, $11,904; notes, $83,575; Poor Department $4662.26; county treasurer, $1102.64; state treasurer, $12,683.34; highway department, $1750.53; interest on deposits $186.02; watering street $400; miscellaneous $328.39; total, $284,483.90. The expenditures amount to $256,371.31 leaving $28,112.59 on hand.

President Cleveland and his young wife are happy in the present, and look forward cheerfully to the future. Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup is excellent for infants and adults.

Sunday Services.

Rev. A. F. Walsh will deliver a lecture Sunday evening at the Universalist church at 7 o'clock, upon George Peabody.

The regular forenoon services will be held at the Universalist church to-morrow by the pastor, followed by Sabbath School.

Francis H. Appleton, Esq., of this town, has been appointed by the Governor, a member of the Gypsy Moth Commission.

At the Unitarian Church tomorrow evening there will be a Musical service, followed by an address by President Baldwin of the Young Men's Christian Union of Boston. President Baldwin's address to young men in Boston, have for many years attracted attention by their practical helpfulness and good sense. As he will have the needs of young men in view in his remarks Sunday evening, they are especially invited to hear him.

LOCAL LINES.

Emerald Court of Forrester's will hold a grand ball Easter Monday night.

About $1600 was sold by the co-operative bank last Saturday at 5 to 10 cents premium.

We have been pleased to see Frank T. Arnold on the street again this week, after his long illness.

Miss Caroline Betsch, of College Hill, is spending a few days in town with her cousin, Mrs. A. F. Walsh.

John P. Fernald left for New York last Wednesday morning, for a short trip of pleasure and business.

William Sullivan 21, of this town will serve as juror at the March civil sitting of the Superior Court at Lawrence.

Post 50, G. A. R. will present the war drama, "Neuborn," with a new cast, at Town Hall, March 18th. and 19th.

Friday March 7, will be observed by the W. C. T. U. as a day of prayer, commencing at 10 o'clock, in Franklin Hall.

Jordan Lodge, F. & A. M., will visit Amity Lodge of Danvers, next Thursday evening, to see the working of the third degree.

It looked like a revival of tanning business to see a gentleman going about the town this week to find parties to work in a large lot of leather.

Washington's birth-day was quietly observed in town on Monday. Several of the factories and some of the stores were closed, but the observance was not, by any means, general.

Ed S. Little who purchased an interest in the Reporter about a month ago, has withdrawn from that concern and connected himself with the Salem Call, where he will hold the position of City reporter.

At the meeting of the Baptist church society on Tuesday evening, it was voted unanimously, after careful consideration, to give a call to Rev. W. J. Reynolds of Newton Centre, to fill their pulpit.

The second grand assembly of the Somerset Club will be held in Town Hall on Monday evening, April 13th. Brigham's Orchestra of Marlboro' will furnish the music. Like their first, it will be a thoroughly enjoyable party.

Why invest your money in the West and South in uncertain securities when such opportunities are offered for home investment as will be found by consulting the advt. of the Atkinson House Furnishing Co. See advt.

The C. Warren Osborne shop on Railroad avenue will be enlarged, by joining the old Jackson shop to it. New boilers will be set and the place will be occupied by John S. Crehore.

The Selectmen, last Saturday, acting upon the last phantom of the petition of the Peabody Electric Light and Power company, voted leave to withdraw. Probably when that somnolent corporation awakes and draws itself together, it will very gladly withdraw from the barren field.

A number of fowls have been stricken with death in the vicinity of the Endicott schoolhouse, from eating chloride of sodium. The loss of poultry life might have been prevented, if the owners had regularly, once a week, more or less, fed a little salt to the flock by mixing a small quantity in the meal dough.

The Murray Association entertained the Emerson Club of Salem, on Monday evening. President Fred Dodge, acting as master of ceremonies, made a short address of welcome and an hour of social intercourse followed, after which, an entertainment, consisting of the pantomime, "Cupid in the Kitchen" and vocal music. The reception closed with a collation.

Thomas H. Cummings will deliver a lecture in Town Hall under the auspices of Library and Lyceum Society Sunday evening, March 8th, subject—"Passion Play." It is an interesting subject and is likely to be well attended. Being a religious theme, Sunday evening seems to be a very appropriate time for the delivery of this lecture, notwithstanding an admission fee is charged.

The co-operative temperance committee are still pushing their labors to secure a NO LICENSE vote. Every voter who is not in favor of rum, should turn out at Town Meeting, and mark his cross against the word NO. The committee has issued an interesting circular containing many interesting facts and bearing a sample of the license question portion of the ballot, marked as it should be to defeat license.

The following names are being talked up for various town offices: Horace Bushby, Abram Lummus, Alexander B. Merrill, Caleb F. Stillaber, and Levi Preston and the present incumbents, for selectmen; P. H. O'Connor, Frank C. Merrill, Amos Merrill, George M. Foster and H. F. Walker for school committee; George H. Poor, G. Fred Osgood, Rufus H. Brown, George F. Sanger and H. P. Reed for Trustees of Peabody Institute; George H. Little, Andrew N. Jacobs, Stephen Mills, and others, including the present incumbents, for the Water Board.

CITIZENS' CAUCUS.

In accordance with the call previously issued, the Citizens' Caucus was called to order last evening in Town Hall, at 7.30 o'clock, by S. S. Littlefield. Richard J. Barry was chosen chairman and Michael Ray was chosen secretary. The hall was packed, but proceedings were very harmonious.

The chairman stated the first business, in order was the nomination of a board of selectmen, and the old board was unanimously nominated—viz: Charles H. Goulding, Nathan H. Poor, Philip H. Coleman, William S. Osborne and Warren A. Galeucia.

The caucus next proceeded to the nomination of assessors and Cyrus T. Batchelder, Thomas J. Relihan, Caleb F. Stillaber, John E. Herriek and Levi Preston were nominated; being the old board, with the single substitution of Levi Preston for Samuel Trask.

Nathan H. Poor was then nominated for the offices of Town Clerk and Town Treasurer, and Lyman Osborne was nominated for Collector of Taxes.

The old board of overseers of the Poor were then nominated, viz: Warren Trask, James P. King and James Fallon.

The chairman then stated that at the recent special town meeting, it was voted to elect but three constables, and proceeded to read the list elected last year, for guidance of the caucus. A gentleman arose and asked—"Are we all out-laws, that we need so many constables?" (applause and laughter) Thos. W. Peasley, Timothy D. Crowley and John J. Sweeney were then nominated.

G. Fred Osgood was re-nominated for Town Auditor.

The Water Board was then taken up, and after several motions to substitute various names, which were all lost, Stephen Mills, D. S. Littlefield and N. M. Quint were nominated. Mr. Mills is a new candidate in place of J. E. T. Bartlett.

The following gentlemen were nominated for School Committee: P. H. O'Connor, Dr. H. K. Foster and Charles H. Goulding. The name of S. C. Bancroft was twice offered by way of substitution, but Mr. G. O. Pierce stated that he was in too feeble health to take the office, and his statement seemed to influence the action of the caucus in dropping him from the list although the vote was pretty close.

The first two nominees are for three year terms and the third for the unexpired term of one year.

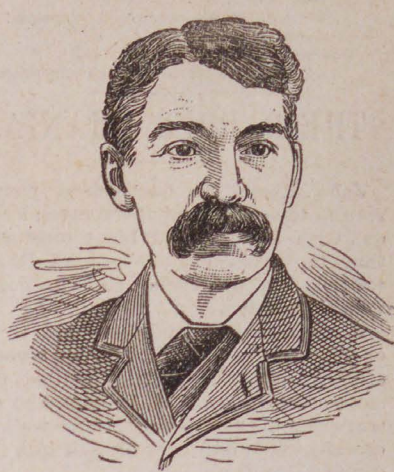

Dr. John J. Shanahan and Rufus H. Brown were nominated for Trustees of Peabody Institute.

For the Trustees of Cedar Grove Cemetery, Lewis Peabody and Walter Curtis were nominated for 6 years; W. W. Reed and Sidney C. Bancroft for 4 years; and John Linehan and Thomas J. Relihan for 2 years.

For Trustees of Oak Grove Cemetery, James P. King and D. G. Upton were nominated for 6 years; John E. Herriek and Willard Spaulding for 4 years; and William E. Sheen and T. C. Durkee for 2 years.

For Commissioner of the Sinking Fund, 3 years, George J. Winchester was nominated.

For Commissioner of High Service Sinking Fund for 3 years, Alexander

GEORGE W. BOULTER.

Read This, Ye Sceptics!

GEO. W. BOULTER, of Belfast, Me., for three years a member of the city government, and also member of Thos. H. Marshall Post, No. 42, G. A. R., is well and favorably known as a thoroughly reliable man. He says under date of March 24, 1890:—

"For some years I have been afflicted with Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Muscular Rheumatism and Lameness across Kidneys. Added to all this, I was, for two years, daily attacked with a deadly sickness at pit of stomach, followed by a copious flow of water from my mouth; then I would vomit, which would relieve me for the time, only to be repeated the next day. I commenced taking DANA'S SARSAPARILLA, and before I had taken one bottle the deadly sickness departed; and for over four months I have not had the slightest symptom of a return. My stomach feels as well as ever in my life. My Biliousness is all gone, and my bowels are regular. My Dyspepsia is a thing of the past, and I can eat any kind of food and digest it."

My wife has also taken DANA'S SARSAPARILLA for Biliousness and Neuralgia, and has been helped by it more than by any other medicine she ever took. I consider it a wonderful remedy."

It does what we claim or costs you nothing. Could we make you a fairer offer? Try a bottle now.

Dana Sarsaparilla Co., Belfast, Me.

B. Merrill.

For Moderator of the town meeting C. H. Goulding was the nominee.

The Citizens' Committee for the ensuing year was elected, as follows: Stephen Mills, Michael J. P. Lucy, Richard J. Cullen, Ulrick Brophy, Richard J. Barry, Harry F. Walker and D. P. McCarthy.

The nomination for school committee was made, the interest seemed to flag, and most of the votes left the hall. The caucus was the fairest and most harmonious of any for several years and the adjournment was reached at 9.30 o'clock. Last year it was midnight before the business was finished.

A lively runaway occurred on the Square yesterday. No damage ensued.

The leading question of the house is: Have you examined the stock of boots, shoes and rubbers at Keefe's, No. 6 Caller street.

The new house on Gardner street, built by Isaac A. Drown for Walter B. Kimball, is now completed and the owner has moved in.

There were 228 birth in town last year, 117 male and 111 female, being a loss of 15 from the previous year when the total reached 243.

Almira Cummings, wife of Edward S. Cummings, and daughter of Mary and the late Cyrus Thompson, died in New York City, Feb. 23, at the age of 50 years.

All the grades and prices of gentlemen's pants, coats, suitings, and fancy vest patterns at Distin's, the Tailor, 18 Main Street.

Edward P. Barnett and Lyman P. Osborn have formed a co-partnership and will engage in the business of smelting and refining metals, in Boston. We wish them success.

Be sure you are right, then go ahead! call and select, before the rush begins, and buy your boots, shoes and rubbers at Keefe's, No. 6 Caller street.

Do you have much trouble with your boys wearing out shoes fast? Stop it at once by buying a pair of our Cameo Button or Bal at $1.25 per pair; (warranted.) Keefe's, No. 6 Caller street.

The town warrant contains 28 articles. It will be posted today. Most of the articles relate to the regular business that comes up every year. An appropriation for extending Walnut street; for extending water mains on Lynnfield street to the Alms House; for a telemeter to inform the engineer at the pumping station how much water is in the standpipe; for continuation of Oakland and widening Lynnfield streets, and $500 for trimming trees are asked for.

Rubber Shoes unless worn uncomfortably tight, generally slip off the feet.

THE "COLCHESTER" RUBBER CO.

make all their shoes with inside of heel lined with rubber. This gives to the shoe and prevents the rubber from slipping off.

IMPORTANT IN SPRING.

Advice what People Should Take During The Spring Months—A Remedy Certain To Produce Beneficial Results.

In the Spring everybody begins to think of taking a spring medicine. Not only is this a very common practice, but a very necessary and healthful one. It is a fact which physicians acknowledge and the people recognize generally, that a spring tonic taken during the months of March, April and May is more conducive to the restoration of health in cases of those who are sick than any other course of treatment that could possibly be adopted.

It is further understood by everybody that even for those who call themselves well, it is very important at this season of the year, if they would maintain good health and vigor, to take a spring remedy to strengthen and invigorate the nerves, tone up the action of all the organs, and thus, by creating a healthy condition of the nerves, blood, stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels, assist Nature in the efforts she always makes in the spring to cleanse, purify and invigorate the system.

In the Spring there are great and important changes going on in the body. Perfect health cannot be maintained when the system is clogged and the organs sluggish, and the person has a languid and weakened feeling, with more or less nervousness and debility. If the person has previously been sick these symptoms will be much aggravated; there will be a weak, tired and nervous condition, with sleepless and restless nights, a tired waking in the morning, no appetite for breakfast, a bad taste in the mouth, dull head and general dispirited feelings. In severe cases there will be a feeling of great exhaustion and prostration and the nervousness will be very marked, with no inclination for exertion, the work of the day being done with an effort.

For such cases as these be sure and use that remarkable invigorator and tonic, Dr. Greene's Nervura, the great nerve, brain and blood invigorant. It is pronounced by everybody, doctors as well as the people, to be the best Spring medicine in existence, and has taken rank as the greatest and most important medical discovery of modern times. Under the use of this wonderful remedy that weak, tired and nervous feeling disappears; the nerves become strong and steady, the nights are restful and the sleep natural and refreshing; the appetite returns, good digestion and regular action of the bowels are established, the kidneys and liver are restored to healthy action, and the vital energies, strength and vigor of the system perfectly built up.

This truly remarkable Spring remedy, which is purely vegetable and harmless, is for sale by all druggists at $1.00 per bottle, and if any one desires to be perfectly and permanently cured of those disagreeable feelings, weakness and exhaustion incident to Spring, take our urgent recommendation and get a bottle of this medicine. It will well repay you, as we can testify from our own experience of its marvellous curative powers, and you have our assurance that you will not be disappointed. Be sure and ask for Dr. Greene's Nervura as druggists sometimes recommend their own preparation or something on which they make a greater profit. Do not be persuaded to take any other remedy in place of this, as we really believe that this is the greatest and best of all Spring medicines.

Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., its discoverer, is the famous specialist in the cure of nervous and chronic diseases. The doctor has devoted special attention to the treatment of all forms of chronic diseases through letter correspondence, and will give by mail his opinion and advice in any case, free of charge. The perfection of this system renders a complete cure almost assured as his success in treatment by correspondence is wonderful and unequalled.

Send for symptom blank N. B. To fill out, or write Dr. Greene about your case, and a carefully considered letter, fully explaining your disease and giving you a perfect understanding of all its symptoms will be returned free of charge.

I recently visited a certain part of this world where it seemed as though every other man and about half of the women whom I met were the authors of books, and not a few of them entertained the notion that I must have read or heard of their volumes of poetry or theology or romance or criticism or legistics or piety or science. I was often embarrassed by the question of new acquaintances, "Have you read my book?" and I always felt indisposed to give offence by repeating Carlyle's reply to the inquiry, "No; it is a big book?"

On one occasion, however, when a professor in the university asked me the familiar question, I betought me of a way of relieving myself from embarrassment by abruptly, yet I hope courteously, asking, "Have you read my book?" The professor, who had not heard of my brochure, though it appeared in print ten years ago, was put in as bad a plight as he had previously put me in, and his mortification over his ignorance was even more grievous than mine. The quiddity served me ever afterward when I met an inquiring author.—John Swinton.

It is probable that Judge Boorman will be impeached by Congress. This will be the eighth impeachment trial in the history of the United States Congress. It is fifteen years since the last trial, which was that of W. H. Belknap.

A bill has been referred by the United States Senate, to the committee on railroads, providing for proceedings of condemnation against the Union and Central Pacific railroads, and providing for the issuance of treasury notes to the amount of $280,000,000 for the purpose of paying off the subsidy, mortgage, interest and income bonds, floating indebtedness and the assessed valuation of stations, and providing that when these have been paid, the roads and all their property except grants of land, shall be leased out to the United States and shall be leased out for terms of fifty years.

Dinner at a Station in New Mexico.

One of the famous eating-houses of the Atchison road is situated at Wallace, where the train going south stops late in the afternoon. As the cars draw up at the station the long platform is thronged with the people of the country of diverse races. Rough miners in flannel and heavy boots stand watching the train, cow-boys set off by sombreros and spurs swagger about the platform, and Spanish-Americans with swarthy faces and gleaming eyes lounge against the railings, looking impassively on the scene. Most picturesque of all there gathered are the descendants of the tribes akin to the Toltecs and Aztecs, those migrating people whose first home was in the Northwest, before they went South to colonize the valleys of the Mexican plateau—the Pueblo Indians from Santo Domingo and San Felipe. They are quietly clad in their characteristic garb of leggings and tunic with a blanket dress for the women, and sometimes for the men a gaudy blanket wrapped about the body. Some are awaiting the train on the station platform, and others, belated, are seen running toward the cars, bearing on their heads and backs the things they have to trade. They exhibit a great variety of pottery, in the shape of vessels of divers sizes, form, and patterns of decoration, and many earthen idols of infinite ugliness. They offer for sale pieces of what the New-Mexican curiosity dealer calls a "topaz," which in reality is obsidian or volcanic glass, the material used by the ancient Aztecs for cutting purposes, from swords down to razors.

About the train is a characteristic collection of passengers. There are tourists, European and American commercial travellers, young men from the East going to the South-west to try their fortunes, and perhaps in the rear cars some families of emigrants. Representing the Territory are merchants, miners, and cattlemen of American and Spanish-American descent, while opposite the blonde Eastern lady, in her dainty travelling habit, may sit a dark-eyed olive-tinted beauty with the blood of Aragon or Castile in her veins, and perhaps a darker and not unbecoming tinge from Indian ancestry. Travelling theatrical companies, army officers and private soldiers on leave or on duty, and Indian delegations going on or returning from a visit to the "Great Father" at Washington, are current types in a Southwest passenger train. Almost without exception the passengers are affable and disposed to conversation. Stiffness and reserve among fellow-passengers by stage or by rail vanish west of the hundredth meridian.

NOMINATION PAPERS for candidates for town officers must be filed by Monday night.

THE NEWS says in its issue of Thursday, "The winter's back is broken." It would appear that some snow escaped through the breach.

NEW HAMPSHIRE'S capitol has been the scene of turbulent debate this week, over the charges published in Senator Chandler's paper, concerning Senator-elect Gallinger and his coadjutors. The Doctor made a lengthy reply to the charges, and other members of the legislature vented their feelings freely.

LORD SALISBURY has sent a reply to Secretary Blaine's last communication in which he is said to favor arbitration upon the Behring's Sea question, as suggested by Secretary Blaine. It is thought that Lord Salisbury is looking forward to an international convention of Great Britain, Russia and the United States, to settle the whole question of seal fishery in the North Pacific, and the adoption of measures to prevent the extermination of the seal, which at present seems inevitable unless some of the kind is effected.

A LOCAL political movement, that has been somewhat talked of lately, seems to us a particularly ill-advised one and we hope and believe that it will not advance beyond the stage of discussion. We allude to a plan, said to have originated with a secret society of dropping every Roman Catholic from the entire ticket of town officers. Now we do not propose here to discuss at length the whole franchise question. It is doubtless true that our early statesmen made a serious mistake in making the time necessary to acquire the right of franchise so short as it is. The term was, at one time, fourteen years, and from the character of much of the late immigration, it is obvious that even this term is not long enough to Americanize the horde that annually lands at Castle Garden. All the other benefits of our great and prosperous country may lie open to the world, but the important, the vital right to govern should be reserved for those who are truly and thoroughly American. There should be, in the mind of him who asks for the great privilege of assisting in the government of this country, no looking backward to his native land as indicated by the words "British American," "Irish American," etc. It is not enough to have a sufficient degree of intelligence and education to become a voter. There must be complete forsaking of allegiance, not only to "foreign potentates," as the naturalization oath has it, but of all foreign habits of thought and ways of action in regard to the body politic, and it is probable that a life time would not be long enough for this purpose, with a large per cent of our immigrants, so that the only rule to surely guard our nation from the perils of a vitiated and vicious system of franchise, is that of native birth, concerning which standard there could be no doubt or evasion. But the political tendency of the whole country is, and for a generation has been, entirely the other way. All modern legislation on the franchise question has been in the direction of making voting easier and more general, and any movement to bring the franchise within proper and salutary restrictions would inevitably be defeated as a whole. Moreover, what is decisive of this question is the fact that those who have once received this right can never be deprived of it or abridged in the exercise of it. Being complete citizens, they are entitled to all the privileges of citizenship and it is as unjust as it is impolitic to attempt to form political combinations for that purpose. More especially is it impolitic in a town like Peabody, where the foreign born element of the population is increasing so much faster than the native, that any political proscription of race or religion will return to plague its inventors at no distant day. Therefore we trust we shall hear no more of this petty and absurd movement, but, as in times past, will see a fair distribution of the nominations for the School Committee, Selectmen and other offices to be filled at the coming town election. We believe that the mass of our voters of all parties will make fitness alone the test in giving preference at the polls.

THE REPORT of Chairman Goulding for the year just closed makes a good financial showing. Although an expense of $12,000 has been incurred during the past year, in the erection of the new school house in rear of Warren street, a net decrease of the town debt has been effected of $16,920.60, while the year before, the decrease of debt was but $21,917.62, and no such additions had been made during that period, to the previous liabilities of the town.

The report therefore shows on the whole, a more economical management of town affairs for 1890 than 1889.

The document recommends that the debt shall not be reduced more rapidly than has been done the past year, as to do so would result in direct burden in tax rates.

It is suggested that the maturity of the Water Bonds is sufficiently remote (1911), to enable these obligations to be met comfortably, with the aid of the receipts of the Water Works which will largely swell the High Service Sinking Fund.

Adopting the suggestion of the Commissioners of the General Sinking Fund the Selectmen have deemed it expedient to insert in the Warrant, an article relative to the abolition of that fund, which consists of 24 overdue town notes upon which the town has been paying interest to the fund, and one Town House Bond. The debt covered by this fund matures from 1891 to 1904, in small installments, so, it is suggested, with a few short loans, they can all be provided for by the Treasurer, with an annual appropriation of $10,000, and by this plan, the yearly payments of interest can be reduced from $4000 to $5000, and the debt will be extinguished as it matures.

Recent changes of the statutes render the obligation to continue this complicated device, unnecessary, and it is highly desirable that it be abolished, as thus much trouble and some unnecessary expenses can be avoided.

The Report shows that but one lawsuit is pending, that of Low vs. The town and it is thought quite possible that this may be settled, if not tried during the coming year.

A plea is made in favor of macadamized roads, and a suggestion offered that a committee should be appointed to investigate the subject of purchasing a stone crusher, and that they report as soon as convenient.

As the PRESS has suggested before, a great saving can be made in the highway department by using a stone crusher, but of course, a large first-cost will have to be met, and we presume there may be some short-sighted individuals who may oppose the plan solely on account of the original outlay involved.

Mr. Goulding's report recognizes the advantage that resulted from the abolition of the Highway Wards, and, placing the whole system of highways under charge of Mr. Besse, as Superintendent of Streets.

Mr. Besse, so the report says, has been instructed to expend the appropriations where most needed, but separate accounts have been kept with the different districts.

Regarding sidewalks, the report says about $650, has been expended under the special appropriations, near the public buildings. About $1500, has been expended in improving the school yards, in accordance with the vote appropriating money for that purpose. It is suggested that the unexpended balance of this appropriation could have been used to good advantage, had not the season prevented.

The need of more street crossings is mentioned. It is suggested that as concrete is not sufficiently durable and stone is very expensive, involving a large expenditure, it should be considered by the town as a separate appropriation.

ONE WEEK from Monday is town meeting day, and the voters of Peabody will have an opportunity to express their approval or displeasure of the course pursued by the various town officials, by means of the Australian ballot, unless they make some mistake in the use of that ingenious device.

There may be people who have some petty spite to vent, or some sore spot caused by the frustration of their pet schemes who think by decapitating this or that candidate, they will heal their worse places, but we believe the large majority of the town are pretty well satisfied with the rosters of town officers as it stands today.

Take for instance the Selectmen's Boards. The present incumbents have labored together harmoniously, for three or four years, and during their term of service have managed the affairs of the people with prudence, judgment and a conscientious regard for the wishes of the citizens, so far as the same could be ascertained. Other men might have done just as well and perhaps to the minds of some of the people, better, in some particulars, but that is no reason for a change. The only way to gauge the standard of an official board, is by averaging up the entire work for a given period of time.

We cannot expect to find perfect men, in perfect harmony with the views of every individual voter or citizen. If on the whole, a body of officers has substantially satisfied the desires of a majority of the people, it is the duty of those who believe in the American doctrine of "government of the people by the people," to stand by such a board and support them with his ballot. In recent conversation with one of the oldest officials that Peabody has been pleased to honor with her suffrages for many consecutive years, that gentleman spoke in terms of praise of the members of the board of selectmen, and regarding Chairman Goulding, he said—"It is difficult to find a man who has the knowledge of the duties imposed upon the chairman of the board and the willingness to attend to those duties promptly and faithfully, as Mr. Goulding has done." He thought it would be difficult to fill his place. A great many details have to be attended to, that require much valuable time, and few men have the time and inclination to attend to those duties. Mr. Goulding has been re-elected year after year, in spite of opposition from certain quarters, arising on the one hand from malice and on the other from a failure to grasp the situation, with always increased majorities, and he can well afford to lay down the month of his office and give so one else a chance to take it up. We have no doubt he would be glad to do so; but what we as citizens of the town, having his best interests at heart, have to consider is—can the town afford to allow him to indulge this inclination. We think not. We believe in the interest of economy and good government it is a duty we owe ourselves to again re-elect him. And as to the other members of the board Mr. Poor is an old and faithful servant. He has had many years of experience in the various positions of trust to which he has been for many years, elected. He "knows the ropes" and his influence upon the board has ever had a wholesome effect infusing moderation into the judgement of his associates. Messrs. Osborne, Coleman and Galeucia are all faithful, trusty servants, and it seems to us, this town can do no better than to re-elect all of these gentlemen to the positions they occupy.

In the School Department, some changes must be made. Rev. George A. Hall has resigned, and S. C. Bancroft Esq., whose term expires this year, is not sufficiently robust to again undertake the duties of his office. In making a choice to fill these vacancies the town has several candidates to select from. The name of Harry P. Walker has been mentioned for one vacancy. He would make an excellent member of the Board if he could be induced to take the office but his other affairs take a great deal of his time, and it is doubtful if he will allow his name to be used. Amos Merrill is another name we have heard mentioned. Mr. Merrill has been a member of the Board in past years, and served the town faithfully, as he has in other positions. If elected this spring, he would doubtless give a good account of his stewardship at the close of his term. There has been too, some talk for a long time of electing a lady upon the board, which has been regarded with warm favor by some, but the town does not seem altogether prepared to make such an innovation at present, in the established customs and it is doubtful if a lady will hold a place on the school committee for several years.

P. H. O'Connor is the other gentleman whose term expires this year, and if we may be permitted to name a successor for his place, we shall name the present incumbent. His experience, education and moral turpitude all combine to make him a desirable member of the committee and we trust he will be returned to the board.

A Great Physician's Offer.

If you are suffering from any form of lingering or long standing complaint, why do you not write to Dr. Greene of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., the discoverer of that great nerve remedy, Dr. Greene's Nervura, and well-known specialist in the cure of nervous and chronic diseases? He uses only harmless vegetable medicines, and has made a specialty of treating cases through letter correspondence, and his success in curing even apparently hopeless cases is marvellous. He can be consulted free, that is, you can write him a description of your case and he will return an answer fully explaining your case, what the chance of cure is, and give you his valuable advice in regard to treatment without charge. you can adopt his treatment or not as you please, but his astonishing success and enormous practice render a cure almost assured to those who use his medicines. LITERARY NOTES.

"The Youths Companion" of March 5th is to have an important paper by Hon. James G. Blaine, entitled, "How Reports of Debates in Congress Grow." Such a paper, relating to the National Legislation and written by our eminent Secretary of State, will be of universal interest.

This week's issue of Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper might well be called the General Sherman number. The magnificent funeral pageant in New York is pictured, and the work is beautifully executed, the portraits of notables being easily distinguished. The German edition of Frank Leslie's also contains these pictures, and is the only German illustrated paper of this character printed in the United States. Every old soldier will want to preserve this number of Leslie's. Mr. Peffer, elected as Senator from Kansas in place of Ingalls, tells in Frank Leslie's Newspaper "What the Farmers' Alliance Wants." We might add that it is not the whole earth. Get a copy of your newsdealer.

Every Grand Army man will be delighted with the beautiful colored lithograph that appears in this week's issue of Judge. It is the most living likeness of General Sherman that has yet appeared. A copy of the paper can be secured either at the local news-dealers, or by enclosing ten cents in an envelope addressed to the Judge Publishing Company, 110 Fifth Avenue, New York.

Tribute to Whittier.

Mr. Whittier says his work is done, although once in a while he writes a stanza or two; but he has laid down the pen forever. The twilight is closing softly round him. The vital fires that have kept him clear sighted and erect for more than eighty years are burning low; but it is a kindly and most delightful twilight; one that is more to be desired than a splendid noon. There is in it no night or despondency or darkness. Not to many mortals is vouchsafed such a happy, tender hour of restfulness and waiting; there are not many mortals who have so deserved its benediction.

For it was not in peaceful repose or easy contentment that the memories that hallow and the homage that surrounds Whittier's declining years were won. The young people of to-day think of the Quaker poet as a gentle, lovable old man who dreams the hours away before the embers of his open fire at Oak Knoll, and whose occasional verses breathe an exquisite serenity and peace. But time was when the hand of this kindly dreamer struck hard and sharply a tense chord that helped wake the sleeping conscience of a nation. Time was, and that not long ago, when the Quaker enthusiast gathered up and forced into burning intensity in his songs all the longing and wrong and sorrow of a race of bondage. The nation heard; blood-drenched battle fields and heaps of broken shackles were the result.

Not only America, but the world, is better and richer for his life and labors. One of the bravest and purest of humanity's helpers, Mr. Whittier, has amply won his rest.—Salem Observer.

Charity Hospital Ball.

A fashionable party was held in Music Hall, Boston, Monday night, which was largely attended, and while those present enjoyed the festivities of the occasion, a large sum of money was realized for the benefit of the Woman's Charity Club Hospital. Decorations had to be omitted as the hall was used during the afternoon, and no time was afforded to arrange anything in this line, but the dancers made up in grandeur of costume for deficiencies of mural decorations.

STARTLING FACTS.

The American people are rapidly becoming a race of nervous wrecks, and the following suggests the best remedy: Alphonso Hempling, of Butler, Pa., swears that when his son was speechless from St. Vitus dance Dr. Miles' great Restorative Nerve cured him. Mrs. J. R. Miller, of Valparaiso and J. D. Taylor, of Logansport, Ind., each gained 20 pounds from taking it. Mrs. H. A. Gardner, of Vistula, Ind., was cured of 40 to 50 convulsions a day, and much headache, dizziness, backache and nervous prostration by one bottle. Trial bottles and fine book of marvelous cures, free at Wm. T. Lee's who recommends and guarantees this unequalled remedy.

TRY DANA'S SARSAPARILLA!

From Cloister To Cell.

A Franciscan monk, who had exchanged the habiliments of his order for the ragged raiment of a tramp, and his cell in a monastery for one in jail, is Henry C. Berg, who has been arrested in this city for stealing the silver candlesticks from an Episcopal church.

Berg's case has been a strange one. He is 61 years of age. Forty years ago, in France, he took the vow of a Franciscan monk. Sixteen years later he was transferred to the monastery at Milwaukee, where he remained eighteen years. Six years ago he was transferred to the monastery at Vine and Liberty streets, Cincinnati. There he fell from grace. He contracted the opium habit and sold his soul to the drug.

Last July he broke his vows and left the monastery, and since that time has been a wanderer. He came to this city several weeks ago and tried to reform. He attended the services at Grace Episcopal church. Then he disappeared, and with him went the silver candlesticks and silver bread and water box belonging to the communion set. The articles were recovered in a pawn shop, where they had been left by a man answering to the description of Berg, the monk. Berg was arrested, and said that he did not remember stealing the articles, but that he might have done so while under the influence of opium.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL.

At the Boston Theatre, Monday, "The Hustler" will be put upon the stage for a short run.

"Ship Ahoy" is having a successful run at the Park Theatre.

Minnie Palmer, in the laughable farce, "A Mile a Minute," will entertain the theatre goers at the Tremont, next week, commencing Monday.

The Globe curtain rises Monday evening on "A Fair Rebel."

"Lost in New York" is the drawing card for next week at the Grand Opera House.

At the Howard, Weber & Fields' New Novelty Company commences an engagement Monday.

"Sunlight and Shadow" will be put upon the stage at the Boston Museum on Monday, to-night closing the long and successful run of "The Solicitor."

Louise Thorndyke-Boucicault is to leave Hammerstein's stock company after next week, as she has accepted an engagement to appear in Gillette's new comedy, "Mr. Wilkinson's Widow."

"Repertoiring" is the latest twist to theatrical slang.

Lem Grover's new play, "The Wolves of New York," will be produced in about three weeks.

Loie Fuller, of whom Americans have heard so little of late, is to appear at the London Avenue Theatre, March 3, in a new play called "Zephyr." In the cast will be S. Miller Kent and Harry Hilliard, who is called "one of America's best tenors."

"Blue Grass," a Kentucky romance, by Myron Leffingwell, has made a hit in New England.

James M. Dougherty, the mad would-be lover of Mary Anderson, has been sentenced to Sing Sing for life for the murder of Dr. Lloyd.

Joseph Hutton is writing a new play, with an American story as the theme.

E. S. Willard, the clever English actor now at Palmer's Theatre, has so far made no money in America. He has been very badly managed, and Palmer's Theatre, which was formerly Wallack's, has been the most unfortunate of all the New York playhouses this season.

Thos. W. Keene has had another attack of nervous prostration.

Harry Mann, of the San Francisco, California theatre, celebrated his tin wedding last week.

The Evansville, Ind., People's Theatre was destroyed by fire, February 24.

May Howard, of the Howard Burlesque co., will be a valuable addition to the ranks of Donnelly and Girard's "Natural Gas" co. next season. Miss Howard will assume the role of "Daisy" with that company.

The Birthplace of Paul Revere.

It has been rumored that the historic structure in which Paul Revere first saw the light of day, will be razed to the ground. The buildings adjacent, 15 and 17 North street, which are said to be older than the Revere homestead, will likewise be removed, to give place to a more modern edifice of brick, four stories high. The report however is denied by the owner Mr. Sidney Squires, who says his intention is simply to repair the building to preserve it.

The Governor's Reception.

Governor Russell held a reception in the Executive Chamber of the State House Washington's Birthday, and 2129 persons were made happy by the opportunity thus presented, of shaking the hand of the Chief Magistrate of the Commonwealth. The governor's staff were present, including the two generals from Salem, and it is rumored that many a rustic mistook these imposing looking individuals for His Excellency, as well they might. The glamour of the official station, banishing all distinction of party, will make the event memorable to all who participated in the fete.

THE WISE MAN.

What is the good man and the wise? Ofttimes a pearl which none doth prize; Or jewel rare, which men account A common pebble, and despise.

Set forth upon the world's bazar, It mildly gleams, but no one buys; Till it in anger heaven withdraws From the world's undiscerning eyes;

And in its shell the pearl again, And in its mine the jewel lies. —Richard Chevenix Trench.

THE BLACK RIBBON.

The gentlemen of Cove house sat upon the piazza, smoking and looking at the sea as it tumbled in, when the evening coach, laden with piled up baggage and passengers, came rattling down the turnpike and made the sweep which led up to the hotel. This in itself was matter enough for attention, but when, in the wake of the yellow old coach, just beyond its clouds of dust, a glittering little pony carriage rolled swiftly on, a dozen pair of lazy eyes grew interested and expectant.

The coach drew up with a scientific flourish, and the sweating horses stood panting with the tug through the heavy sand, while the driver leaped down, and with much tumbling and crashing of trunks the old stage was unladen. Meanwhile the pony carriage, holding two girls, rolled smoothly up to a side door, and three waiters were instantly in attendance upon them.

The ladies alighted, and the two disappeared at the private door of the Cove house. "Who are they?" asked Paul Hanover, withdrawing his cigar from his mouth and turning his handsome blue eyes on the friend at his elbow.

Fane King, who was looking thoughtfully out at sea, replied quietly that he did not know.

"It's Miss Payson, of New York," said Will McKenzie, who knew everybody. "At any rate, that's her turnout."

"Which one?"

"The blonde, I suppose. I never met her, but she was at Newport with my sister last season. Nice, ain't she?"

"Who is the other one?"

"I don't know. Poor cousin, I presume."

Hanover and King relapse to their cigars; but everybody was thinking more or less of Miss Payson.

The ladies appeared at supper. There were only five of their party—the old gentleman, the two young ladies and an invalid child of 13 with her nurse. It was soon remarked that they appeared sufficient for themselves, and neither sought nor received acquaintances. The face of the blonde girl was as jolly without the jockey hat as with it, but the profile of her companion only was to be seen. A broad black ribbon bound around the chin and nearly concealing a wealth of rich brown hair revealed only the side view of a set of regular features and one smooth, fresh cheek.

"What can be the matter?" questioned the ladies one of the other.

So, without the least possible information on the subject, Alice Payson was decided to be an object of misfortune and compassion, while unexplained admiration and adulation were offered the other one.

I cannot say that either appeared much affected by the regard of those around them. Certainly they spoke to no one for at least three weeks. People became discouraged about making their acquaintance, and few more attempts were tried.

But things inevitably changed. One evening when all Cove house was in the surf a scream arose. The scream was followed by a frantic cry:

"Alice! Oh, Alice! She is drowning! Save her! save her! save her!"

"Who can swim?" was the cry.

Long before it was answered Fane King was seen striking out boldly for the spot.

But he had some forty rods to swim, and it was probable that Alice Payson had sunk for the second time while the strong tide swelled against the rocks.

"Swim, man, swim!" shouted the old uncle upon the beach.

"Save her, oh, for God's sake!" cried Maud, wringing her hands.

But within a few strokes of Fane King's outstretched arms Alice disappeared.

There was already death upon her closed eyes and pallid forehead. He thought it was a corpse he clasped as he dropped beneath the surface and caught her sinking figure.

It was with difficulty he arose to the surface. Thrice the great billows rolled over his head before he appeared. He could only hold himself and his burden off the cruel rocks. Already his arm was lacerated with their sharp teeth.

They had put out a boat, and it at last came to his relief. As they lifted the senseless girl into the wherry they saw that the black ribbon had been torn from her face, and a large, dull red, discolored mark appeared. It showed more plainly in the otherwise deadly pallor of her sweet face, for sweet it was, and pure as a child's. They covered face and figure reverently, thinking her quite dead, and rowed back while Fane found his way up the rocks to have his hand wrung speechlessly by the agonized old man.

"I don't think she is dead, Mr. Payson," said Fane, remembering with a thrill the silken hair which had washed against his lips. "She cannot be dead!"

She was not dead. In three days she appeared among them again, fairer, gentler, sweeter than ever, and frankly grateful for the interest everybody betrayed in her. And then it came out that there had been a mistake. It was Alice who was the heiress and Maud the poor cousin, though as beautiful, as radiant and perfect as a Hebe.

Miss Alice Payson, with the black ribbon replaced, tried to thank Fane King on the first day of her reappearance, but her brown eyes filled and she only said:

"You are young; life is sweet to you; it was noble in you to risk yours for me, Mr. King."

Fane's heart swelled so that he hardly knew what was the matter with him. But, somehow, the friendly clasp of Alice Payson's light hand and the gaze of her sweet eyes affected him as no hand or eyes had ever affected him before.

The ice once broken, a bevy of gentlemen strove for the attention of the cousins. Paul Hanover was foremost.

He was very handsome, fair, brilliant, graceful. He was not poor either. Fane remembered that bitterly as he saw him strolling with Alice on the beach or driving for her the little pony carriage. His own peace and comfort seemed suddenly gone. Miss Payson's gentle friendliness only made him worse.

He was startled one day as if shot by Hanover remarking:

"If you're not altogether gone with the blues, Fane, I'd like you to congratulate a fellow."

"Have you won your bet on the trotting match?"

"Pshaw! hang trotting matches! Don't be stupid, Fane. Haven't I been riding with Miss Payson?"

"Well?"

"Well it is," pironetting around the room and snapping his fingers like castanets. "I'm the fond betrothed of a lovely girl, after the latest novel. Now, what have you to say, my respectable, moping friend?"

Fane tried hard to command himself and not betray his secret.

"Alice Payson is too good for you, Paul," he answered, with an attempt at being sage and composed, in which he succeeded but tolerably.

"I dare say, but it isn't her, Fane."

"Taint her?"—looking electrified.

"Certainly not. The money's very well, but that defect of hers—it's a delicate subject, but I really couldn't marry a girl with a disfigurement like that."

"You mean that you are engaged to Maud?" asked Fane, hardly believing his ears.

"Exactly."

"Why, I congratulate you, with all my heart!" jumping up excitedly.

"They are going away to-morrow. Don't you want to see them again?"

Fane went down upon the piazza where the ladies sat, unreasonably happy.

The ladies were standing upon the piazza, in the early sunlight, when he approached Alice Payson to say good-by.

Paul was talking to Maud, saucy and beautiful in her jockey hat as Fane found his way to Alice's side.

"Good-by, Mr. King. You will come and see us, with your friend?" she said.

There was no one very near. He answered:

"No; I love you, and so I must say good-by forever, Alice."

He saw the delicate features pale. At that instant old Mr. Payson came hurrying out, followed by a porter with a large valise in each hand.

"Ready, girls?" he called. "Come, hurry, or we'll miss the train."

Alice, with downcast face, gathered up her gray trailing skirt. He thought she was going without a word, but suddenly she looked up into his eyes.

"No. Come," she said. And then in a moment she was gone, the dainty carriage glittering down the beach.

A week later he waited for her in the costly splendor of her drawing room. She came down, giving him her soft hands, not resisting his embrace.

"I love you so!" he murmured.

"Do you, really—with this disfigured face?"

"I never think of it, Alice."

She laughed then and slipped off the black ribbon, and there was one smooth cheek as fair and perfect as the other.

"I had blistered my face for the toothache. It was nothing lasting, you see."

When Fane told Hanover his happiness, or as much of it as he could express in words, he looked as if there was something unsaid upon his mind, but when he beheld Alice under her bridal veil he seemed suddenly enlightened.

"If I hadn't been afraid of a black ribbon," he murmured, "I might have been fifty thousand dollars richer."

Perhaps.—E. E. in New York News.

Horses That Like Human Flesh.

There appeared in the papers some time ago a story of a horse which, standing in a Toronto street, mistook for new mown hay the blonde hair of a young lady on the sidewalk, seized it in its watering mouth and was rewarded by a blow between the eyes which could have been possible only in the days of roomy garments. One of the beauties of that story was that it was rigidly true, although the name of the horse's owner was withheld. But since then either the same animal or a full brother by the same sire and out of the same dam has been making a name for himself as a luncher off mutton coat sleeves, sealskin caps, bearskin coats and tweed capotes.

He is a pretty little roan beast, owned by Larry Cosgrave, and a very snapping turtle in harness. He stood hitherto to a little cutter in front of the Bank of Commerce and had five minutes of solid enjoyment, during which time he nearly pulled the arm out of an advertising agent. The arm looks as if it had been vaccinated. But Larry Cosgrave's horse is not the only one in the city that has fallen into evil ways. It is a common thing to see these ferocious animals sprawled half way across the sidewalk, seeking whom they may devour.—Toronto News.

Tumbled at Last.

The English traveler stood on the slippery dock at New York, ready to board the steamer for home. His American friend shook him warmly by the hand and bade him farewell.

"Be careful in going up the gangway," said the latter. "It is icy. For that matter, however," he added, "it will be high sea all around you for the next six or seven days."

The Englishman, with a sad, dreamy, preoccupied look on his face, went aboard the ship.

Years passed. The American, now a gray haired old man, was sitting down to breakfast one day when a cablegram, just received, was handed to him. It was from his English friend and contained these words:

"Ha! ha!" It had bored its way through his skull at last.—Chicago Tribune.

Young Man: If engaged, the question of a home doubtless agitates you.

It may be only a few rooms, perhaps a cosy house, or maybe a mansion. In either case there are the furnishings to be procured, and where to get them is the question.

We know a place where you can get them better for less money than anywhere else (and on easy terms if you desire). A postal card or an ordinary letter will give you the information and a list of prices for a basis to work on.

Write to-day.

Young Lady:

In consulting with your future husband about the furnishings of your home, the first thing to be considered is STYLE, the second ECONOMY. Show him you have an eye to business by persuading him to examine our goods and prices.

In return, we promise you nicer styles than anybody else, and a saving of many dollars, thus proving that you were right in recommending him here.

"Atkinson's Adjustable Plans" will help you considerably. Suppose you write for them now.

N. B.—We keep everything which you will need around the house, from kitchen to drawing-room, and will give you Liberal Terms if desired.

The Origin of High Heels.

Heels, it is said, owe their origin to Persia, where they were introduced upon sandals in the shape of blocks of wood fixed underneath, such being the root idea of those deformities to which lovely woman owes so many of her woes. A high, unsteady heel, it is an open secret, injures the leg tendons and affects the spine as well as internal organs, which are liable to be displaced by the thrown forward position entailed. In Persia, the first home of the heel, however, these blocks of wood are used simply to "raise the feet from the burning sands of that country, and were about two inches high." With the Persian women these blocks were vastly higher than those affected by the men, their height being from eighteen inches to two feet, thus becoming more of the nature of stilts than anything else.

Strangely enough, many years after, a similar fashion came into vogue in Venice; but the motif in this case was comically different, for "by its means jealous husbands thought they would be able to keep their wives at home." The supporters of such shoes in Venice were called "chapineys," and to appease the vanity of the ladies, and doubtless also to sugar the pill, were made highly ornate. The height of these chapineys determined the rank of the wearer, an extra coating for the pill, "the noblest dames being permitted to wear them one-half yard or more high."

SUDDEN DEATHS.

Heart disease is by far the most frequent cause of sudden death, which in three out of four cases is unsuspected. The symptoms are not generally understood. These are: a habit of lying on the right side, short breath, pain or distress in side, back or shoulder, irregular pulse, asthma, weak and hungry spells, wind in stomach, swelling of ankle or dropsy, oppression, dry cough and smothering. Dr. Miles' illustrated book on Heart Disease, free at William F. Lee's, who sell and guarantee Dr. Miles' unequalled New Heart Cure, and his Restorative Nervine, which cures nervousness, headache, sleeplessness, effects of drink, etc. It contains no opiate.

Professor Rogers' Discovery.

A curious and novel experiment was performed by Professor William A. Rogers of Coiby university, by means of which he has clearly proven what, for a number of years many leading physicians have maintained, but were not able very clearly to substantiate, except in the case of water, namely, that the first effect produced by an application of heat is contraction. Professor Rogers was until within a few years connected with Harvard college, and is regarded as an authority upon questions of this nature. The new discovery will throw fresh light on the pathway of science. The experiment was conducted on the principle of the relative expansion of metals under variations of temperature. By means of highly magnified rays of light reflected from mirrors placed upon metal bars he found that when heat was applied to the bars it at first caused them to contract, then expansion followed—that is, heat for a short time produced the generally accepted effect of cold.

VICTORS.

Not to the brave upon the battlefield
Alone the palms of victory belong;
Nor only to the great of earth the song
Of praise and psalm should the singer yield.
Greater the souls that, single handed, wield
The battle-axe against the hosts of wrong.
Unknown, unnoted in life's reckless throng,
And only in God's day to stand revealed.
How many such, in patient, humble guise,
Beside us walk their brief appointed way.
Noble enduring; worthy to shine
As fixed stars in Fame's eternal skies!
For these, for this, I reverently lay
On their dear dust this little leaf of mine.

THE CARLYON TRAGEDY.

Just the two men composed the family at Carlyon Hall, and a gay, wild life they led. Not that they were much together, or that good will inclined them to the same course. Truth to tell, there was little sympathetic feeling lost between the two Carlyons.

The elder man gave his select dinners and champagne suppers to his clique, while Ralph, his son, scoured the country for a score of miles about with choice spirits of his own.

The Hall itself was a patched up pile of ruinous masonry. The Carlyons for three generations back had proved a spendthrift race, and their once ample patrimony had dwindled down to a few barren acres, with a village of miserable houses, which yielded the sole income of the present proprietor. Still he could boast a long descent, and we all know how far an illustrious pedigree will go toward propping up a falling house.

This was the state of affairs when Mrs. Mondeville came down from town with a half dozen servants at her back, and pretty Bertha Mondeville, her very reluctant companion.

Bertha was the lady's youngest daughter, and, besides the generous portion of Mondeville property destined to fall to her share, had good prospects of an inheritance from a certain wizen, eccentric old woman who had stood godmother to her at her christening, eighteen years before.

With such expectations, and possessed of natural attractions which drew hosts of sighing lovers to her feet, it was certainly reprehensible in her to give preference to one far beneath her in the social scale. At least so reasoned her lady mother. But Bertha was wilful, and maternal restrictions went for naught. She had given her heart and promised her hand to Henry Bernard, the struggling artist, who as yet was quite unknown to both fame and fortune. He was sanguine, though, and Bertha no less so. She reposed the utmost confidence in his genius and ultimate success, while he toiled with renewed energy for his triumphal wreath, knowing that her happiness was involved in the result of his effort.

But here Mrs. Mondeville interposed. Her wrath fell harmlessly upon her daughter's perverse head, until angered beyond bounds, she had recourse to extreme measures to break off the proposed mesalliance. Henry Bernard was forbidden the house, and Bertha was placed under strict espionage for the time.

The Carlyons were distant relatives of the family, and Mrs. Mondeville fixed upon the hall as a secure and retired asylum for her wayward child. So hither they had come, fast upon the track of the courteous little note of warning that announced them.

The hall had been put in hurried order for the reception of the ladies. The remnants of plate were duly polished; the frayed damask and fine linen (evidences of decaying gentility) taken from the drawers. Carlyon cleared his domicile of bachelor guests, and met them with the courtesy ease which distinguishes gentle blood, no matter how much weighed upon by adverse circumstances. Ralph, who was in the habit of being absent for days together, knew nothing of the proposed advent, and surprised himself not a little by coming home to find such an unprecedented party established there.

Mrs. Mondeville endured a week in the dreary, solitary place, and then went away, leaving Bertha and a lynx-eyed maid to the hospitable charge of the Carlyons.

It was not a pleasant duty for the latter to assume, and for a time they regretted the necessary suspension of their reckless pleasures. Not that either reformed, even temporarily, but the hall could no longer be thrown open to boom comrades and nightly orgies. They clung to their customary habits, but unused to the trouble of concealment, chafed against the bondage which common courtesy imposed upon them.

This state of things did not continue long, however. Bertha's cheery young presence brought a flood of sunshine into the dreary old house, such as it had not known for years. The grim, dark rooms held attractions for their inmates which they had not hitherto possessed.

Certainly, in removing her daughter from the influence of one lover, Mrs. Mondeville had not meant to subject her to the importunities of two. Carlyon, drawn perhaps by visions of the ample dowry destined for, and Ralph—blasphemy as he was—actually touched with an approximation to noble sentiment, were both soon numbered among her devotees.

Bertha's position was becoming extremely unpleasant. A note smuggled out despite the watchfulness of the maid brought no response from Henry Bernard. Her mother remained unmoved by her urgent entreaties for a speedy return, and meantime the two Carlyons urged their individual suits with persistent ardor.

Ralph, impulsive and passionate, could wait to take no politic moves in prosecuting his wooing. His very earnestness would have pleaded powerfully for him had not the girl's heart and mind been filled with other love and other thoughts. He came in upon her suddenly one afternoon when he knew her to be alone.

"It's the old, old story, Bertha, that I want to tell you," he said. "I suppose I am not worthy of you, for I've been a wild blade in my time, but I will make myself better when you give me the dear assurance I am waiting for. Bertha, love, come to me."

His dark face, handsome despite the lines dissipation had left upon it, grew tender. His eyes looked down in hers with eager, impassioned light. Bertha's heart throbbed pitiably as she realized the pain her words must inflict upon him.

"Oh, Ralph, I had hoped you might not subject me to this test! It would be cruel to give you false hope, for I can never be more than your earnest friend. Forget that you have ever cared for me, and bestow your love on some one who will make you happier than I ever could."

"Bertha! Bertha! You can't mean to leave me in utter despair! I will wait and work, and prove myself a better man than I have yet been. Only tell me that there is a chance of winning you at last!"

"It never can be, Ralph! Because—because I love another!"

The still, white rage which settled down upon his face frightened her more than if he had broken out in angry words.

"I shall not give you up, nevertheless," he said, with quiet intensity. "Give me a little hope and an equal chance, and I will try for your love by fair means; but by measures foul or fair, no other man shall ever take you from me!"

With that he returned, leaving her abruptly as he had come, and his quick steps gave back a sharp ring from the paved walk without. At a little distance he encountered the elder Carlyon, who accosted him, timing his leisurely pace to the other's hasty strides.

"Easy, my son! I have some information which it may be best to impart at once. I happened to overhear your conversation of a moment ago—by the way, you should never make love near open windows—and am gratified to know that Bertha holds such an important place in your estimation."

"Ah!" Ralph waited, knowing that something more lay behind that suave address.

"Yes, but I must warn you against your own impetuous nature, which may lead you to extremes. As she said, it is quite impossible for her to regard your suit with favor."

"May I ask why?"

"Simply because I intend to marry her myself!"

"By heaven, you shall not!"

The elder Carlyon drooped his eyelids, a trick of his when angered.

"Did you ever know me to relinquish a purpose?"

"Or me to fail in making good my word? I would kill any man ere he should thwart me or brave me by flaunting her preference."

Each read indomitable resolution in the other's face. The gauntlet was cast between them, and hereafter only bitter enmity could mark their mutual relation.

A week wore heavily away. Then Ralph disappeared, went no one knew whither, and Bertha awoke to a consciousness that she was no better than a prisoner in the old hall. The maid had been bribed to co-operate with the elder Carlyon, and he himself announced his purpose with a quiet steadiness of manner which would admit of no gainsaying.

With his ruthless will crushing down all obstacles in his way, and no communication with her friends permitted, save such as he dictated, Bertha felt that her opposition must give way before the cruel forces he brought to bear upon her. At last he gained his purpose. How he accomplished it himself and the maid best knew. But the clergyman was waiting at the church, and Bertha, worn to a shadow of her former cheery self, with her face scarce less white than the bridal robes she wore, went trembling down the worn stairs to go and be wedded to the man she both hated and feared. Carlyon met her with a triumphant smile upon his face, but the words of gratulation he was about to offer never left his lips.

A man, with haggard face, bloodless lips drawn away from his glittering teeth, and dishevelled hair streaming about his neck, rushed up the length of the passage and grappled with him. It was Ralph, who had been confined all this time in one of the vault like cellars beneath the old hall, and had escaped now to wreak insane fury upon his jealous jailer. There was an inherent madness in the Carlyon blood, and these weeks of solitude and mental torture had brought the curse upon the younger man.

A struggle ensued that was fearful to witness. Bertha crouched upon the stairs, with rigid, blanched face, and eyes never wavering from the horrible spectacle. Servants ran screaming, all was chaos for a moment, and then awful quietude fell upon the hall.

There was a crushed, bleeding, senseless mass upon the floor; and the madman, his rage appeased, unresistingly submitted to the bonds which were placed upon him. The elder Carlyon went to answer for his sins before an eternal tribunal; his son drags out a living death in a lunatic asylum.

But Bertha, sorely tried, found peace at last. Shocked beyond measure by the frightful tragedy which had been enacted, and appalled by the peril her daughter had passed, Mrs. Mondeville recalled Henry Bernard from the fruitless quest he was pursuing. It is needless to say that Bertha's letter never reached him, and that Mrs. Mondeville had sent him as far as possible from the actual track. But the young people could freely forgive all past injuries in the happiness which was theirs at last.—New York World.

Well to Know.

Not all may know that a hot iron-poker, if nothing better—run around window glass will loosen the putty, when it may be easily scraped and the broken pane removed. The new pane may be inserted, putty neatly and carefully laid on, and the work is done. This may be convenient to know when one becomes the family "handy man," or one's own, as is sometimes the case.—Good House-keeping.

Taught a Lesson.

A man with large business interests and a handsome income married a lady who, accustomed to all her previous life to the luxuries of wealth, had never formed any clear conception of the worth and purchasing power of money. For some months the indulgent husband gratified his wife's every whim.

One day the lady, to carry out some caprice, asked for a check for so large a sum that the gentleman was disturbed. He saw that such prodigality, if persisted in, meant ruin; but not wishing to grieve his wife by a downright refusal he determined to give her a lesson in finance. He therefore smilingly remarked that he could not give her a check as usual, but would send up the money from his store.

About noon the promised money came, not in crisp bills, as was expected, but in silver dollars, the sum total filling several specie bags.

The wife was first vexed, then amused, and finally, as the afternoon wore away, became deeply thoughtful. When her husband came home to supper she took him gently by the arm, and leading him into the room where the ponderous bags of specie were still standing, said:

"My dear, is this the money I asked you for this morning?"

"It is, my love," was the reply.

"And did you have to take this money all in, dollar by dollar, in the course of your business?" was the next question.

"Yes," he answered, gently, "it represents the earnings of many weeks of hard labor."

"Well, then," she said, with tearful eyes, "send a man to take it back to the bank in the morning. I can't use so much money for so trivial a purpose. I didn't understand about it before."—Youth's Companion.

A Blind Man's Intelligent Dog.

Every one who walks along upper Broadway knows the blind newsman and his dog at the corner of Thirtieth street. The man sits on a camp stool from noon until 8 o'clock every day selling papers, and during that time the dog is his constant companion.

One evening, when the man had sold all his papers and was ready to go home, he got up, folded his camp stool and tucked it under his arm, and catching a tight hold of the string attached to the dog's collar, started to walk up Broadway. When they reached the middle of the next block the dog stopped.

"Come along; get up, Prince," said the blind man, tugging at the string. But the dog seemingly paid no attention. He was looking intently down the street at the approaching horse cars. He stood this way for some minutes, scanning each car carefully as it passed, and suddenly ran out into the street, the man following, and jumped aboard the front platform of an up town green car. The car stopped and the blind man groped his way inside and took a seat, while the dog remained on the platform.

The same performance is repeated every night, and it is said that the man and his dog are known to all the drivers and conductors on the line.—New York Evening Sun.

Hopelessness of the "Cracker."

One clever, original manufacturer for five years devoted head, heart and purse to ameliorate the condition of his operatives—the worst class in the community. They had no homes; he bought and built houses, which fell to pieces through neglect or were burned up in orgies. When their dwellings were again repaired the crackers felt out of place in a setting of order and neatness, and "jes to make things sorter homelike," as was afterward naively explained, they kicked out the panels of the doors, smashed the windows, riddled the walls and cut up the floors for kindling wood.

With driftwood for fuel lying almost at their gates, if they have a gate, rather than walk to and from the fence, if they have a fence, the proletarian inhabitants prefer to destroy their landlord's property. An attempt to utilize their horticultural instincts was unavailing. The gardens were fenced, the tenants burned the planks; the plots were plowed, not a seed was planted, and when, undiscouraged, the employer planted the gardens himself, the people turned in the hogs with the comment, "Bacon's better than garden sass any day."—Century.

A Hymn with Two Authors.

Who is the author of the hymn, "In the Sweet By and By?"

With regard to the authorship of this now famous hymn there is a difference of opinion. The author of the words is believed to be Dr. S. F. Bennett, who, while living in Elkhorn, Wis., wrote the lines in a fit of mental depression. They were set to music by Mr. J. P. Webster, a composer living in the same town. Another version credits Mr. Webster with the authorship of the music and the first verse of the hymn, which was then completed by Dr. Bennett. The credit of both words and music must be given to the two gentlemen mentioned, though what was the individual contribution of each cannot now be determined. The song was written in 1868, and almost immediately achieved the wide popularity which it has ever since enjoyed.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Steering Clear of Sin.

Milkman—Johnny, did you put water in the milk this morning?

New Assistant—Yes, sir.

"Don't you know that is wicked, Johnny?"

"But you told me to mix water with the milk."

"Yes, but I told you to put the water in first and pour the milk into it. Then, you see, we can tell the people we never put water in our milk."—Texas Siftings.

He Run First.

The depositors in a private institution in a Kansas town were getting ready to make a run, as the banker was reported short, but before they could do so he left by way of the back door, and took all the cash in his carpet-bag. He reasoned that in his case it was better to run than be run on.—Detroit Free Press.

HUMOR

HOW IT HAPPENED.

Mr. Ellis Tells the Mournful Story of His Lost Mustache.

The next morning when Ellis went around to his club for breakfast his face wore a peculiar expression. It was so new—so different. Every one had become accustomed to Ellis's mustache, and the disappearance of that mustache was viewed with real concern.

The mustache had done its best to grow. It had appreciated the devotion, the self-sacrificing care bestowed upon it by Ellis, and the beautiful co-operative effort it made when Ellis, for fear of burning it some day, gave up cigarettes, was really touching. The mustache had not thrived, but it had become a landmark at the club. So when Ellis entered the breakfast room without it every one was moved almost to tears.

"Great guns, Ellis!" said Raleigh, "what have you done to your mustache? Certainly you have not shaved it off?"

"It is a sad story, old man—a sad story. I was out in the storm yesterday, you know. Snow fell on my mustache, you know. Snow melted, you see. Icicles formed, you know. Put up my hand to wipe them off, and they came off, and brought mustache inside them. Broke right square off, y'understand."—New York Evening Sun.

Could Not Go on Without Him.

A policeman at the Polk Street station yesterday morning walked up to a young man whom he had observed hurrying to and fro in a feverish way for an hour or more, and said:

"My friend, what is the trouble? Is there anything I can do for you?"

"Do for me? Je-roos-lum! No! Not unless you can bring back that 8:35 train. I'll bet a thousand dollars it left ahead of time."

"Can't you go on another train?"

"Certainly. That's what I'm waiting for. But it doesn't leave till 3:30 this afternoon, and won't get to where I'm going till about midnight, and that won't do at all."

"If it's anything important can't you send a telegram?"

"Send a telegram? I've sent half a dozen already. The fact is, I'm on my way to a wedding, to take place at 7 o'clock this evening. I've got some presents for the bride."

"Well, said the policeman, "the case isn't so bad. You can deliver the presents the next morning. The wedding will be over, of course, but—"

S. L. Dabney receives $500 for his services in the electric light contest, Forrest L. Evans $300, Sidney C. Bancroft $150. Evans and Dabney are now retained to see the bill through the legislature, authorizing the installation of a light plant and when the bill for that service and the fees paid to Messrs. Morse, Northend and Burdett, counsel for Mr. Spaulding, who instituted the injunctions, are paid, the whole affair will have cost a pretty high figure. The counsel for Mr. Spaulding may not look to the town for their fees, but it is said may do so if they choose. One of the Electric Light Committee expressed surprise that Mr. Dabney's fees were so small. He thought they would be $1000. It makes a difference who pays the bills sometimes.

The Big Trees Of California.

The sequoias dominate among splendid rivals only by a magnitude that has no comparison elsewhere in the world. I think no one can anticipate the effect that one of these monarchs will have upon him. He has read that a coach and six can drive through one of the trees that is standing; that another is 33 feet in diameter, and its vast stem, 300 feet high, is crowned with a mass of foliage that seems to brush against the sky. He might be prepared for a tower one hundred feet in circumference, and even 400 feet high, standing upon a level plain. But this living growth is quite another affair. Each tree is an individual, and has a personal character. No man can stand in the presence of one of these giants without a new sense of the age of the world and the insignificant span of one human life; but he is also overpowered by a sense of some gigantic personality. It does not relieve him to think of this as the Methuselah of trees, or to call it by the name of some great poet or captain. The awe the tree inspires is of itself. As one lies and looks up at the enormous bulk, it seems not so much the bulk, so lightly it is carried, as the spirit of the tree, the elastic vigor, the patience, the endurance of storm and change, the confident might, and the soaring, almost contemptuous pride, that overwhelm the puny spectator. It is just because man can measure himself, his littleness, his brevity of existence, with this growth out of the earth, that he is more personally impressed by it than he might be by the mere variation in the contour of the globe which is called a mountain. The imagination makes a plausible effort to comprehend it, and is foiled. No, clearly it is not mere size that impresses one; it is the dignity, the character in the tree, the authority and power of antiquity. Side by side of these venerable forms are young sequoias, great trees themselves, that have only just begun their millennial career—trees that will, if spared, perpetuate to remote ages this race of giants, and in two or four thousand years from now take the place of their great grandfathers, who are sinking under the weight of years, and one by one measuring their length on the earth.—Charles Dudley Warner, in Harper's Magazine.

DANA'S IS GUARANTEED TO CURE.

An attempt was made last Saturday night, by William Trimmings, better known as "Tim," a notorious jail breaker, to escape from Charlestown state prison, and liberate at the same time four or five other convicts of noted character. They were fortunately discovered by a night officer whose duty called him to the apartments occupied by the breakers, every hour. One of the party has sawed off bars and hinges so many times that he is confined behind specially made steel doors.

At the American House, Boston, last Monday evening, the Ancient and Honorable Artillery company met and passed resolutions lamenting the death of General Sherman and Admiral Porter.

Mayor Matthews called a special meeting of the Boston Board of Aldermen, Monday evening, to take action upon the death of General Sherman. Resolutions were adopted expressing the acknowledgement of the debt owed to the General whose name is inseparably connected with those of Lincoln, Grant and Sheridan. The city clerk was ordered to forward a copy of the resolutions to the family of the deceased hero, and a committee was appointed to attend the funeral.

Struck The Key Note.

There is a standing joke among the bank clerks of this city, at the expense of one of their number, which is worth the retelling. It seems that he has an innate conviction that he is musical, but his friends and relatives do not coincide in the idea.

However, during the winter he considered himself amply "vindicated" when the stage manager of a transient minstrel organization dropped him a brief note asking him to call.

The young man was highly elated, and presented himself bright and early on the following day. "I want you to join our show for a few days," said the manager. "Yes," was the reply, and then with the customary bashfulness of budding vocalists he added: "But I can't sing." Like a pail of ice water on the spine came the remark: "Oh! I know that. You are not to say anything, but sit in the ring when one of the stars leaves the stage to change his costume, so that there will be the same number of men on a side."

The young man duly appeared, but somehow his first professional smile was somewhat forced.—Musical Visitor.

TWO YEARS AGO!

I was a sight to behold and was unable to enjoy life at all. Now I am the picture of health and can eat anything. What did it? Sphur Bitters cured me of Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint, after suffering two years.—W. H. Bowman, Manchester, N. H.

THE LATE DAVID DIXON PORTER.

Admiral D. D. Porter was a native of Pennsylvania and was born June 8, 1814. He was the youngest son of David Porter who commanded the "Essex" in the war of 1812-14 with Great Britain. Young Porter entered the service as midshipman in February, 1829 and served in the Mediterranean until 1835 when he was employed for several years in the coast survey and river exploration. At the close of 1845 he was placed on special duty at the Washington Observatory, resigning in 1846 to take part in the Mexican war. At the outbreak of the late war he was promoted to the rank of Commander and in 1862 the mortar fleet for the bombardment of the forts below New Orleans was placed under his orders. The entire fleet being under Commodore Farragut. After the capture of New Orleans he went up the river with his fleet and was engaged in the unsuccessful siege of Vicksburg in July 1862. During the second siege of that place in the summer of '63, he bombarded the works and materially assisted Gen. Grant, who commanded the besieging army. For this he was made Rear Admiral; he was also engaged in the two combined attacks on Fort Fisher, which commands the approaches to Wilmington, N. C. The first of these attempts, at the close of 1864, miscarried. The second, in January 1865, was completely successful. In July 1866 he was made Vice Admiral, and after the death of Farragut, was promoted, October 1870, to the rank of Admiral, which carries with it the command of the entire navy of the United States, subject only to the order of the President. He died February 13, 1891.

READ THIS! O SUFFERING WOMEN!

Mrs. EVA I. FOWLER resides at Hampden Centre, Me., and as the bright October sun shone upon her face, glowing with health, as she stood upon the piazza of her little cottage, it was hard to realize that only a few months ago she was hastening towards the grave as fast as disease could do its fell work. Listen to the story she told us:—

"I am now twenty-one years old, and last winter I found myself failing rapidly. My side and back were so lame it hurt me to breathe. I felt tired and dragged out all the time, and could get upstairs only with great difficulty. I had a very bad cough. My appetite failed me, and after eating the lightest food I would have terrible distress at the pit of the stomach. I could not sleep. Night after night I would have to get up and sit up after one o'clock until morning. I tried Cod Liver Oil and other medicines, but received no benefit. But, I am happy to say, TWO BOTTLES OF DANA'S SARSAPARILLA CURED ME COMPLETELY."

Obituary.

Eben S. Howard Passes Away.

Eben S. Howard, who for many years has carried on the grocery business in Peabody, died at his residence on Holden street, at one o'clock Monday morning after a brief illness caused by paralysis, at the age of 66 years. He commenced his business career as a clerk for Daniels & P. in the building now occupied by C. H. Goulding, the structure then standing on the corner of Main and Washington streets, and later conducted the business at the same stand on his own account, until the building was removed to Water street, when he moved into a store in Poole's Hollow, from whence he transferred his business to Holden street about ten years ago and has since continued at the latter place. He was a former years much interested in the fire department and was a member of the Veteran Firemen's Association. He leaves a widow and seven married children. The funeral took place on Wednesday afternoon.

G-Clef Chorus Concert.

The first concert of the season, by the G-Clef Chorus, is to be given in the Peabody Institute, next week Thursday evening, and an exceedingly interesting and attractive program has been prepared. Our readers should give this club all the encouragement that it deserves, and that is a great deal. It is a home organization directed by a local musician whose talents in this direction are known to all lovers of music, and there should not be a vacant seat in the Institute. The club has engaged for soloists, Miss Clara Butman, soprano; Miss S. Louise Bruce, contralto, from the Unitarian church in Lynn, and Mr. William J. Winch, tenor. This is a very attractive list. Mr. Winch is well known to every one who is familiar with musical events, and his singing of German lieder is probably unsurpassed in this country. Miss Bruce has a pleasing contralto voice of great range, and Mr. Butman is unknown to our people. Of course Mrs. Ferguson will direct, and Mrs. Farrington will be the accompanist. The chorus will give the Cantata of "The Fishermans" by Henry Smart, and this will be followed by a miscellaneous programme. I certainly is the most ambitious thing the club ever attempted, and we feel sure that our people will miss the greatest musical treat afforded in this town if they absent themselves from this concert.

Spring Transcontinental Tours.

The three grand tours announced by Messrs. Raymond & Whitcomb for the spring and early summer, with Monday, April 20, as the date of leaving the East, are among the most attractive and comprehensive trips ever projected by this enterprising firm. One excursion includes eighty-two days, with 13,000 miles of travel through the most picturesque sections of the continent—this grand round comprising Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, California, Oregon, Washington, British Columbia, Alaska, Montana, the Yellowstone National Park, etc. The Pacific Coast is traversed from San Diego to the great Muir Glacier in the far North. Another tour follows precisely the same route, with the omission of the Alaska voyage. In both cases an entire week is devoted to the Yellowstone National Park—two days longer than is customary. The third excursion is the eleventh annual tour through Colorado and California, the return being via Salt Lake City and the picturesque Denver & Rio Grande route through the Wahsatch and Rocky Mountains. A descriptive circular of 192 pages can be obtained of Raymond & Whitcomb, 296 Washington street, opposite School street, Boston.

Story With A Moral.

I have been a resident of Beverly for the last 35 years, and have been married 27 years. I have a family of seven children, four girls and three boys. My husband is a hard working man, and as most every one knows, it costs lots of money to clothe the girls, more so than boys. My sister and I went to Salem to get some underwear and dress goods for our girls. I never took much stock in store keepers who advertise to mark down or closing out of bankrupt stock of Mr. So and So's goods at half price. But we visited a number of dry good stores and picked their goods. We finally went to Wm. G. Webber & Co's. To our surprise, his store was packed, crowded with customers. We had all we could do to get at the counters to look at the goods. The first thing that attracted our attention was large cards, which went to show that they had purchased John P. Peabody's goods, and were selling the same at half cost. It is true. I bought four dress good patterns and underwear for my four girls at such low prices but I was astonished. I only mention this to show there is one firm who do as they agree and have goods as advertised. By inserting this in our paper you will oblige a constant reader.—

LOCAL LINES.

The stormy and variable weather has caused much sickness in town.

James Rodie and George F. Sanger have been appointed ballot clerks.

Men's (Woonsocket) rubber boots for $2.50 a pair, at Keefe's, 6 Caller street.

Keefe is selling Ladies' Storm Slippers for 50 cents a pair, at 6 Caller street.

D. S. Littlefield has been confined to the house with a severe cold for about a week.

Mrs. Cyrus S. Russell fell down stairs and broke her hip last week. She is 80 years of age.

Edward Bishop has sold his estate on Pierpont street extension to William Tracey, for $1800.

The Atkinson House Furnishing Co., of Maine offer special inducements to home investors. See advt. in another column.

Don't forget to hear the illustrated lecture "Passion Play," by Thos. H. Cummings at Town Hall tomorrow evening at 7.45.

Notwithstanding the severity of the storm Wednesday, the cars on both street railway lines were run with tolerable regularity.

A large St. Bernard dog belonging to Arthur Elliot, the letter carrier, was shot on Pierpont street yesterday. No reason is known for the act.

A hearing on the special petition for electric street lighting will be given by the committee on manufactures, at the Town hall, Tuesday evening, March 10, 1891.

Postmaster Jackman has been confined to the house about two weeks by a severe cold. His condition today is much improved, however, and he is at his post again.

The American party has filed its nomination papers.

The Veteran Fireman's Association will give a reception to the Beverly Association and Beverly Drum Corps at the Torrent Engine house next Wednesday.

Last Monday nomination papers were signed by about 50 voters, nominating Jas. E. T. Bartlett for member of the Water Board, and George F. Sanger, Trustee of Peabody Institute.

Mrs. F. A. Sanborn was called last Saturday to her former home, in London, N. H., to mourn the loss of her mother, Mrs. Hannah Batchelder. The deceased was 82 years of age.

Several candidates whose names have been printed on the ballot, have declined. It is impossible, however, to prevent ones named being placed on the ballot, if nominated, whether he desires it or not.

The report of the Chief of Police for the month of February, is as follows: Whole number of arrests, 34; of which 21 were for drunkenness, 11 assaults, 1 disturbance of the peace and one malicious mischief. Lodgers 64.

The Naumkeag Street Railway has had great difficulty in running its cars in outlying districts, since the storm. On the Danvers and Wenham lines travel has been completely blocked, the snow drifting in as fast as cleared.

Mr. George Price, who resided on Pierpont street extension, died on Sunday morning, of paralysis. He has been ill for some years. He was 63 years old. He leaves a widow and one married daughter, Mrs. H. J. G. Kimball.

A gentleman was in town last week looking for a first-class tailor. He had visited every town in Essex County without satisfaction. He was directed to Disin, the tailor, 18 Main street, who made him a suit that suited him. He knows where to go now.

We call your attention to the advertisement in another column, of A. B. Russell, 216 Essex street, Salem, who has purchased the stock of the Naumkeag Bargain Crockery store, and will close it out at less than cost, commencing next Wednesday morning.

The sample ballots were posted on Wednesday, by the Town Clerk. Voters should consult them before going to the polls. Instructions have also been issued, that may prove quite useful to voters who have not yet become familiar with the Australian System.

Have you smoked the Kate Shelly 5-cent cigar? George Stevens has among his numerous varieties. This cigar is named for the heroine who saved a fast express from destruction, when but 16 years of age, near Mount Gona, Iowa. She receives a royalty on every cigar, for the use of her name.

Miss Elizabeth S. Tobey, the Boston Evangelist, will hold meetings in the South Church, every afternoon and evening next week, commencing at 3 and 7.30 P. M. The meetings will be similar to the ones which she held in the Methodist Church, last November. The first service will be held Sunday afternoon.

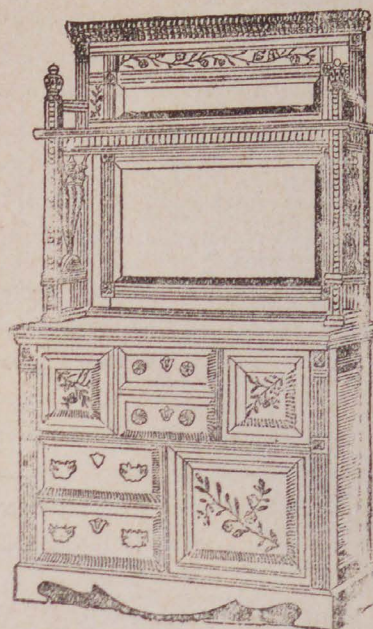

Fred Stockwell, a conductor on the Naumkeag road, was pitched over the dasher on the rear end of the car Saturday night, by the sudden jerk given in starting. He was leaning back to fix the trolley at the time, and when he fell, he landed on his head and cut a large gash, which was sewed up by Dr. John J. Shanahan.

Three pieces of furniture—a parlor cabinet, a full-size Writing Desk, and a 100-volume Bookcase—all for the cost of one. This is the latest announcement of Paine's Furniture Co., 48 Canal street, Boston. They are selling this remarkable combination of three pieces for $15, and it is the greatest furniture bargain of the year.

The last meeting of the School committee, before election, was held last Tuesday. Regular routine business was transacted, a number of bills were approved and a vote was passed, to substitute Montgomery's English History for Gardner's, now used in the High School. It was also voted, to leave writing of the annual report to Chairman Corbett.

A slight mistake was made at the City's Caucus, last week, by the nomination of Trustees for the Cemeteries and also in placing one man on the city's committee, who is not a voter of the town. The error as to the trustees is not chargeable to anyone in particular, probably being made in consequence of the phraseology of the new town orders. It was not noticed until the Town Clerk was requested to furnish blanks for their nomination. The terms of office of the trustees do not expire until next year.

W. C. PACKARD

Furniture & Carpet Company,
SALEM AND BEVERLY.

Mr. Mark L. Willey died at his residence on Chase street, Beverly, Tuesday afternoon, at the age of 44 yrs., 9 mos., after a long illness of consumption. He was highly esteemed by all who knew him, being a kind husband and an indulgent father. He was a member of Post 50, G. A. R., of this town. He leaves a widow and five children. The funeral took place yesterday afternoon.

It is announced that Dr. H. K. Foster has declined a nomination for school committee. But the friends of the citizen's caucus nominees should elect him in spite of this. Be sure and vote for him. Perhaps he will think better of it. He has had previous experience and would make a reliable member of the Board. But if he declines, a special election will allow the people to express their choice directly. Only two men can be elected for three years. The years cannot be mixed up on the ballots. This should be borne in mind.

The governor and several members of his staff were entertained by ex-mayor A. L. Huntington, upon their arrival in Salem, the other visitors being guests of Adj. Gen. S. A. Dalton, at the Essex House.

The ball and reception of Gov. Russell, on Monday, served to make that day one long to be remembered in Salem.

Governor Russell was attended by his staff in full dress uniform, and the effect was one of rare grandeur for the quiet and Puritanic city. The ball was a very select gathering, and was carried out on a scale befitting the splendid new apartments of the Salem Independent Cadets in the Peabody mansion.

Death of Another Jurist.

Hon. Robert C. Pitman, the senior associate justice of the Superior Court, who has been ill for some time with erysipelas, passed away yesterday morning at his home in Newton. He was always prominently identified with the cause of temperance. As a judge he commanded respect and admiration from the bar and laity. He was born at Newport, R. I., in 1825, admitted to the bar in 1848, and raised to the Superior bench in 1868.

ECHOES FROM THE OLD FARM.

When the crop is on the market and the cash is in your sock,
And you hear the clink and jingle of the key turned in the lock,
And the clinking of the "pennies" and the clanking of the "tens,"
And the grocery man is paid up and no more his bill he sends;
O, it's then the time a feller is a-feelin' at his best,
When he rises from his supper, then downward pulls his vest;
And he smokes his pipe in comfort and then goes and winds the clock,
When the crop is on the market and the cash is in his sock.

There's something kind o' cheerful like about the farmer's eyes
When he knows the summer's over and he doesn't have to rise
About the time the daylight's a-peepin' through the gloom,
And work until the moon's up 'mid the grain that's all in bloom;
But instead he sorter calculates he'll hook his old "Buck" and "Joss"
To his cutter in the evenin', and put on his Sunday dress,
Then go a-courtin' Lizer, with her apron and new frock,
When the crop is on the market and the cash is in his sock.

Oh, the huskin' and the spellin' bees—the winter's harmless fun;
The rapin' of the fiddle when the dancin' is begun;
The jingle of the sleigh bells, your best gal in the sled;
The kissin' and the huggin' when the old folks are in bed;
The roastin' of the chestnuts, the neighbors droppin' in;
The eatin' of the apples, drinkin' cider from a tin.
Oh, it sets my heart a-prancin', like a struttin' turkey cock,
When the crop is on the market and the cash is in his sock.

TIMMY'S RALLY.

Little Timmy Mulligan was very sick. Some of his chums said in an awed whisper, "He is dyin' dis time, sure pop."

No more would his 9-year-old war whoop resound around the corner. No more would the lake front know Timmy, his bare feet, and his stone bruises. Never again would he occupy the pitcher's box and captain the "Red Hots," de-champions uv all de 9-year-olds on de west-side—a nine which, through Capt. Timmy's masterly inshoots, had attained proud pre-eminence. Never again would Timmy refresh his jaded spirits by throwing rocks at the Italian on the corner, who had incurred his enmity by once refusing him a banana.

Timmy was as sturdy a youngster as ever the west side turned out; he was as manly and self-reliant as the average Chicago 9-year-old. He was the cock of the walk among all his companions—the best swimmer, the best fighter and the best pitcher in the ward. The neighborhood was lonesome without Timmy. People could not imagine "what was to the boy," once so hearty and vigorous, to keep to his bed.

The little invalid lay stretched out on his couch as flat and pallid as a pancake, in the front room away up in Sylvester Mulligan's ten-story flat building. The neighbors were coming in droves to cheer up the ailing youngster.

"You're not goin' to lave me, yer poor ould mither, are ye, Timmy ashore?" wailed his mother, rocking from side to side in her frenzy of grief, like a ship in a storm, her voice choked with grief, her eyes drowned in tears.

"Ye were allus a dutiful child to me, Timmy allanna, and ye wud not be after lavin' yer poor ould mither to fight the world alone, now wud ye? You're the only boy I have left, Timmy, and ye'll not lave me now after raisin' ye as long as I have. Spake to him, Father Murphy; please do, yer rivrin'—he'll moind you. He wuz allus a good hearted boy, though a trifle wild. Rayson wid him, father. The fayer has rached his brain, and he turns his face to the wall from me. He won't spake to me. Oh, it's heart scalded I am!"

"What's this I hear, Timmy, about your talkin' of dyin'?" cheerfully sung out the good Father Murphy, approaching the bedside of the little sufferer and taking the boy's wasted hand in his own. "Why, you're worth a dozen dead men yet. I could never spare you in the world. Who could I put in your place as monitor in the school? Who else could I get to run my errands and to bring me my Evening News, eh? Why, Timmy, my boy, you are indispensable to the parish—all by yourself. You're only pretendin' to be sick—ye who were always so strong and hearty, with the rosiest cheeks and the brightest eye of all the lads for squares around. Brace up, and leave all thoughts of dyin' to old folk like your mother and myself. Do you hear, Tim?"

Tim did hear, nodding his head feverishly upon his clammy pillow. His eyes burned with an unnatural fire. They had the appealing glance of a wounded deer; it would melt your heart but to look at them.

The little invalid tossed uneasily upon the bed; his curling hair, damp with perspiration and pain, strayed uneasily over the pillow; his thin hands beat the coverlid with the petulance of a sturdy youngster unused to such close confinement. Yet he spoke not a word.

"Haven't you a word for your old teacher, Tim, my boy?" asked Father Murphy, softly.

"Where's Corkey O'Neill?" yelled out Timmy suddenly, heedless of the worthy priest's entreaty. "I want to see Corkey; bring 'im up 'ere immediate."

"Corkey was instantly produced, shuffling shamefacedly across the room to the bedside of his stricken comrade. Tim's brow was knitted in meditation. His fingers played a tattoo on the blanket. He had a load on his mind he wanted to dump. Turning restlessly, the unburdened himself thus:

"I done ye up two weeks ter day, Corkey."

Corkey admitted the "doing up."

"But I foun' ye fair, Corkey; I didn't use brass knuckles!"

Corkey was forced to declare that brass knuckles took no active part in the youthful encounter.

"Ye sed I wuz a 'snide,' Corkey, didn't ye?"

It appeared that Corkey had said so.

"I tumped ye pretty hard. I blacked both o' yer eyes—or wuz it only one?"

It was "only one," for Corkey still bore the echo of it on his tinted left optic.

"Well, wot I want say, Corkey, is I'm sorry I bunged you up so bad. I don't believe I could whip you the way I am here, but ef you want satisfaction ye can take it out o' me now—if you bear enny hard feelings."

"I wouldn't hit a dyin' kid, not fer de hull west side," cried out Corkey, sobbing as if his heart would break; "ye only guv me wot I deserved, Timmy. I had no right roastin' you de way I did."

"Who duz the Red Hots play a Sunday?"

"We wuz a goan to play de Hard Times, Timmy, but now dat you're sick an' can't pitch we've declared the match off; we'd git skunked."

"Wot did ye do dat for?" savagely exclaimed Timmy. "I've a good mind to black yer other eye for ye."

"Well, we all made up we wudn't play till ye got well, Tim; it's no use going out on de dimund unless you're pitchin'."

Mr. Mulligan appeared to see matters in the proper light.

"Well, I guess you're about right, Corkey," he was moved to admit. "I guess I'll have ter get well. I want skunk dat crowd of Hard Times wid me inshoots and me new snake curve that I've been studyin' out here the last two weeks while I've been rastlin' wid de blankets. Wot duz de gang say about me, Corkey, layin' here in me bed on the flat o' me back, like an old granny—me who wuz never sick before?"

"Say, Tim, dey're orful sorry; they'd cum up here themselves to see ye, only yer ole 'ooman wudn't let 'em."

"Stick yer hed out uv the windy and yell for 'em to come up," commanded the prostrate pitcher.

Corkey thrust his Bulwer Lytton brow out of the window, emitting a yell that caused all the members of the Red Hots to file into the room on tiptoe, wiping their mouths with their coat sleeves, and hanging their heads.

"Hello, fellers!"

"Wot's de matter wid ye, Philly Burke? Wot are ye snivellin' for? Didn't ye ever see a sick kid before? An' you, too, Patsy Carroll—why, I niver see sich weakeners as you kids before in all me life. You're a nice gang to let yourself be bluffed by them Hard Times crowd. Ye have no more sand in yer craw than a chicken. I've a good notion to sick me poodle on de hull gang o' ye. Cum up yer, Danger!"

The little black and tan that had retreated under the bureau, where he kept up growling and showing his teeth at the crowd of strange visitors, jumped up on the bed and began licking his youthful master's hand. Then, turning round, he glared fiercely at the roomful of sympathizers, his tail lashing the bed, his little black nose uplifted defiantly. He showed his teeth in a subdued and dangerous snarl, as if looking out for the shins of the undertaker. All through little Tim's sickness the dog had hung around his master's room in a subdued and listless manner. When not squatting on the sick boy's pillow, licking Tim's hot and feverish hand and vigilantly guarding his restless slumber, the dog would slink away under the bed, as if the boy's illness had affected him also, and had cowed his honest bark and native pluck into a cowardly snarling and showing of his vicious teeth.

"If that dood of a doctor comes a-monkeyin' around here enny more a-pizenin' me with the medicines he makes me swaller, we'll giv him hydrophoby—won't we, Danger?"

Danger showed his red gums in fierce assent.

"Where's me ould woman?"

"Here I am, Timmy ashore: what is it?"

"Sind out the kittle for a quart o' beer. I want to do the right thing and treat de gang as has called on me. I guess it'll be about square. Whin ye go over with the growler to Danny Shay's, Corkey, mind ye scoop in all the free lunch ye can crib. I guess I could go a little cheese sandwich meself. Be sure you tell Danny Shay to pack the growler as tight as he can, Corkey," was the latter part of the languid yet hospitable injunction of the stricken Timmy, as he turned over on his side for a refreshing slumber, the vigilant Danger snugly perched on his fifth rib.

Mr. Mulligan, I am pleased to state, recovered in time to give the Hard Times the worst skunking they ever got.

In that match, digging his toenails in the pitcher's box, his cap cocked rakishly over his left eye, and Danger coaching "on de side" and howling like a demon when his master struck out any of the opposing batsmen, Timmy laded out to the demoralized Hard Times those justly celebrated curves of his, reinforced with the famous snake shoot which he had acquired while tossing oranges on a feverish bed.

Timmy was carried home to the Nineteenth ward in triumph, Danger bringing up the rear, leaving in his trail the vibrating air churned to a white heat by his wagging tail.—James E. Kinsella in Chicago News.

Saved Health and Penny, Too.

Amusing incidents often are met with on the streets, in which those who are the central figures are totally oblivious of the part they are taking. A night of two ago a poorly clad child, with her mother, was gazing anxiously into a confectionery store window on Broadway, Camden. The mother was endeavoring to break a piece from a pretzel which the child held in her hand. The little one, about 6 years old, was appealing to the mother for a penny with which to buy some candy. The woman dropped the basket on her arm, and startled the child and those around by exclaiming:

"No, no, my tear child, dot will not do for you; your mammy loves her little girl. When you eat dot candies it makes you feel so bad just like when you takes dot castor oil." The child did not require a second warning, and with a smile the woman picked up the basket, munching the pretzel and walked up the street.—Philadelphia Press.

The Loved Flower.

It will be a busy spring when we fail to call your attention to the primrose, and there is a very good reason why the little annual suggestion in this newspaper should not be omitted. Many, oh, so many people love the primrose. To them probably it has its own suggestions, and particularly to English born people, whose poet made it famous, but yet even the youth seem to love the sturdy little flower, and they certainly never saw it by the river's bank when they were boys and girls. Of course a man loves his youth time, and he is justified in it. If a primrose makes him think of laving his bare toes in the limpid waters of the stream in the drowsy day when he was only 10 or 12, and had a world before him, why, let him love it on forever, till he dies.

In that event, once each year, at least, when he sees the flower, he will be a boy again, and that will do him no harm, if he were a good boy and loved the fields. If you doubt this sentiment you need to watch people who are glad when the primroses come into the stores. Most of them enkindle. Some matronly looking dames take it up tenderly and kiss it and say, "Bless the dear." "Hey, Martha, here's the little mon—the little primrose," said another. And it is so sturdy in its uprightness and so open faced a plant that you may forgive a sigh for vanished days as you watch the good folks and their solitude for the flower that suggests so much.—Lewiston Journal.

Window Mementos.

The morbid curiosity of some people was shown in connection with the death of Secretary Windom at the board of trade dinner at Delmonico's. The mementos, 300 of which had been printed for the occasion, cost the board just $60. The day following the dinner as much as $25 was offered for one, so great was the desire in certain quarters to secure some souvenir of the sad event. Half an hour after the assemblage had dispersed every scrap of paper, leaf and flower had been carried away.

Manager Tillman, of Delmonico's, told me that the day following the banquet he was overrun with applications for mementos.

"We had a dozen copies of Windom's speech for the newspapers," said a member of the board, "that cost us a few pennies to have struck off. We have received from one man $100 for one of the copies. We are now having printed a memorial of the sad affair for distribution among the members of the board."—New York Telegram.

"Siamese" Twins in Cannes.

"Infant phenomena" in the style of the Siamese twins have, according to a telegram received from Cannes, just made their appearance in a village in the neighborhood of that town. The babies, who belong to the fair sex, are connected by a ligament which binds them back to back, but, barring this eccentricity of nature, they are described as being remarkably well formed, and apparently very healthy. Their mother is a French woman of 25 summers, whose family had been settled in the village for years.

It is needless to say that the infants are being examined with considerable curiosity by the doctors in that part of the country, who are of opinion that the death of one of the twins would at once be attended with fatal results to the other, so that their lives may be regarded as hanging literally on a thread. This was the case with the Siamese twins, and with one or two other phenomena of the same character.—London Tit-Bits.

Arresting a Funeral Procession.

The police force of Cicero, a suburb of Chicago, is continuing its war against funeral processions using Washington boulevard as a thoroughfare contrary to ordinance. Last week a procession consisting of two carriages, on their way to the cemetery, was halted by the officers. The first carriage contained the body of a child. The carriages, drivers, mourners and corpse were taken to the town hall, and a fine was imposed upon one of the drivers who confessed knowledge of the ordinance. The funeral then proceeded to the burying ground by another route.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Maine Is a Great State.

A Caribou physician recently took an exciting ride that illustrates the extent of Maine's unsettled domain in the north. The doctor was called to a lumber camp above the Allegash, one day, to perform a surgical operation upon Luther Henderson, a lumberman. He started at 10 o'clock a. m., and beyond Grand Isle there were relays of sleighs at four different points awaiting him. He arrived at his destination at midnight, having made the distance of 102 miles in fourteen hours.—Bangor Commercial.

A curious phenomenon has recently been seen on the sea at Folkestone. A ship laden with oil sank in collision off Hythe, and the sea was covered with oil. This produced a strange effect upon the wild fowl, which were plentiful in the severe weather. Wild duck, teal and other birds were easily caught, as they appeared to be unable to fly because of their plumage being saturated with oil.

Professor Theodore W. Dwight, who has recently retired from the head of the Columbia Law school, had been with the college since 1858, and is perhaps the most noted teacher of law in this country. He is 69 years old, and a grandson of Timothy Dwight, a former president of Yale.

Gen. Sherman's favorite companion when in Washington was Gen. Van Vliet. The two veterans used to go about arm in arm, greeted everywhere by smiles and salutations. Probably no other man in public life was so cordially welcomed in Washington as Gen. Sherman was.

The threatened diminution in the supply of gutta serena is a matter of considerable commercial importance, and any practical substitute for such a useful material is sure to be eagerly received.

As Though from the Grave.

Thursday there was an affecting reunion of a mother and child after a long separation. Twenty years ago, in Buffalo, resided Mr. and Mrs. White and their 5-year-old daughter. There was trouble, and husband and wife separated. White, retaining possession of the child, removed to Bedford, O. There the little one was brought up in the belief that her mother was dead.

Years passed away, and both White and his wife married again. White married a Bedford woman, and there was a large family of children. Mrs. White became the wife of a wealthy business man. The years brought no little ones, and the mother's heart yearned after her daughter Lillie. She once heard that White had moved to Bedford, and after that there were only vague and indefinite rumors. After a while she heard that her daughter was dead and she gave up hope. Her husband started in business in Kansas City, Mo.

His prospects were flattering and the pair moved there. A short time ago a lady artist engaged in Kansas City met the former Mrs. White. Learning that the artist had resided in Bedford, the mother questioned her and found that her former husband still lived there. Much to her joy she learned that her daughter was not dead, but had grown to be a handsome young woman, had married and lived in Cleveland. Her husband shortly afterward was called to the east on business, and, before going, promised to look up the daughter.

Arriving in this city he easily found her, and telegraphed to the anxiously waiting mother in Kansas City. "Lilly is here." That same afternoon the mother started for Cleveland. She was driven straight to the residence of Joseph Cowen, an employee of the Champion Spring Bed company. He is the husband of the long lost daughter, and they live in Brooklyn village. A surprise here awaited the visitor in the shape of a chubby 2-weeks-old baby boy, who was held up to make the acquaintance of grandma.—Cleveland Leader.

Gallantry of the Sioux.

A correspondent who has just returned from Pine Ridge agency tells a story of the visiting Sioux Indians who are now in Washington.

"Reading of the reception the Indians received in church Sunday, and the fact that they attended the theatre Monday evening, recalls a funny incident that happened when they were in Chicago en route to Washington. The manager who has charge of the visiting Indians thought he would amuse them by taking them to the theatre in the evening. He never for a moment thought that tragedy would rouse the warlike nature of which the Sioux is so abundantly endowed. Well, he got them into several boxes all right, and everything went well until the third act.

"The play was a heavy tragedy, and in this act the heroine was to be killed. The minute the villain attempted to strike the woman with a knife three of the Sioux rose from their seats and actually prepared to leap over the boxes onto the stage for the purpose of rescuing the heroine. The theatre was soon in an uproar, and it was only by removing the three refractory Indians from the theatre that the actors could proceed. That also explains why they were taken to see a light opera in Washington."—Philadelphia Press.

Russia's Watchful Eye.

There was a meeting of representative railroad men and steamship managers in St. Petersburg to discuss the feasibility of introducing "round trip" tickets in the interior of Russia. Such tickets would be of great benefit to those who have business in the Volga district, and make short trips from one city to another by the steamers on that river, and also to excursionists along the railroad lines. But this measure is discountenanced by the police authorities.

At present there is an officer stationed by every ticket office who may examine the passports of the travelers, without whose permission no ticket can be sold. But if round trip tickets should be issued, the holder of a return ticket to any place may sell it to another person, and the police would be unable to keep its eye on the traveling public.—Exchange.

Scarcity of Pumpkins.

A young lady from southern Connecticut visited the city this week in quest of a supply of pumpkins to furnish the basis for a pumpkin party. The homely but honest fruit is wanted not only for pumpkin pies, but for jack o' lanterns, jardinières and other articles of house and piazza decorations. Not a pumpkin can be obtained in Connecticut at this season of the year for love or money, but by extending her researches into the country the pumpkin seeker was successful, and went back rejoicing with a bagful.—Springfield (Mass.) Homestead.

Taxed While in Jail.

A peculiar case was that of John Gray, who was up in the criminal court for receiving stolen goods. Attorney A. E. Goss had just secured a verdict of not guilty for him, and he was stepping from the box when he was remanded for desertion. It seems he had previously been ordered to pay his wife $2 a week alimony. He was in jail a month waiting trial on the larceny charge, and it was for his failure to pay the alimony during that time that he was held for desertion.—Pittsburg Post.

DANA'S SARSAPRILLA CURES!
Slavery and Worse.

Henry Slocum of Pekin, China, now at the Palmer House, Chicago, tells of an experience he had in San Francisco a short time ago. He was invited by a friend to attend "a sale of some choice 'Japs,' and, thinking Japanese bric-a-brac was meant, readily accepted. Arriving at a richly furnished house he found several well known citizens and a number of old women in the parlor. At one end of the apartment was a platform. "Suddenly," said Mr. Slocum, "the folding doors at the further end of the parlor were thrown open, and through them came about twenty young Japanese girls, none of them any more than sixteen years old. It was with evident reluctance they entered the room, and most of them hid their faces in their hands for shame, at the paucity of their clothing. The girls had just arrived here from Japan, whence they had been enticed by unscrupulous wretches, with promises of easy employment. They were auctioned off at prices varying from $40 up to $500 apiece. Such sales occur every month or two, but nothing is done to prevent them.

WOMAN'S REAL PLACE.

A CONTRAST BETWEEN THE SHOP GIRL AND THE SERVANT.

The Former Tries to Keep Body and Soul Together with Scarcely More Money Than the Latter Gets as Pocket Money. The Cause of the Evil.

The kitchen and nursery versus the factory and store question has long engaged the attention of women who are devoting their lives to the improvement of the material condition of their sisters. In other words, those philanthropic persons are wondering whether, after all, the working woman has done a wise thing by leaving the sphere which was peculiarly her own, with different surroundings, since the days of Adam, and invading the occupations which are, by their nature, adapted to men.

Some opinions on this subject have recently been given. They came from women who thoroughly understand the existing conditions of life, and their expressions were echoes which are heard everywhere nowadays. The best friends, male and female, of the working women are asking the same question—Why do women put themselves under circumstances where they may be led to starvation or shame when they can readily avoid both by remaining within their natural sphere?

The answer given by a leader of the working women is the only one that covers the question in many cases. It is the "lady craze." The "saleslady" and the "factory lady" have an ambition to eclipse the wives and daughters of their employers in the matter of dress, and they see nothing absurd in carrying out their purpose. And the community seems to agree with them.

WAGES IN TWO LINES OF WORK.

Careful observers say that in this matter the girls act just the same as the young men of the day who crowd one another for clerkships, etc., whose pay is $4 or $5 a week, rather than learn a trade in which they can earn three or four times that much. The puny little clerk and the pale, unhealthy "saleslady" think they are gentlemen and ladies and would be horrified if any one offered to introduce them to the rosy, healthy servant girl who has an account at the bank, or to the robust mechanic who can produce a larger roll of bills on Saturday evening.

The "lady" who sells handkerchiefs and toilet boxes during the day for an income of fifty cents is the other half of the "gentleman" who sells cuffs and collars for sixty or seventy cents a day. They are the natural product of the new American lady and gentleman craze, and they never realize just what it means unless they get married. Then the "gentleman" clerk wishes he had mated with a girl in domestic service who knew how to cook and who had a little money laid by; and the "lady" regrets that she did not devote her smiles to a mechanic who could support her. The police courts and the divorce courts give the culmination of these stories every day in the year.

But the purpose of this article is to give further particulars that enter into the contrast between the women in domestic service and those who have flooded men's occupations. According to the most accurate statistics obtainable, the wages of servants in this city average, at the lowest estimate, $15 a month, besides board, lodging and in many cases all the clothing needed. Perhaps $3.50 a week might be fixed as the average money compensation of all the women in domestic service.

Now, according to the statement of Miss Ida Van Eiten, Mrs. Creagh and Miss Foster, the average wages of working women in stores and factories is, at the highest estimate, $4 a week.

A COMPARISON.

That is a half dollar difference in wages, and that half dollar represents, in a comparison, the board, lodging, etc., of the servants. Of course, no woman can live on fifty cents a week. It takes her whole $4 to pay for board and lodgings if she gives anything like proper nourishment to her body. So it amounts to just this: At the end of a week the servant has $3.50 to lay by, while the "saleslady" has not a penny.

As to lodging, the average servant has her own little room, nicely furnished and heated in winter. The "saleslady," if she boards, has a cold room at the top of the house, shared by three or four other unfortunate. The latter works on an average of ten hours a day, while in the holiday season she works as much as sixteen hours, and never does a penny of extra pay reach her pocket.

The servant has no longer hours, and she can rest during a great part of them, and, besides, has her two or three "evenings off" during the week. Her work, on the whole, is much lighter, and she does not know what fines are. If she falls ill, in a good family, she receives the same cordial attention that her mistress would, and is surrounded by kind attentions. And her wages go on all the time.

But how about the "saleslady" up in the top of the boarding house if she should get sick? Well, unless she is absolutely at the point of death she is packed off to a hospital when the time for which she has paid her board has expired. But even if she is allowed to remain there till she gets well, she resumes her work with her trunk under bondage to the landlady, and with a, her, heavy debt staring her in the face. Is it any wonder that many a naturally good girl seeks escape from such troubles in the concert halls?

And is it any wonder that the comfortable servant girl generally ends her career of working for others by marrying an honest man and settling down in a comfortable home.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

A Bucking Horse.

Gentlemen, but wasn't this luck? Twenty-three quail, two geese, two coons and a fox all in one afternoon! If any one can beat that on an everyday common goose hunt, let me see the color of his hair. After trying on the game I mounted and broke into the S. O. R.'s train of thought with a dig in the ribs with the butt of the gun. Right there was where I made the mistake of the day. The Splendid Old Run awoke to his surroundings, took one sniff at his odorous burden, and in just one and a half minutes by the clock had backed himself clear of everything, saddle and all, and was making Salvo time for his stable.

It was interesting while it lasted, but, thank the Lord! it didn't last long. Talk about riding a trip hammer! Why, that would be comparative fun to the way this old fiend bucked! First my hat came off; then the game began to come up and hit me in the face and the small of the back; then I had to throw away my gun, so as to have both hands to hold on with; next it began to rain dead quail out of my pockets, and finally he got me to coming down as he was going up, and that settled it. The next thing I knew I was sitting on the ground, with my teeth all loose and a kink in my spine, my game, gun, saddle and blanket scattered around, and the horse nearly home. Old Sport was sitting in front of me, spitting the ground with his stump of a tail and now and then licking his wounds in a manner that showed he was proud of them.

I was demoralized, there's no use denying it; and weak and sick I sat there until my friend, alarmed by the S. O. R.'s return riderless to the ranch, hitched up his team and came down the river hunting for me.—Forest and Stream.

Saved a Baby from Death.

During a small tenement house fire on the east side there was a thrilling incident that was not chronicled at the time. It occurred at a rear window in the second story. The flames had been extinguished with trifling damage, but the house was full of smoke.

Suddenly a woman tottered to the open window. In her arms she held a bundle, tightly clasped to her bosom. It was in white wrappings. Quickly the crowd of people in the yard below saw the woman. Great clouds of smoke whirled about her head in suffocating volumes, and the crowd called upon her to jump.

She hesitated, but extended the bundle at arm's length, from which at that moment there came a faint cry. It was a baby's voice.

"Save my child!" implored the woman. Instantly a blanket was procured and strong men held its corners.

"Drop it!" they shouted.

With her face averted the agonized and imperiled mother let the baby fall. Down the little one fluttered like a white-winged, wounded bird, with the despairing cry of "Mamma!" upon its lips. Lightly it struck the blanket, and a moment later it was taken up safe and sound, but sobbing, by a motherly looking woman in the throng.

It required but a few minutes to raise a ladder and rescue the self-sacrificing mother from her perilous position and restore her dimpled darling to her arms. This touching rescue was loudly cheered by the sympathetic spectators.—New York Herald.

Advertise Your Profession.

Advertising is the legitimate coadjutor of any legitimate business. No one occupation or set of men has a monopoly of it by any code of common sense. When properly used and developed to its capacity for good it is as honorable and as dignified in its application to the professions, as it is to the merchant, manufacturer, publisher, playwright, the artist or the pulpit. Like anything else, it can be put to wrong ends; but that should not discredit advertising as a proper factor for good purposes. As well denounce religion because there are hypocrites, or condemn water as a drink because men are drowned in the bay. Because rascals and disreputable members of the profession have invoked its aid does not limit its usefulness when put to good ends.

The professional man must, in the beginning of his practice, bend his energies to building up a large circle of acquaintances. In the ordinary course of events, and following the usual habits of all professional men, he is obscure for the first ten years of his practice. After that time, if fortune favors him, he rises with more or less rapidity to a position which is at once profitable and honorable.—A. L. Teele in Printers' Ink.

A Delicate Question.

During a lull in the court proceedings at Auburn the other day, Sheriff Lamb propounded a legal question based on an actual occurrence recently in East Livemore. Two neighbors in that town own rams. One of the rams jumped over the fence into the field of the neighbor and while there injured one of the cattle which was grazing in the field. The neighbor caught the ram and tied him in the barn where his own ram was tied. As he happened to give him too much slack rope the ram got at the more securely tied ram belonging to the man who had tied him and killed him. After having performed this feat he managed, through the extra amount of rope, to get so entangled as to get hanged by the neck until he was dead. The legal question involved was as to who should pay for the ram—the neighbor who, by letting his ram loose, caused all the trouble, or the neighbor who, by tying him in the barn so carelessly, caused the death of both animals.—Bangor News.

What the Sailor Men Eat.

Times are changed now on board ships. When I was a boy before the mast I had to take a tin pannikin and pot to the galley, get a lump of tough salt horse, a pot of weak tea and molasses and eat wherever I had a show. Nowadays the sailors have a boy to wait on them, get canned roast beef and spuds every other day and the best of salt beef and pork. If the coffee ain't strong enough or sweet enough they growl at the cook.—Interview with Capt. Bennett.

IT is estimated that the treasury surplus will be changed to a deficit of about several millions.

THE PROSPECTS of an extra session of Congress vanished early in the week, when the Postal Subsidy Bill was passed, followed by several appropriations.

ABOUT SIXTY towns of the Commonwealth held their elections last Monday, a majority giving the Australian system a trial. The system worked very satisfactorily.

THE NO License vote where the Australian system was employed, was quite materially increased last Monday. In Beverly a gain of 16 was made in the majority for no license, over last year, and other towns show still larger increase. With diligent work on the part of the Temperance co-operative committee, on Monday, we have no doubt the license vote of last year will be overcome, and we shall return to the enjoyment of a reign of temperance and closed saloons after April 30th, such as prevailed for several years, prior to last spring.

THE FRIENDS of the old Board of Selectmen should rally to the support of every member. There is danger, even if there is not an entire change, which we feel sure will not happen, that one member may be displaced, and it is hard to select which one that may be. One candidate on the nomination papers is a strong man. Under ordinary circumstances, there could be no objection to him. There can be none personally. But he should not be elected. He has been nominated by a clique which, if successful, would injure the town in every way. The success of anything but the citizen's caucus ticket, this year, means a reaction. It is already seen in the increased registration which determines the fact that if this town goes for license this year, it will be due largely to the placing of an American ticket in the field. The prohibitionists had cause, last year, to regret their action in refusing to elect B. Frank Southwick. History will surely repeat itself, should the caucus candidates be defeated.

FOR WANT of fresher and more interesting news, the local representative of the Salem Call, last Monday, made an attempt to fill his column with a critique upon a PRESS editorial of last Saturday, which had been distorted by the perverse types. The error referred to by the Call, was the word "turpitude," which was marked for change in the proof, but for some unaccountable reason was not changed by the compositor, and appeared in our columns, like some other errors in the same editorial viz: "roasts" for roster, and "month" for mantle.

"We are willing to be forgiven" for our errors, and we would respectfully call the attention of our esteemed contemporary, to a certain passage of the scriptures, relating to the "moat" and "beam," and suggest that when he has occasion to spell Saturday he should neither use an n nor a "turned" u. It isn't so printed in the dictionary.

THE VOTERS of this town have become pretty familiar with the Australian system of ballot, which is to be used on Monday in the town elections for the first time. But the ballot to be used Monday is a different affair from that used at State elections. There are more officers to be voted for, and what is liable to create more confusion, the number to be voted for on the different boards is more than one.

In Salem, in Beverly, in all towns and cities where this system has been in use, there has been a large discrepancy between the total number of ballots and the number counted for the candidates. This is because of errors in voting, throwing out the ballot, and it is against this that we desire to caution our readers. Of the use of the cross there is no longer need for explanation. But in voting for the officers, the Board of Selectmen, for instance, the name of each candidate presented is printed in alphabetical order. Against each one is put the words, "citizens nomination," or "nomination papers," or both, as the case may be. And at the head of the division are the words, "vote for five." It is the same through the rest. The point to which attention is directed is that the cross must be placed against five and NO MORE. If you vote for four those crosses will be counted. If you vote for six, the ballot for that board will be thrown out. It therefore behooves all to be careful. DON'T VOTE FOR MORE CANDIDATES than the ticket calls for. If you vote for less, you may omit to vote for one of your candidates, but it will be better than to have the vote lost. In voting for license or no license, put a cross against the system you favor. It is a very important matter. We cannot be expected to advise you how to vote, but we hope you will so vote that your vote will be recorded.

A RECENT scurrilous and malevolent attack upon certain members of the Board of Selectmen has come under our observation, to which we might feel disposed to make some specific reply were it not for the obscurity of its origin, and the well-known motives that prompted its publication. Like many other tirades upon the same and other respected citizens of the town, it is lacking in the courage of direct charge. Evidences and mysterious innuendoes constitute the substance of the article, which if sufficiently tangible for ordinary comprehension, would doubtless prove as false as a certain statement regarding the deposition of a former town counsel at the expiration of his first year, which statement is false in every fibre and tissue, as anybody may learn by consulting the town records for the year 1888.

Such attacks simply prove the truth of the old proverb—"The curses of the wicked are like the blessings of the just." We recall no political aspirant who has ever been patronized by the sheet in question but has had reason to say "Deliver me from my enemies," and none who have been the subject of its attack, that have sustained anything but victory, and justification.

Although the gentlemen nominated upon the American ticket are respected citizens and entitled to the confidence of the public equally with any of the present Board, we have no doubt of the re-election of the entire Board of Selectmen as at present constituted. Revolutions in town officers for the sake of change alone, has never been the policy of this town, and we see no indication of a general, concerted movement to depart from the established custom of retaining faithful and efficient officials in place, at the present ones.

WE CANNOT believe that the movement which has caused a ticket to be placed before the citizens of this town, marked distinctly as an American ticket, by nomination papers, has the support of the people to any considerable extent. In fact we have very positive assurance that it does not. Men of high standing in this community, men who are and have been life long republicans and Americans, have freely confessed to us their regret at the movement, and have characterized it, without hesitation, as impolitic and unwise.

The introduction of politics in a town election, or any municipal election, is always a mistake. It is always an error of judgment, even when the controlling party outnumbered its opponents by so large a majority that it is able to snap its fingers at the opinions of the other side. Still more impolitic is it when the parties are comparatively evenly divided. And however much this may be deplored, the introduction of race prejudice into town elections is infinitely worse. This, however, is what has been done here, and it deserves to be stamped with opprobrium by all good citizens who have the welfare of the town at heart.

We say this without reference to the character, ability or fitness for office of the gentlemen who have been placed in nomination at the instance of the originators of the movement. It is the idea itself which is wrong—utterly wrong. And all the more so because the class of citizens, American citizens, discriminated against so pointedly and decidedly, is a representative one in this town—representative because of its large growth at present, and of its prospective growth in the future. There is no pretence that the candidates for office, from our Irish American citizens, nominated at the citizen's caucus, men, too, who are not without a record in the service of the town, are incompetent or disqualified. If such a claim was made, there would be justice in it. Our Irish American citizens make no claim to a representation in the offices of the town, that is not supported by qualifications that render the candidate competent for the position to which he is nominated. But no intimation of incompetency is presented or hinted at. These gentlemen are ignored simply and only because they are Irish Americans. On this ground the issue is presented, and on this ground alone it must be met.

Under these circumstances, therefore, no word of condemnation can be too strong. As has been more than once stated in this paper, the growth of opposition to the public school system in this State, among the lay members of the Catholic Church, has been intensified and increased materially by the bigotry of those who have so persistently misrepresented the attitude of this class of citizens. Liberty is due from both sides. And the same is true in the election of citizens to the offices of a municipality. Merit, not politics or race prejudice, should be the only test required by the voter. And if re-action comes, if the members of the body politic to which these citizens belong are tempted to take action which would be unwarranted under other circumstances, the cause would not be far to seek. It is simply a natural result, and because of this tendency, the action of these gentlemen, who, in a moment of thoughtlessness, we must believe, took such an unwise step, is all the more to be deplored, and should meet with the Waterloo which it justly deserves.

Now, then, who are these men who would be displaced by the success of the ticket put in the field as distinctively American? In the first place, there is Philip H. Coleman who has been a member of the Board of Selectmen for years. What has he done, or omitted to do, that he should be left from the ticket? He has served the town faithfully, and to the best of his ability; he is a conscientious temperance man, is the enemy of all wrong doing, and one of the business men of the town. There is Thomas J. Relihan, who has not only been on the Board of Assessors for many years, but a Selectman as well, and has been an equally efficient member of both boards. He is one of the best Assessors of this board or previous boards, and this is admitted by any citizen who has had occasion to deal with this board. The town will make a grave error if Mr. Relihan is not re-elected to the position to which he has been nominated by the citizen's caucus. The same applies to his service on the Board of Health. There is P. H. O'Connor, who, although an Irish American citizen, is one of the strongest friends of the public school system in town. He has been an efficient, courteous and interested member of the School Board. Yet, today, when it is difficult to find men who will serve on this board, it is proposed to displace a faithful public servant for no other reason than that he belongs to the class of citizens which this movement purposes to taboo. There is James Fallon, who has been a member of the Overseers of the Poor for a long term of years. And of all the ridiculous things proposed by this wholesale displacement, the dropping of the name of Mr. Fallon is the most foolish. He is one of the most liberal and courteous of men. We doubt if he has an enemy in town. Then there are the two constables, Messrs Crowley and Sweeney, admitted by every one at all cognizant with the workings of the police force, to be among its most efficient members. I was at the instance of the Law and Order League that the services of Mr. Crowley were required. He is a consistent temperance man, and an efficient whose services the town could ill afford to lose. The same is true of Mr. Sweeney. And we bizard the assertion that, should the advocates of this ill advised scheme of displacement succeed in electing every one of their candidates for the office of Selectmen, these two men would be among the first to be selected as members of the police force.

The duty of all well disposed citizens is clear. This movement should be condemned—and openly. Not a cross should be placed against a single name nominated by this clique, and this without reference to the qualifications of the candidates. Under ordinary circumstances we should not feel warranted in saying this, but this is not an ordinary case. There have been some withdrawals—as well from the citizens caucus nominees as the others. It is not lawful to remove their names from the ticket. But to prevent the election of any of the clique candidates, vote for these men, even if they have declined. Elect them. Then they can decline, and the choice of the citizen's will elect new men in their stead. Vote for the nominees of the citizen's caucus. They are not new or untried men. They have served the town faithfully. Why displace them for new men? Least of all, why displace them on account of religious or race prejudice? We feel sure that our citizens will do their duty, and that the efforts of this small band of so-called politicians will ignominiously fail.

THE SALEM NEWS by its business enterprise and tact, has attained a large circulation in this vicinity, and despite the disagreeable features that are incident to all the penny dailies, which to secure well filled columns, make use of baseless sensations, impudent interviews and a deluge of mere twaddle, it fairly well fills its place, as a medium of news. But, in our opinion, it quite mistakes its vocation, and overestimates its capacity when it attempts the role of an instructor in ethics. Few people, we fancy, think of consulting a penny daily for moral precepts or guidance. Particularly is this true in relation to the question of license in the neighboring towns. The assurances of the News to its readers that no license is a failure in this town, that it is a farce, and that a majority of the voters have been disgusted with it, are ill founded in fact and entirely uncalled for by any journal outside the town, though the people of Peabody accept some papers as purveyors of news, it by no means follows that they recognize them as moral leaders. The citizens of Salem may, if they wish, follow such precept and thus continue their city as a rumshop centre for Southern Essex, but the neighboring towns should be spared these afflictions.

Do Not Fail to Read This.

Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., the eminent and successful specialist in the cure of nervous and chronic diseases, gives to all sufferers from this class of complaints the privilege of consulting him by letter free of charge.

The Doctor is the discoverer and proprietor of the well known nerve cure, Dr. Greene's Nerve, and his standing as a specialist is so high that no sufferer should neglect to take advantage of this opportunity.

You can send for his symptom blank to fill out, or write him a description of your disease, and he will return his opinion of your case, the chances of cure, and advice in regard to treatment. In his carefully considered letter he will fully explain your disease and give you a perfect understanding of all its symptoms, all without expense to you. He has made a specialty of treatment of patients at a distance through letter correspondence, and his success in curing chronic diseases, even cases given up as hopeless, is unprecedented. By writing to him, you will be almost sure of a cure.

SCROFULA

Is that impurity of the blood which produces unsightly lumps or swellings in the neck; which causes running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which develops ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or "humors;" which, fastening upon the lungs, causes consumption and death. It is the most ancient of all diseases, and very few persons are entirely free from it.

How Can It Be CURED

By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the remarkable cures it has accomplished, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. If you suffer from scrofula, try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"Every spring my wife and children have been troubled with scrofula, my little boy, three years old, being a terrible sufferer. Last spring he was one mass of sores from head to foot. We all took Hood's Sarsaparilla, and all have been cured of the scrofula. My little boy is entirely free from sores, and all four of my children look bright and healthy." W. B. Resolutions of Respect.

WHEREAS, it has been the will of Almighty God to remove from our midst our esteemed brother, Eben S. Howard, and while bowing in humble submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well, we cannot but mourn the loss of one who by his kindly manner has endeared himself to his associates, therefore be it

RESOLVED, That the Peabody Veteran Firemen's Association has lost an energetic and faithful member, and one who was ever ready to advance its interests.

RESOLVED, That we tender to the relatives of our deceased brother our heartfelt sympathy in the great loss sustained by them, and assure them that the memory of one, who in his home life was an affectionate husband and kind father, will ever be cherished by his comrades.

RESOLVED, That a copy of these resolutions be spread on the records of the association and a copy sent to the family of the deceased and also published in the Salem News and Peabody Press.

LITERARY NOTES.

The Indian War and Sherman's Obsequies.

Pages of pictures of the Indian war and the late General Sherman's obsequies at St. Louis are given in this week's issue of Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper. There is a full-page of beautiful specimens of amateur photography: two delightful character sketches, one by Shepard and one by Clendinst; a full-page picture of the fire alarm signals in New York during the recent total suspension of the wire service, and an illustration of the funeral of Admiral Porter. It contains also special articles on the Indian question, fashion, life insurance, bonds, and money matters in Wall Street. Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper appears in both German and English. Get a copy at your newsdealer's for ten cents.

The March Arena opens with a critical essay by Prof. Alfred Henneguin, on "The Drama of the Future." Rev. Chas. F. Deems, D. D., LL. D., who has for so long been identified with the Church of the strangers, of New York City, writes on "Evolution and Morality," taking the position maintained by conservative orthodoxy. Prof. Joseph Rodas Buchanan contributes an essay of great force on "Nationalization of the Land as First Presented." This contribution will doubtless call forth much comment. Rabbi Solomon Schindler discusses immigration, this being the third paper of a series on emigration and kindred topics, written by this profound thinker for The Arena. The Rev. Howard McQuerry, so well known on account of his fearless yet thoughtful work on "Evolution and Christianity," writes on "Shelley the Sceptic." Albert Ross, the author of "Thou Shalt Not," writes on "What is Immoral in Literature," arguing that a revelation of the actual conditions of society, depicting the fact that the wages of sin is death, and containing a strong plea for a higher moral standard, is not only not immoral but is severely moral, as well as necessary, if any positive reform is to be consummated; but the works which make vice all too such as the books that make boys desire to be train robbers or thieves, are distinctively immoral. C. Van D. Cheno-weth contributes a well-written paper on the wonderful discoveries being made by students of psychology, and which promise to reveal truths of great moment at an early date. W. D. McCrackan, of New York writes on "The Swiss Referendum," a paper of great interest, as it gives in an interesting style a description of the workings of what has been termed the most perfect republic in the world. Henry A. Hartt, M. D., argues at length that drunkenness is a crime, and should be punished as such. One of the most interesting papers in this issue is entitled "The Malungeons: a Forgotten People." It is contributed by Will Allen Dromgoole, a young Tennessee author of great promise, who re-discovered this strange people, and has spent many weeks in their midst. A full-page picture of a typical Malungeon accompanies this paper. The story for this month is contributed by Hamlin Garland. It is a vivid sketch of western life, entitled "The Test of Elder Pill." The No-Name paper this month is a poem of some length, entitled "By the River." It is said to be written by a well-known magazine essayist. The editor contributes short papers on "Home Influence and the Child," "An Object Lesson in Freedom," "Class Interests and the Rights of the People," and "Herbert Spencer's Arrangement of Class Medical Laws." From the above it will be seen that The Arena for March contains a remarkably varied and inviting table of contents. The contributors also are marked by deep thought, and represent a reflex of the best ideas of the day, both among liberal and conservative thinkers.

No literary announcement of the year is of greater interest to the general public than that of a comprehensive Life of General Sherman, which is about to be published and sold through agents by the noted house of Hubbard Brothers, of Philadelphia. Admirable biographies of Grant and Sheridan, complete to the time of their death, are already familiar to the public, but a life of the third great commander, to finish the series, has been lacking. The various biographies of Sherman hitherto published have necessarily been incomplete; and even his own memoirs, written in 1875, said almost nothing of his intensely interesting early life, and not a word, of course, of the more than twenty years of social activity and fraternity with old comrades since the war.

The work which is now to be issued will splendidly supply the widely felt demand for a history of the great strategic commander. It is being written by General O. O. Howard, a man of fine literary attainments, who knew Sherman better than any other of his comrades now living, and ranked next but one to him in the army, and by Willis Fletcher Johnson, whose ability as a historian is familiar to the reading public of America through his former unusually popular works, which have had millions of readers, and the sales of their vast editions enriched an army of book agents. That this history of Sherman, the last of the great Generals, is not to be doubted.

The story of this great General's career is of a marvellous march from the mountains of time to the sea of eternity. Of the three great war heroes, Sherman was by far the most interesting personality. He was best known to the public and the best loved for his genial disposition and warm sympathy with the popular heart. He has joined his illustrious compeers in the eternal bivouac of the dead. His is a life of study—to emulate—and is a profound inspiration. The forthcoming volume will tell the whole story of his marvellous career, and from the authorship engaged upon it, we are assured it will be told in a way that will enthral the reader from first to last. It is a book every American will want and one every American youth should read. It will doubtless be the best life of the great chieftain published, and we predict for it wonderful popularity.

The March Century has a third installment of the famous Talleyrand Memoirs. This installment deals with Napoleon Bonaparte, Josephine, and the Emperor Alexander.

The California series this month takes up the Fremont explorations, first with a brief paper giving a resume of the five explorations; second, with a paper by Mrs. Fremont on the "Origin of the Fremont Explorations," and third, with a posthumous narrative of the terrible experiences of the fourth expedition under the title of "Rough Times in Rough Places," it being a personal record of Micajah McGee of Mississippi. Included are portraits of Thomas H. Benton, the late George Bancroft, from a daguerreotype. Mrs. Fremont from a miniature, and a drawing of Fremont's address to the Indians at Fort Laramie. To the department of "Californians," Professor Royce of Harvard College contributes some new documents on the Bear Flag affair taken from the private papers of Commander John B. Montgomery of the Portsmouth, stationed at San Francisco during the conquest of California.

A charming feature of this number is a curious story by Edith Robinson called "Penhallow," with two full-page pictures by W. H. Low. Dr. Eggleston's serial, "The Faith Doctor," is continued, as well as "Colonel Carter of Cartersville," and there is a strictly true story, "The Mystery of the Sea" by Prof. Butolph, and a humorous skit, "The Utopian Perfect Cookery.

Politer," by David Dodge. Mr. Rockhill gives the last instalment of his account of journeyings through Eastern Tibet and Central China.

Among the poets of this number are Celia Thaxter, Edgar Fawcett, Rose Hawthorne Lathrop, and the late Charles Henry Luders.

St. Nicholas for March contains serials by J. T. Trowbridge and Noah Brooks, which are sturdy and healthful, as are the illustrations to them by Henry Sandham and W. A. Rogers, respectively. "Effe's Visit to Cloudland" will be welcomed by parents who wish to find stories to read to their insatiable audiences, and the same purpose may be served by "Huz and Buz," by Laura E. Richards, by "Pauline and the Policeman," and by "Liver Hereford's characteristic drama, "Good-Bye; a Woodland Episode." For the same young auditors there are verses and jingles, as the "Excellent Emu," "The Turtle and the Katydid," "What and Where?," "A Little Boy named Johnny," "An Opinion," by John Kendrick Bangs; "Cause and Effect," by Margaret Vandegrift; "Bobby's Christmas Dream;" "His Profession;" the "Alphabet Song," and the wonderful horse, "Linus."

New England Magazine, Published at 86 Federal St., Boston Mass., for March, contains the following articles:

Harvard College during the war of the Rebellion, illustrated. Captain Nathan Appleton. Some recollections of Slavery, by a former slaveholder, M. V. Moore. The Early History of Electricity in America, illustrated. George Herbert Stockbridge. Rachael Maloon. Marion Douglas. Window Gazing. Mrs. Henrietta L. T. Walcott. THE GREATEST STRIKE.

Among the great strikes that of Dr. Miles in discovering his New Heart Cure has proven itself to be one of the most important. The demand for it has become astonishing. Already the treatment of heart disease is being revolutionized, and many unexpected cures effected. It soon relieves short breath, fluttering, pains in side, arm, shoulder, weak and hungry spells, oppression, swelling of ankles, smothering and heart dropsy. Dr. Miles' book on Heart and Nervous Diseases free. The unequalled New Heart Cure is sold and guaranteed by William T. Lee, also his Restorative Nervine for headache, fits, sprees, not flashes, nervous chills, opium habit, etc.

The Public Dinner.

The public dinner was never such an "institution" as it is now in the United States. Dr. Johnson said that dinner lubricates business, and certainly with us it lubricates every kind of business. The traditions of the Northern races are of tremendous eating and drinking in the halls of Odin, and their spirit has not been lost in the later day. Our American feasts are more frequent and more sumptuous, and, if we may trust our British brethren, more brilliant in the speech-making, than their own. Indeed, Thackeray's sly sketch of the dinner and the speeches of the Ancient and Worshipful Guild of Bellows-makers suggests a blank and stately formality, comical by its dullness, of which an American public dinner gives no hint.

But we are always in danger of expanding everything to the continental scale. A public dinner has its essential conditions and limitations, and it may be magnified beyond enjoyment. A barbecue, where an ox is roasted whole in the open air, and the crowd of people is popularly measured by the acre, may be a festival full of enjoyment of a certain kind, but it is not the kind of pleasure afforded by a public dinner which is not barbecue. The conditions of such a feast are obvious. They are chiefly a good dinner served promptly and hot, but not of many courses, a brilliant hall, not too large, and a company which can readily hear without effort upon the part of the speakers.

There are other equally indispensable conditions. People go to a public dinner for two reasons—one is to eat a good dinner in pleasant company; the other to hear good speeches. But the social excitement of eating and drinking and smoking disposes to conversation, and there is no such sense of propriety in maintaining the attitude of listening at a dinner as in church, or at a lecture, or even a public meeting. If the speech is dull, the tables begin to murmur; and when the guests are full—of eloquent speech, be it understood—they are apt to chat and to leave the tables at their own sweet will.

The larger the hall and the greater the difficulty of hearing, the more certain are inattention and confusion. The longer the list of speeches, the more unhappy the fate of the later speakers. Then the public dinner is becoming more and more like a play, and, as at a play,

"the eyes of men,

After a well-graced actor leaves the stage,
Are ill bent on him that enters next,
Thinking his prattle to be tedious."

The stars at the table, as on the stage, are heeded and heard, but there is often short shrift for others who are of no less parts, but parts not yet known or acknowledged.—Harper's Magazine.

THE NIHILIST.

Some time before the tragic death of the late czar one of the most important men in the empire was Prince Michel, but reasons of state will not permit the designation of his illustrious family name.

During a sojourn in Paris, just after the war, he met at one of the receptions of the Princess Lisa General de Contremont's charming daughter, whom the Parisian world, just arising from its ashes, knew under the name of "the beautiful Madeleine." She was also as poor as she was beautiful.

Michel was smitten in spite of his forty years and his long formed resolution of celibacy. For fifteen years he had withstood the blandishments of designing young ladies and the maneuvers of their aristocratic mammams, who had thrown themselves, so to speak, at his head as bouquets of roses and lilies are thrown over the footlights at a favorite diva.

One evening Madeleine said to the widow of the hero of Gravelotte, "Mother, would you be satisfied by my becoming a princess?"

"No, indeed, my daughter, for you were born beautiful enough to become a queen."

In fact, in the most select assembly such a perfect type of womanhood was seldom seen. I saw this superb creature at the opera one evening shortly after her marriage, and I will wager that there were fifty young men in the orchestra who were more or less in love with her through the whole gamut of love, from respectful admiration to the grand passion. You can imagine how they listened to the music; it might as well have been from the score of "Mireille" as from the "Huguenots," and they would have been none the wiser.

This was probably the most memorable evening in the young life of Madeleine, for she felt herself avenged in the eyes of the men who would now gladly impoverish themselves for one hour of her favor, but who had formerly considered her too poor to be the object of theirs. From her proud elevation, though scarcely seeming to smile, in the depths of her being she vibrated from head to foot with the exultation of triumph, and her cold brilliance radiated their admiration as diamonds radiate light. She saw in the elegant audience many beautiful women, but she felt herself to be the most beautiful woman there.

On this particular evening an American lady in one of the boxes, many times a millionaire, but not pretty, said: "I do not hope to resemble the Princess Michel, for that would be to expect too much, but only to have her teeth I would give my hotel in the Champs Elysees and all it contains, including the contents of my jewel box; for with such teeth one need not be pretty—one has but to yawn or smile and the world is at one's feet."

"Yes," replied a diplomat, "but I fear the princess will have occasion to yawn oftener than to smile, for his excellency, her husband, has the air of being neither agreeable nor amusing. I imagine the princess will regret Paris many times."

Indeed the prince, even at the time of his marriage, was not an agreeable man, and some years later he was still less so, to the sorrow of the princess be it said. He owed it to the coquetry of his wife to be as jealous as a tiger, and to the favor of the czar to become minister of the police, and the result of his position did not serve to render him more amiable. However, he had found the opportunity to utilize his public functions in aid of his private jealousy. He used his wife's coachman and the servant who opened the door to further his ends, and his emissaries among the police soon placed in his hands all sorts of amorous declarations addressed to his wife, in every strain of ardent and passionate avowal.

However, the flood of correspondence soon slackened, not because the princess was less seductive, but because she was indifferent or surfeited, and those who had confided to the post or telegraph their hopes and fears soon found themselves the victims of the most unexpected and various ill fortune, and began to conjecture that either the princess had the evil eye, or that the eyes of the prince were too good. The correspondence only revealed to his excellency that his wife was a harmless coquette, and this discovery brought a relative satisfaction. But the exactions of the czar in regard to the nihilists now left him little time to protect the virtue of his wife, and judge of his ineffable surprise when one day the following letter reached his hands, of which also he recognized but too well the handwriting, though it was signed by only a single initial:

"It appears the emperor will set out sooner than was expected for Varsovie; hold yourself then in readiness to start at the earliest warning, for who knows when we will find again so favorable an opportunity?"

"I do not wish to conceal from you the difficulties of the undertaking. Arrange your plans then for success without delay. You will present yourself to me as a friend of my family, traveling in Russia for your pleasure. Call upon my mother before you set out; she will give you some commission for me which will serve as an introduction in case of need."

The unhappy prince was beside himself when he had finished reading this horrible letter. Then this conspiracy, which he fought night and day with sword, with prison and with exile; this pitiless war of armed monsters against the life of a single man, had its origin at his fireside! It was his own wife, his beautiful Madeleine, who said to the assassin, "Behold the hour; be ready to strike!" What fatality had armed his foreign wife against his sovereignty? This woman had everything—youth, beauty, wealth, admiration. Yet she was a Nihilist.

What more did she want? What stupendous hatred urged her to this crime at the risk of imprisonment, exile or death? Did the snows of Siberia tempt her erring feet? Was there infatuation in the cord that might strangle her ivory throat? What could he do? He thought of killing his wife, then himself, and leaving the public to conjecture a case of conjugal infamy as the least of evils. Then he thought of throwing himself at the feet of the czar, and, after divulging everything, flying with the guilty woman. But the sentiment of duty made him pause. He held the clew to a conspiracy; it was necessary to unravel the whole plot, and for this reason the letter must be allowed to reach its destination. The assassin could be thus made to betray himself.

Already the name of this man was known to the minister—Nicholson—some Englishman or American, perhaps, an expert in dynamite, or simply a Russian student who had assumed a false name. The letter was sent, and the same evening the prince accompanied his wife to the opera, where, pale, trembling and feverish, he appeared fifteen years older. She was more charming and admired than ever.

"Are you ill, Michel?" inquired Madeleine, as seated in their carriage they drove homeward.

"Why do you ask that question?" replied her husband, with a strangely somber air.

"Why? Because you have not appeared jealous this evening," she said, smiling.

At the end of a week the minister remarked to his wife, without seeming to attach any importance to the statement, "It is on Tuesday that the czar sets out from St. Petersburg." "Ah," said Madeleine, seeming scarcely to have heard her husband. And then she murmured, "But the papers gave another date." Desiring to deceive the accomplice of Nicholson, for he had his plan, the minister replied, "Yes, it is necessary to thwart those who may have designs against the life of the emperor." Then he spoke of casual things, covertly admiring the strength of soul of this unworthy woman. The very same day convinced the minister that his ruse had succeeded, when the following dispatch was handed to him addressed by the princess, to whom it is easily divined:

It is for Tuesday. Be punctual.

Tuesday passed, and it may well be believed that neither the czar nor his minister left the capital. Madeleine suddenly became very uneasy at the announcement of his pretended change. On the afternoon of the following day a stranger, richly dressed and decorated with an enormous rosette, presented himself at the palace of the prince.

"Whom do you wish to see?" inquired the obsequious flunkey, who had received his orders from his master.

"Madame the Princess de Contremont. Present my compliments, and inform her that I am the bearer of a message from her mother. I am Dr. Nicholson."

"You are expected, sir," replied the servant, "but madame is at this moment visiting a friend, and has left orders to have you conducted to her. The carriage will be ready in a moment."

The carriage drew up and the man entered with Nicholson, taking his seat beside him without as much as asking permission. Nicholson's wonder at the fellow's presumption was of short duration, for after a rapid drive of a quarter of an hour the self styled doctor found himself in one of the strongest prisons of St. Petersburg, and if he was expected it certainly was not by the princess. In a slovenly sort of reception room, filled with armed police, a personage whom he did not know, and who was the prince himself, interrogated him with a want of respect to which poor Nicholson was not accustomed.

"It is infamous!" he cried, struggling in his bewilderment to defend himself. "I reached Paris only this morning, and have not spoken three words to any one, and when I present myself to the princess I am arrested and carried off to prison like a common thief."

"You know the princess, then?" the minister inquired coldly.

"Know her! I have known her since she was an infant. Here is a letter from her mother, the widow of a great general. Besides, I am an American citizen and protest!"

"Examine this man carefully!" interrupted the high functionary, without seeming to hear the doctor.

Nothing to excite suspicion was found on Nicholson, except a little box carefully wrapped up in many envelopes of fine paper. Could it be an infernal machine? An expert from the torpedo school, who usually accompanies the minister on such occasions, untied the package with scientific precaution. The roomful of assistants were very nervous and stood around with pallid faces, evidently awaiting a terrible explosion. Nothing abnormal was revealed, only the expert, with a singular smile, handed the open box to the prince, who, after a hasty glance at the contents, hurriedly thrust it in his pocket.

Then turning to Nicholson he demanded, "You are?"

"An American dentist, sir; very much pressed for time, as my client is this moment waiting for me."

Five minutes later Nicholson was in the carriage again, having this time for a companion the prince himself, who loaded him with apologies.

"But," said the husband of the beautiful Madeleine, "how did it happen that I never discovered anything myself?"

"Your excellency," proudly replied the American, "if you had been able to discover anything, such a dentist as Nicholson would not merit his great reputation."

"Then the teeth of the princess?"

"Are false, my prince. When Mme. de Contremont was young she was thrown from her horse and sustained an injury which ruined her teeth, and it was myself who constructed for her the most perfect set of teeth that ever left my hands. But these becoming worn I was summoned to Paris to adjust a new set in your absence."

The public never heard of the adventure, but it was duly observed that the prince appeared to be less in love with his wife than formerly.—From the French of Leon de Tinsan, by Francis M. Livingston, for New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Lodgings for London's Poor.

Gen. Booth wishes the lord mayor to take a leaf out of the book of the Paris municipality and fit up, or allow the Salvation Army to fit up, "any building or buildings such as may be under the control of the corporation," to serve as a night shelter during the bitter weather for "those whose sleeping place is the open street and whose hearth is the cold stone pavement of our bridges." If the lord mayor will thus provide beds for outcast London the general will do something in the way of board.

Surely, before the city fathers are asked to make a dormitory of the Guildhall the city churches ought to take the first step. If there were mattresses in the pews and shakedown along the aisles the edifices would be serving a good many more of those for whom they were built than they see anything of at present either by day or night, and the idea would not fit in badly with Christianity, whether it tallied with political economy or not. In France they are just voting £80,000 to relieve the distress in large towns, and are about to do the same by country districts.—Pall Mall Budget.

A Queer Old Lady.

Mrs. Jane McKeene, an old lady in Lewiston, who was recently taken to the insane asylum, had been very eccentric for years while working in the cotton mills, and a number of stories are told of her peculiarities. At one time she had a lot of cockroaches in a box near her looms, which she would feed regularly every day. Whether they ate the food provided them by their benefactress is not known, but she took good care of them, and they increased in numbers until at last the superintendent discovered them and had them removed.

The old lady cried bitterly that her pets—and whoever had such pets before, were removed. They say she used to drop a silver coin in the canal each day, which she said went to feed her husband and boy, who were drowned at sea. Her boy's clothes, which she carried under her arm, she never parted with. Every morning she took the bundle to her work and each night returned with it.—Bangor (Me.) Commercial.

The Uncertainties of Fortunes.

"You never can tell," said a gentleman, "when you have a good thing offered you in oil. I was offered the half of the McGeagh six acres lease in the Wildwood field for $800. I was afraid of it and refused to invest. Anybody now with half an eye can see that I made a great big mistake. The two wells on the six acres came in at the rate of about 200 barrels an hour, and my receipts for one day would have been more than many men in Pittsburgh make in a year. Oil development is a great gamble at best, but I regret now that I didn't gamble about $800 on that little lease."—Pittsburg Post.

Alaska as a Fruit Section.

Kodiak island, Alaska, is larger than some of the New England states, with a climate similar to that of Maryland, and is capable of supporting a large agricultural population. It is claimed that a part of the territory can be made a competitor of Oregon and Washington in the raising of the more hardy fruits, such as apples and cherries. The next steamer sailing for Sitka will carry in her cargo a large consignment of young apple trees.—San Francisco Chronicle.

The Oak and the Oyster.

"Tall oaks from little acorns grow." In the specimen shown us by Mr. George W. Cruikshank the little oak tree was growing right through the heart of an oyster shell. Whether the sprouting acorn had pierced the shell, or some accidental hand had bored the convenient orifice through which it might sprout, the deponent saith not. But certain it is the sturdy little oak had penetrated the crust of the impeding bivalve.—Cecil (Md.) Whig.

Smallpox Returns for Last Year.

The most notable disclosure in the mortality returns of the past year concerns smallpox. Whether Dr. Jenner be right or not is a point upon which vaccinators and anti-vaccinators will probably never be brought to agree, but the fact remains that in the big towns only ten deaths took place from smallpox in the twelve months, of which four were among the 5,000,000 inhabitants of the metropolis.—London Tit-Bits.

Just Like a Boy.

A gentleman of this city had placed a ladder against the eaves of his house for the purpose of cleaning the snow from the roof, and was horrified a short time after to find his 5-year-old boy had climbed up and was sitting on the upper round, monarch of all he surveyed. The father climbed up very cautiously to take him down, when the little fellow exclaimed, "Don't fall, pa; don't fall."—Newburyport (Mass.) Herald.

March Days.

The world today is a nun in gray.
And the wind is her waiting prayer
To God to give her a soul like May—Flower sweet, white and fair.

Still as a lake at even is the air;
The heavens are gloomed; I mark not anywhere
A hopeful sign hung out by plain or hill;
Only the etched brown trees and barren fields
Are there.

How like a madman's dream the thought of June!
Shall this warped pipe o'er swell with some soft tune

That calls for liquid stone and languorous skill,
The pipe lying prone beneath a summer moon?

The Mystery.

And made of the spring!
It seizes on this bleak and sullen thing Called March, and see!
Bland skies, faint odors as of slumbering flowers,

Faint bird songs in the bowers,
A soft south wind, and, cradled in the wood,
As sweet as womanhood,
As shy as any maiden lured by love,
The dimly flushed arbutus bloom above,
The harsh earth soon will peer,
And April airs be here!

Spring Silks.

The goodly hosts for Spring are here in their abundance and rich profusion.

Cheney Bros.' wash silks, light grounds with plain or brocaded stripes, and dainty flower patterns, 95 cents a yard.

Seventy different styles and colorings of printed India silks, black and light grounds, $1 a yard.

Plain Canada silks, all of 100 shades, 75 cents a yard.

Tussa or natural tint pongees, always desirable, $6.50 to $8 a dress pattern.

We have already sold more of these spring silks than in all last season, and have still twice as many as ever before. But it is well to make an early selection, as these goods are growing scarce in the market, and of many of our choicest there are no more to be had.

All last spring's $1 and $1.25 silks are now being closed out at 75 and 85 cents a yard.

A larger and better line of black silks of all weaves, at 50 cents to $2.00 a yard, than ever.

All silkdom has been searched to make our present stock.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL.

The BOSTON MUSEUM curtain rose last Monday, revealing the superb cast, in "Sunlight and Shadow," and the audience were treated to a delightful performance of that new comedy. Matinees are held Wednesday and Saturday afternoons.

The GRAND OPERA HOUSE closes the engagement of "Lost in New York," this evening. Monday, "The Fakir," a laughable comedy, will be installed.

"Blue Jeans" by Joseph Arthur, the author of "The Still Alarm," will commence an engagement. Monday, evening.

The "Hustler" has been warmly received at the BOSTON THEATRE this week. A matinee and evening performance today closes the engagement and next week "Yon Youson" is coming. If you want to enjoy a good hearty laugh, do not fail to see this comedy. It has been presented in New York and other cities this season, and proved a prodigious success.

This is the third and last month of "Ship Ahoy" at the PARK THEATRE.

Monday Mme. Sarah Bernhardt will commence an engagement of one week only, at the TREMONT THEATRE. Monday and Tuesday, "La Tosca"; Wednesday, "Camille," and Thursday, Friday and Saturday, "Cleopatra" will be presented. Sales opened brisk at the box office last Tuesday morning.

Fanny Davenport and Sarah Bernhardt are having a wordy quarrel about "Cleopatra," which serves to advertise the play. So far Bernhardt has the best of it. Time!

Gus Williams and John T. Kelley will appear next week, at the GLOBE THEATRE in "I. O. U."

The recent flood in Pittsburg, which at one time seriously threatened the new Duquesne Theatre, did but light damage to it. The house was only closed one night.

ESSEX COUNTY.

A blaze was discovered on Tuesday morning about 2 o'clock, in a barber shop at Gloucester. Upon entering the premises, the night police found flames issuing from the seat of a chair. The wall, floor, chairs and other articles were saturated with kerosene. It looked like incendiarism. The flames were quickly extinguished, and slight damage was done to the furniture, which was insured for $350.

The ship carpenters and blacksmiths at Gloucester notified their employers that on and after March 2, they would demand that 9 hours constitute a day's work and that the pay be $2.50.

At Tarr and Burnham's railways and at John and Hugh Bishop's the strike has been adjusted and the men are at work. At Parkhurst's railways the men refused to work as their demand was not granted. The blacksmiths' demands have been acceded to.

The election campaign in Canada contains unusual features of interest for Americans; the points of issue between the two parties, contending for supremacy, hinge upon the relation between Canada and the United States.

The Tory party, headed by the present Premier Sir John Macdonald, who has been in power since 1878, have adopted a policy of commercial restriction and political antagonism against us, which is unfortunate for both countries, as it leads to continuous disputes. The Liberal party has adopted as its platform a policy of reciprocity between the two countries. Thus in the pending election the people of Canada are called upon to decide whether they will hold to a policy of isolation, accompanied by a belligerent attitude against the United States, or whether, on the other hand, they will substitute for it a policy of friendliness toward us. The leader of the Tory party is Sir John Macdonald, who with the exception perhaps of Mr. Blaine and Mr. Cleveland, is the most picturesque political figure of the day upon this continent. He possesses a most wonderful likeness to the late Lord Beaconsfield. The members of his cabinet are so many puppets in his hands. To such an extent does his masterful spirit overshadow his followers, that the names of these gentlemen are rarely mentioned. Sir John Alexander Macdonald was born Jan. 11th 1815. He was educated at the Royal Grammar School, Kingston Ontario, and in 1835 was admitted to the Bar. In 1844 he was sent to Parliament from Kingston, being elected as a Conservative. He was appointed a member of the Executive Council and Receiver-General in May and Commissioner of Crown Lands in December 1847. The cabinet of which he was a member resigned in March, 1850, and the reformers under the lead of Messrs. LaSontaine Baldwin and Hincks, held the reins of power in Canada until September 1854. Difficulties connected with the lands reserved for a Protestant clergy, and other questions, led to a coalition in 1854. Mr. Macdonald was joining the Government as Attorney General in the cabinet of Sir E. P. Tache. But the Government was not able to command a sufficient majority and the proposition to federalize British America having been reported by a committee to the Legislative Assembly, a conference took place between the leaders of both sides, which resulted in a coalition, with the view of maturing and carrying a measure to unite in one government Canada and the marine provinces. On the death of E. P. Tache, in July, 1855, Mr. Macdonald again became Minister of Militia, which office, with that of Attorney-General of Upper Canada he continued to hold until the Confederation. This union of the provinces of British North America he was mainly instrumental in bringing about, having been a delegate to the Conference in Charlottetown in 1864, and in Quebec, in the same year; he was chairman of the London Colonial Conference 1866-67, when the act of union, known as the "British North American Act" was passed by the Imperial Parliament. On the 1st of July, 1867, when the new constitution came in force, Mr. Macdonald was called the Privy Council and appointed Minister of Justice and Attorney-General of the Canadas, an office he continued to fill until he and his Ministry resigned on the Pacific Railway charges, November 1875.

The conservative government of Sir John seems to have been sustained, although by a comparatively small majority, as a result of the election of Thursday. His majority of 50 members in a house of 250, has been reduced to 15 majority. The effect of the election upon the acts of the new house is looked forward to with interest.

FEMALE TROUBLES

Complicated with Liver and Kidney Diseases, Cured by Dana's Sarsaparilla after the most noted Physicians failed.

WASHINGTON MILLS, ME., Dec. 10, '87.

Gents:—For the last three years I have been suffering from a complication of Disorders, and have employed the most skillful physicians in the state, having been treated by local physicians at home and by physicians in Portland, Me. All my physicians told me my disease was so complicated, I could never get well. And certainly all my medical treatment gave me no relief. I had no appetite, bowels in a bad state, female trouble combined with liver and kidney trouble, so said my physicians. I grew so weak and reduced, I had done no work for one year, when Dr. Tribou, my physician, at the time, advised me to try DANA'S SARSAPARILLA.

Soon after trying it I began to feel a wonderful change. I commenced to gain in flesh and strength, and after taking three bottles I felt like another person. I now feel well and strong and am able to do all the work in a family of eight. I feel that I owe my health entirely to the wonderful curative power of DANA'S SARSAPARILLA. I prize this valuable remedy highly, and shall earnestly recommend it to all the afflicted.

I cannot say too much in its praise for all it has done for me.

Very truly yours,

Mrs. F. A. WENTWORTH.

Over three years have elapsed since the above letter was written. Mrs. Wentworth takes three or four bottles of DANA'S SARSAPARILLA each year to help Nature repel any attack upon the system of Health, and as a result, enjoys heaven's richest blessing—Good Health.

"Go thou and do likewise." Suffering one, remember we GUARANTEE A CURE. Will you try it?

The G-Clef Chorus Concert.

It is very creditable to the citizens of this town that so large an audience was present on Thursday evening, at the Peabody Institute, to listen to the concert by the G-Clef Chorus, under the direction of Mrs. Ferguson. The ladies depend in part upon the receipts of the annual concerts to defray the expenses of the rehearsals during the season, and the large patronage given is an encouragement to them to continue in study, and is further an assurance that our people look with pride upon the efforts of this organization. It is the third season of the chorus, and is the fourth public appearance of the ladies in this town. Last year, in addition to the concert in the Peabody Institute, a musicale was given in the chapel of the Unitarian Church, and the first season the concert was given under the auspices and patronage of Jordan Lodge F. & A. M., of this town.

To a considerable extent the membership of the chorus is the same as at the organization of the club. Of course a few of the original members have dropped out, and new ones have been added, and it should be the ambition of every lady capable of being a member of this chorus to associate herself with the organization and make it stronger and better as the years go by. It is a laudable work in which the ladies are engaged. It is not only to perfect themselves in music by the study of works of the great masters, but to lift up the standard of the art in this town—to make the people familiar with music of a high order, and encourage the younger generation to become proficient in musical education. To the accomplishment of this, the system of teaching music in the public schools is an invaluable aid. But in the ordinary course of events, nothing but the rudiments of music can be taught, and the foundation laid for the appreciation and further study of such music as has been invariably given under Mrs. Ferguson's direction.

The programme Thursday evening consisted of Henry Smart's cantata of the "Fisher Maidens," followed by some miscellaneous numbers. The club had the assistance, both in the cantata and later in the evening, of Mrs. Clara Butman, soprano, Miss S. Louise Bruce, contralto, and William J. Winch, tenor. It is the first time that a work of any extended character has been given, and some doubts were expressed by members of the chorus, early in the season, as to the ability of the club to undertake its public performance. But progress has been the constant motto of the directress, and much praise is due, not only to her, but to the members of the club, that her efforts were heartily seconded, and that after hard study and rehearsal, such a rendition was given, as it was the pleasure of the audience Thursday night to hear. The different numbers moved along smoothly—there were so few hitches in the programme that the ordinary listener was unaware of the difficulties which had to be overcome to accomplish the result. It is by no means an easy work. Two of the numbers require a double chorus, calling for a division of the club into two separate choirs with the four parts, and with an organization of the size of the G-Clef chorus, it is very commendable that it was done so well. The division appeared somewhat unequal, so much so as to be plainly manifest at times, but in any club a certain reliance must be placed upon a few leading voices, and the division is apt to bring uncertainty and lack of confidence. On the whole the difficulties attending this part of the performance were bravely overcome, and the addition of a little more piano, on the part of Mrs. Farrington would have been a still further aid.

The chief merit of the concert belongs unquestionably to the chorus. The cantata is a very melodious and attractive work, and there was noticeable a more careful attention to the baton than in previous concerts. There was a sympathy between the chorus and the directress, that is always pleasant to observe, and every movement of Mrs. Ferguson met with an instant response. In the numbers in Part II. the chorus showed a specially marked improvement. The "Sparrows twitter" was given unaccompanied; the shading was beautifully done, the crescendos and diminuendos were nearly perfect, and it would have been a pleasure to have heard some of the part songs previously given, rendered by the club in its present condition. There would have been, in our judgment, a great surprise awaiting the auditors. As far as the solos in the cantata were concerned, there was nothing to call for special mention. The accented solo parts were fairly well given, and the addition of Mrs. Ferguson in the trios made an ensemble which was a marked improvement over the rest of the numbers. They were the only ones given with artistic expression. The soprano solos are not difficult, with a single exception, but the lady to whom the part was assigned was unequal to the task, still at the same time she appeared to better advantage than in the hackneyed solo which came later in the programme. She has the questionable habit of sliding up to her notes, instead of attacking them with confidence, as she uses the portamento to excess. On a complimentary recall she gave a setting by Chadwick, of "Thou art like unto a flower."

Miss Bruce has a voice of remarkable compass and of beautiful quality, which we heard to best advantage in "It is I," by Pissuti. She relies too much upon her voice alone for effects, and does not articulate clearly, but she was enthusiastically received, and gave as an encore a ballad by Roedel. Mr. Winch gave two selections. He had a very severe cold, and was in no good voice. It was difficult for him to get through the first number, but he appeared to better advantage later. The artistic and refined style of his delivery was manifest to everyone yet, the renditions were not creditable, and for this he was not at fault. His only error was in attempting to sing at all. A large share of the audience, however, had heard him elsewhere, and were easily disposed to be charitable. Mr. Howells of Boston, accompanied him and Mrs. Butman, Mrs. Farrington playing for Miss Bruce and the chorus. Her accompaniments were never obtrusive, in fact, a little more prominence could have been given to them in the chorus with good effect. But the opposite is so often the case that a great deal of praise is justly her due. Mrs. Ferguson has good reason to be proud of the result of the concert. It was a credit to her, to the club itself and to the town, and we hope that another opportunity will be afforded, before the season closes, of hearing some of the part songs which have been previously given by the chorus. The concert must have been a financial success—for which we are glad—and it certainly was an artistic success in every way.

Death of David T. Winter.

David Thomas Winter, who for several years was a resident of Peabody, died of laryngitis, at the "Crowning-shield," Clifton, on Tuesday, after a protracted illness, at the age of 43 years. He was born in Birmingham, England, where he lived until about 21 years of age, when he came to America and resided for a time in New Jersey. He was a leather dresser by trade and followed that vocation until about the year 1880, when he invented a machine for measuring leather, a very ingenious device, and an improvement in principle over the Tapley machine, the patent on which was owned by the Standard Measuring Machine Company, with which corporation he became engaged in a long and expensive lawsuit that terminated in consequence of a failure of money to continue the contest, and practically drove Mr. Winter from the field. His invention was the only practical machine that had ever been placed on the market up to the time of the infringement suit and would have made him independent in a few years. Hundreds of his machines had been sold in all parts of the country, and it was while on a trip West in the interest of his measuring machine business that he became engaged in an altercation with a conductor of the Erie Railroad about a ticket, and was put off the train near Olean, N. Y., at night, in February, 1882, and sustained injuries which disabled him for life and caused intense suffering. Suit was brought against the railroad company in the Superior Court in this County, and tried at the December term of the same year, the company suffering its case to be defaulted, and the jury promptly returned a verdict for $2900 and costs, being substantially the whole amount sued for. In this suit, a car was attached as property of the company, and held for about a year, but finally released as it proved to be a leased car, belonging to the Car Trust Company. No way offering to satisfy the execution, a new suit was commenced for $10,000, funds being trusted in the hands of Massachusetts railroads, which was tried at Lawrence, in 1884, by Messrs. Geo. B. Ives and E. T. Burley. In this suit, a verdict was returned for $6780. A motion was then made for a new trial which was granted, and the case was removed to the United States Court, where it was again tried in 1886, by S. L. Dabney, of Boston, in connection with Mr. Ives. The trial lasted four days and a half, and the jury returned after being out half an hour and asked the Court if they could bring in a verdict for a larger sum than the ad damnum. On being informed that they could not, they again retired, and promptly returned a verdict for the full sum of $10,000. Some exceptions were taken by the company during the trial, which made it necessary to carry the case to the full bench of the United States Supreme Court, where they are now pending. The ad damnum has, however, been increased to $15,000, and as there is probably no legal foundation for the exceptions, they will be overruled and the verdict will stand; but the calendar of that court is so crowded, it is impossible to tell when the case will be reached. The amount held by the trustee process is about $3,000, and it is uncertain whether any more property of the company can be found to levy an execution upon.

Mr. Winter was a man of active mind and temperament and has produced a number of useful inventions since the failure of his measuring machine business, which was sold to the Union Leather Measuring Machine Co., in 1885, for about $5,000, that company effecting an arrangement whereby it was possible to resume the trade.

He was a man of genial disposition, and made hosts of friends. He was a member of Holten Lodge of Odd Fellows.

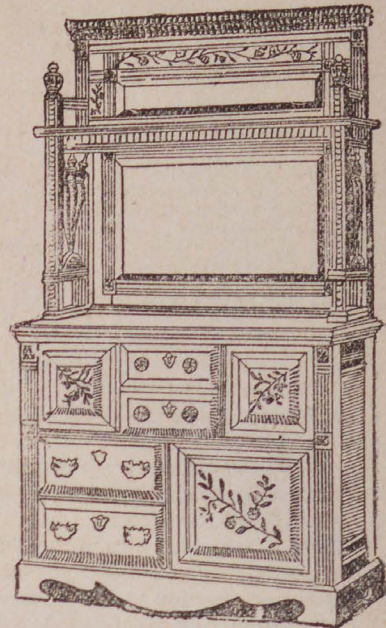

He leaves a widow and six young children to mourn his untimely end.

The long delays of the law, together with enormous expenses incident to his sickness and the loss of two children, has reduced his finances to the lowest ebb, and the family is reported to be in distressed circumstances. Holten Lodge has issued a relief circular for the benefit of the survivors, which it is hoped will be responded to liberally.

The funeral services took place yesterday afternoon from the Universalist church. The remains were placed in Monumental cemetery.

Why, hello, old boy; I haven't seen you since you were married. What are you doing now? Traveling for the house, I suppose? No, not exactly. Since the baby came I have become a floor walker.

Essex Institute.

The next lecture in the free course of the Essex Institute will be delivered in Plummer Hall on Monday evening March 16, at 8 o'clock, by Rev. E. O. Dyer of South Braintree, Mass. Subject: "The Appalachian Mountains." All interested are invited.

A Pleasant Surprise.

An agreeable surprise was given George Stevens at his store, on Saturday evening, by a number of regular visitors of his smoking room, in rear of the store, the occasion being his sixtieth birthday. About 10 o'clock he was summoned to his house, from his store, and there found a party waiting for him, headed by Daniel F. Buxton, who in a short speech presented the astonished storekeeper with a plush easy chair. Mr. Stevens being completely overcome with surprise, was unable to make any wordy reply, so he promptly opened a box of choice cigars which were appreciated more than any speech would have been.

Passion Play.

An audience of about 700 people listened to a very instructive and entertaining lecture on the Passion Play, by Thomas H. Cummings at the Town Hall, last Sunday evening. The lecture was finely illustrated by dissolving views, and appropriate music was rendered by the choir of St. John's Church. Mr. Cummings is a very eloquent speaker and he held the close attention of the audience for two hours. The Library and Lyceum Society, under whose auspices the lecture was held, will net a handsome sum as the result.

Electric Wires.

The Naumkeag Railway company appeared before the legislative committee this week to oppose the proposed bill for investing municipalities with the right to regulate electric poles and wires after location. A document has been forwarded by the Essex Co., approving the law. It seems quite probable that the committee will report in favor of the additional powers asked for by the cities and towns. Such an extension of municipal right to control and alter locations already granted, especially where rival companies come in conflict, as has been the case in Salem and Peabody, would be a great advantage to the general public.

THE FLOWERY ALCHEMIST.

Hist, oh, hist!
My pretty pale young violet,
Thy many a cheek uncover;
Lift that hood of fallen sky,
And my lips once more I'll wet
Against the dew ball of thine eye.
Hist, oh, hist!
So a leafy whisper said,
Underneath a sweetbriar shade,
Guess the lady blossom's lover!
'Twas the flowery Alchemist,
A stinging, gay, intriguing fellow,
The wildest bee in black and yellow.
Hist, oh, hist!
My pretty pale young violet!
Glowworm's lightning blind me
When I leave my bud's embrace,
When I traitorously forget,
Thy cerulean baby's grace.
Hist, oh, hist!
The very next night he told the tale
To a little lily of the vale,
And the poor young violet died of shame.
Oh, fie, thou flowery Alchemist!
Thou stinging, gay, intriguing fellow,
Thou wildest bee in black and yellow!
—Thomas Lovell Beddoes.

FOLLOWING THE SEA.

At the time of "the great earthquake of '68," said Mr. Swiddler—William Swiddler, of Calaveras—I was at Arica, Peru. I have not a map by me, and am not certain that Arica is not in Chili, but it can't make much difference; there was earthquake all along there.

Sam Baxter was with us; I think he had gone from San Francisco to make a railway or something. On the morning of the quake, Sam and I had gone down to the beach to bathe. We had shed our boots and began to moul, when there was a slight tremor of the earth, as if the elephant who supports it was pushing upward, or lying down and getting up again. Next, the surges, which were flattening themselves upon the sand and dragging away such trifles as they could lay hold of, began racing out seaward, as if they had received a dispatch that somebody was not expected to live. This was needless, for we did not expect to live.

When the sea had receded entirely out of sight we started after it, for, it will be remembered, we had come to bathe, and bathing without some kind of water is not refreshing in a hot climate.

For the first four or five miles the walking was very difficult, although the grade was tolerably steep. The ground was soft; there were tangled forests of seaweed, old rotten ships, rusty anchors, human skeletons and a multitude of things to impede the pedestrian. The floundering sharks bit our legs as we toiled past them, and we were constantly slipping down upon the flat fish strewn about like orange peel on a sidewalk. Sam, too, had stuffed his shirt front with such a weight of doubloons from the wreck of an old galleon that I had to help him across all the worst places. It was very dispiriting.

Presently, away on the western horizon, I saw the sea coming back. It occurred to me then that it did not wish it to come back. A tidal wave is nearly always wet, and I was now a good way from home, with no means of making a fire.

The same was true of Sam, but he did not appear to think of it in that way. He stood quite still a moment with his eyes fixed on the advancing line of water; then turned to me, saying very earnestly:

"Tell you what, William, I never wanted a ship so bad from the cradle to the grave! I would give more for a ship—more than for all the railways and turnpikes you could scare up! I'd give more than a hundred, thousand, million dollars! I would—I'd give all I'm worth for—just—one—little—ship!"

To show how lightly he could part with his wealth, he lifted his shirt out of his trousers, unbosoming himself of his doubloons, which tumbled about his feet, a golden storm.

By this time the tidal wave was close upon us. Call that a wave! It was one solid green wall of water, higher than Niagara Falls, stretching as far as we could see to right and left, without a break in its towering front! It was by no means clear what we ought to do. The moving wall showed no projections by means of which the most daring climber could hope to reach the top. There was no ivy; there were no window ledges. "Stay!—there was the lightning rod! No, there wasn't any lightning rod. Of course not!"

Looking despairingly upward, I made a tolerably good beginning at thinking of all the mean actions I had wrought in the flesh, when I saw projecting beyond the crest of the wave a ship's bowsprit, with a man sitting on it reading a newspaper! Thank fortune, we were saved!

Falling upon our knees with grateful gratitude, we got up again and ran—ran as fast as we could, I suspect; for now the whole forepart of the ship budged through the water just above our heads, and might lose its balance any moment. If we had only brought along our umbrellas!

I shouted to the man on the bowsprit to drop us a line. He merely replied that his correspondence was already very onerous, and he hadn't any pen and ink.

Then I told him I wanted to get aboard. He said I would find one on the beach, about three leagues to the southward, where the Nancy Tucker went ashore.

At these replies I was disheartened. It was not so much that the man withheld assistance as that he made puns. Presently, however, he folded his newspaper, put it carefully away in his pocket, went and got a line and let it down to us just as we were about to give up the race. Sam made a lunge at it and got it.

I laid hold of his legs, the end of the rope was passed about the captain, and as soon as the men on board had had a little grog we were hauled up. I can assure you that it was no fine experience to go up in that way, close to the smooth, vertical front of water, with the whales tumbling out all round and above us and the sword fishes nosing us pointedly with vulgar curiosity.

We had no sooner set foot on deck, and got Sam disengaged from the hook, than the purser stepped up with book and pencil—"Tickets, gentlemen."

We told him he hadn't any tickets, and he ordered us to be set ashore in a boat. It was represented to him that this was quite impossible under the circumstances; but he replied that he had nothing to do with circumstances—did not know anything about circumstances. Nothing would move him till the captain, who was really a kind hearted man, came on deck and knocked him overboard. We were now stripped of our clothing, chafed all over with stiff brushes, rolled on our stomachs, wrapped in flannels, laid before a hot stove in the saloon and strangled with scalding brandy. We had not been wet, nor had we swallowed any sea water, but the surgeon said this was the proper treatment. It is uncertain what he might have done to us if the tender hearted captain had not thrashed him into his cabin and told us to go on deck.

By this time the ship was passing the town of Arica, and we were about to go astern and fish a little, when she grounded on a hill top. The captain hove out all the anchors he had about him, and when the water went swirling back to its legal level, taking the town along for company, there we were, in the midst of a charming agricultural country, but at some distance from any seaport.

At sunrise next morning we were all on deck. Sam sauntered aft to the binnacle, cast his eye carelessly upon the compass and uttered an ejaculation of astonishment.

"Tell you, captain," he called out, "this has been a direr convulsion of nature than you have any idea. Everythin's been screwed right round. Needle points due south!"

"Why, you lubber!" growled the skipper, taking a look, "it pints directly to lardard, an' there's the sun dead ahead!"

Sam turned and confronted him with a steady gaze of ineffable contempt.

"Now who said it wasn't dead ahead?"

"—tell me that. Shows how much you know about earthquakes. 'Course I didn't mean just this continent, nor just this earth. I tell you, the whole thing's turned!"—From Collected Sketches.

A Saved Man Cries for His Hat.

"Yes," said an old lake captain, "a drowning man will catch at a straw. I have seen many illustrations thereof. Most people think the old proverb is merely a figure of speech, but it is a living truth."

"Is it true, captain," was asked, "that the first thing a rescued man thinks of is his hat?"

"Yes, sir," replied the captain, his face lighting up, "that is a fact, too. I have seen it emphasized many times in the course of my experience. Over and over again I have been called to the assistance of a drowning man. I would plunge in and rescue him just, let us say, at the last instant. Dragged on the dock, gasping for breath, his voice choked with water, the man, if he follows his instincts, will, as soon as he regains the least degree of strength, suddenly stretch his arms toward his head, then, missing his hat (usually lost in the struggle), he will cry out desperately, pointing to his hat floating down the river, 'Oh, save my hat! save my hat!'"

"And he will never think of himself, captain?"

"But seldom, sir," was the reply. "A rescued man is the most obstinate and headlong being imaginable. He wants to do all sorts of foolish things. He generally wants to rush up and be away before he has had time to recover his strength. He means well enough, no doubt, but he nearly always forgets to present his obligations in tangible form."—Detroit Free Press.

Who Originated the Upas Tree?

Perhaps the deffest artist in the department of fabrication was George Stevens, the Shakespearean commentator. Animated by an impish spirit of trickery, to which jealousy of rival antiquaries may have lent a spice of malice, he industriously devised cunning snares for their feet. He would, for example, disseminate fictitious illustrations of Shakespeare's text in order that Malone, who was his chief butt, might be entrapped into adopting them, and give him the gratification of correcting the blunder in his next edition. Under the pseudonym of Collins and Amner he would insert paragraphs in the daily press purporting to be curious extracts from rare books, copies of which no one who wished to verify the passages ever succeeded in discovering.

Among these curiosities was the romantic story (that has found its way into Todd's "Life of Milton") of the poet having been seen asleep under a tree by a lady who became enamored of his beauty and placed in his hand some impassioned verses of Guarini, which, when he awoke, so fired his fancy that he made a journey to Italy in the hope of tracing her. Another was the story of the deadly upas tree of Java, which long obtained credit as one of the fairy tales of science.—Nineteenth Century.

Three Skulls.

There are three human crania in the Washington museum which were found in the gravel at Trenton, one several feet below the surface and the others near the surface. The skulls, which are of remarkable uniformity, are of small size and of oval shape, differing from all other skulls in the museum. In fact they are of a distinct type, and hence of the greatest importance. So far as they go they indicate that paleolithic man was exterminated, or has become lost by admixture with others during the many thousand years which have passed since he inhabited the Delaware valley.—Washington Letter.

The Old Woman and the Earthquake. At Ischia they disinterred an old woman, unharmed. "God bless you!" she cried, as they helped her out. "But for pity's sake," she added impetuously, "dig a little deeper and save my!" "What? Is there any one else alive here?" they inquired anxiously. "My hen!" continued the old dame.—Cornhill Magazine.

TWO DAYS.

I crossed a daisied field; the skies were fair;
The lustrous trees stretched green arms over head.
The sun shook gold dust thro' the April air,
And a glad brook leaped down its pebbled bed.

The meadow lark flung out such liquid notes,
My happy soul stood still and leaned to hear;
The wild canaries fluffed their yellow coats,
And turned their restless heads in jealous fear.

And, oh, my heart was glad, for it was spring;
Blue, blue the dappled skies that swung above!
But still more glad my soul, remembering
The world was sweet to me because of love.

I crossed a lonely field; the skies were gray;
The winds crept in from sea with sullen moans;
Ice loosed, ice bound, the brook grieved night and day
Above the hollow sound of falling cones.

With drumming wings the mottled pheasant flew;
The ghostly trees reached barren arms across;
And, oh, my heart was sad—so well I knew
The winter world was dull because of loss.

An Amusing Scene in Court.

One of the most amusing yet unexpected sensation scenes ever witnessed in a theatre occurred at the Theatre Royal, Manchester. The curtain drew up for Mr. Toole to address the court in re Bardell vs. Pickwick, when the whole of the jury mysteriously disappeared, their "box" suddenly giving way and engulfing the "good men and true."

At first the vast audience who crowded every part of the theatre were silent, fearing some dreadful accident had occurred, but as the unlucky jurymen rapidly reappeared, unhurt, though looking very foolish, they broke out into a perfect hurricane of laughter, which lasted several minutes.

The curtain had to be dropped to allow the jury to be "boxed" again, and when Mr. Toole began his address he provoked another burst of risibility by alluding to the jury as "that worthy body of steady and immovable men."

A peculiarly amusing feature of this novel scene was the fact that the majority of the "jury" were stage carpenters, whose duty it was to erect the "court," and they suffered in this case for their own carelessness.—London Tit-Bits.

Riding the Wooden Horse.

Torture on a grand scale went out with Felton, the assassin of Buckingham, but torture on a small scale continued to be practiced on military offenders down to the eighteenth century. The form most frequently resorted to was that known as the wooden horse, to ride which was the punishment accorded for petty thefts, insubordination, and so on. The wooden horse was made of planks nailed together so as to form a sharp ridge or angle about eight or nine feet long. This ridge represented the back of the horse, and was supported by four posts or legs about five feet high, placed on a stand made movable by trucks. To complete the resemblance with the noblest animal in creation a head and tail were added.

When a soldier was sentenced, either by court martial or by his commanding officer, to ride the horse, he was placed on the brute's back, with his hands tied behind him, and frequently enough, in order to increase the pain, muskets were fastened to his legs to weigh them down or, as was jokingly said, to prevent the fiery, untamed, barebacked steed from kicking him off.—London Graphic.

A New Glove Mender.

It is quite a difficult matter to repair one's gloves so neatly and perfectly that it cannot be detected as a nonprofessional's work, but there is a little invention which facilitates this work to such a degree that even untrained hands can do it with neatness and dispatch. The apparatus is made of nickel, and consists of two parts, which press against each other by means of a spring. Part of the top edge is provided with small teeth in close range to each other. The seam of the glove to be mended is carefully pressed between these teeth, and the needle passed in and out at every opening. Repairing done in this manner is so perfect that it cannot be noticed.—New York Journal.

As the fly glides rapidly over a smooth surface every step presses out a supply of gum strong enough to give him a sure footing and to sustain him in safety if he halts. So strong is the cement that that upon one of his six feet is quite sufficient to sustain the weight of his whole body. But if he stands still the gum may dry up and harden quickly, and so securely fasten the traveler's foot as to make a sudden step snap the leg itself.

The sponge reproduces its kind mainly by eggs. In each animal are contained both the male and the female elements, and it throws out the ova to be hatched in the water. At first the young are free swimming, and afterward they attach themselves to convenient spots and grow.

Primarily, sagacious dogs seemed to have had their origin in southern Europe, the fighting dogs in Asia and the swift running dogs, like the greyhound, among the Celtic nations. Nevertheless, there is no doubt that the mastiff, which is a fighter, is of British origin.

When a blood vessel is severed or cut in the arm or leg a tourniquet should be made of a handkerchief with a knot in it, tightly twisted so that the knot covers the artery or main blood vessel. When the blood stops flowing the pressure should cease.

For nearly two centuries in England only the kings were allowed to use forks. Their subjects had to keep on eating pie with their fingers. Queen Elizabeth had a jeweled fork, and we are told that her favorite breakfast was "a pie of goose."

"If a man pulls up a mandrake," says an old time writer, "he will surely die soon thereafter. In common prudence it is best to tie a dog to the plant, and thus escape the evil thysell."

Kossuth usually finishes the day with a game of billiards, and, though he is 89 years old, he plays with a steady hand and usually wins.

Americans Won't Learn Trades.

Skillful stone carvers—not sculptors, but the men who actually cut the figures and decorations on the facades or interiors of buildings with mallet and chisel—often receive from four to six dollars a day in New York and Boston. Modelers for jewelers and makers of designs for wall paper often receive more than that. In Boston and New York good stone carvers receive higher pay than reporters on newspapers, clerks in business houses or male school teachers of the lower grades.

But who are these skilled stone carvers and wood carvers, makers of designs for wall paper, modelers in clay, brass finishers and so on? They are, with some exceptions, Europeans. They have learned how to do their work in other countries, and come here to exercise their crafts.

Formerly these more artistic trades could not be learned in the United States. This is no longer the case. The industries have been established in this country to such an extent that nearly all of them may be learned by the process of apprenticeship and in the technical schools scattered through the country almost every branch of industrial art is taught.

But when one day I asked a large employer of skilled stone carvers how many of his men were American born he answered, "Not one in ten is American born."—J. E. Chamberlin in Youth's Companion.

Improved Envelope Folding Machine.

A new envelope folding machine possesses several novel features, including the use of boxed or inside cams, which obviate the necessity for springs in producing the different movements of the mechanism, and thus increase the smoothness of working and durability of the apparatus. By means of an ingenious adjustable appliance, the envelopes have any desired amount of bulk or roundness of the edges imparted to them. This operation makes the envelope more convenient for use and also adds to its strength by lessening the liability to split at the edges.

After folding, the envelopes are transferred to wired divisions on the periphery of a revolving wheel at the rear of the machine, where they are dried by currents of hot or cold air forced through perforators in pipes coiled at the sides of the wheel. The envelopes are afterward dropped into a race and gradually advanced to a table where an attendant is waiting to band them. All the operations, from the placing of the blanks to the receipt of the finished envelope, are entirely automatic, and a single machine is capable of making from 30,000 to 40,000 envelopes per day.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Natural Gas in Iron Working.

Among the more recent improvements in the manufacture of iron and steel, the use of gaseous fuel stands conspicuous. The idea of first converting the fuel into a combustible gas, and conveying this to the point where heat was required and then igniting it, is a very old one, and, in one form or another, it has been employed for over a thousand years, but it is only within the present century that the manifold advantages of gas as a metallurgical fuel have become fully recognized by the iron and steel workers of the world. The early gas furnaces used in Silesia, Sweden, and other European countries were but enlarged modifications of Geber's Tower of Athanor, and, although they were a great improvement on the furnaces in which solid fuel was burned on a grate, yet they were not able to produce a temperature sufficiently high and controllable to satisfy the demands of the rapidly developing iron and steel industries.—Popular Science Monthly.

Deaf Mutes.

F. G. Jefferson, of Toronto, Canada, thus writes to The Mail of that city: "The following case has come under my notice: A farmer married his cousin, and both possessed all their faculties, and they have nine children, of whom five daughters were born deaf mutes. Three of these daughters married speaking and hearing husbands. The first one has three deaf mute children out of five, the second one has two deaf mute children out of three and the third has one deaf mute child out of two. This proves that Professor Bell, of Washington, United States, has made a mistake by publishing largely that the intermarriage of deaf mutes brings a deaf mute race, when the fact is that deaf mute children proceed from married couples possessing all their faculties. In the Belleville deaf mute school there are 240 pupils, and not one of them has deaf mute parents. There are many other similar cases in England and the States."

Similarity in Indian Language.

Whence came the Indian? There is no standard of appeal and the question could not be decided; but there is a great deal of error in the orthography and signification as given in the Indian words. Amicolola should be Awmiercolola. Awmer means salt. The two words water and salt in Cherokee are very much alike—awmier and awmer. They seldom name after a person. Chattahoochee means streaked rock. At the headwaters there is a variety of white and black rocks, streaked rock.—Atlanta Constitution.

"Is that new play you saw last night funny?"
"Oh, immensely funny! One of the characters falls off a chair and gets kicked by a mule, and another one wears somebody else's hat."—West Shore.

Annoying.

"Is Bernhardt really so thin?"
"Really. Why when she smiles there isn't room on her face for it, and she has to lie down and let it spread over on her pillow."—Epoch.

WITH THE close of the 51st Congress, Hon. William M. Evarts retires to private life. A man of high integrity and extraordinary mental faculties, he leaves a place that few, if any can fill. His successor, Governor David B. Hill, is a man well skilled in the arts of political warfare, but sadly deficient in those qualities essential to the make up of a statesman, and which Mr. Evarts possessed in bounteous measure. Congress loses a valued and respected member, and the Empire State, a useful representative, but such is the common fate under our political institution. The politician and not the man of affairs receives the honors and emoluments.

Though Mr. Evarts retires to private life, he will ever continue a prominent figure in State and National affairs and his influence may be felt as keenly in the shaping of political destiny as though his figure appeared before the scenes.

WE WERE pleased to note the reelection of most of the old town officials last Monday. As we had previously predicted, the Board of Selectmen were reelected by large and flattering votes. Upon the school board, while a change was inevitable, the gentlemen chosen to fill the vacant places are all capable men well, qualified in every way to discharge the trusts reposed in them. On the Board of Assessors, the failure to retain Mr. Relihan was a great mistake, and one that will be regretted before the year closes, unless he is chosen to fill a vacancy that is likely to be made by the declination of Mr. Jacobs. Mr. Relihan has had large experience in the office of assessor, and few men can be found to fill the place as well as he.

It is a matter of regret, that the American movement was started. It ended in defeat, as might well have been expected by its most ardent supporters; while it precipitated a fight in another quarter—on the license question, that came near losing the town the temperance vote entirely. The only consolation that can be derived from that contest is, that the test has been made and will probably never be attempted again.

THE SUBJECT of the purchase of a hearse for Oak Grove cemetery will probably come up for consideration on Monday evening, and we hope it may come early enough in the session to allow of a fair and dispassionate consideration, so that when a vote is taken upon the appropriation, a free and full expression of opinion may be had. We had occasion to refer to this subject sometime since, when the petition was first presented and the stand we then took against spending money for such a scheme has been justified by conversation with many residents of the West village. A hearse in West Peabody could not be used enough to keep it from growing mouldy. The cost of repairs from disuse would far outweigh the expense of ordinary wear and tear. It seems to us that such an outlay would be an expense to the town without any corresponding benefits to the citizens of West Peabody, and we therefore hope the appropriation will not be made. There are many other improvements that might be given to that part of the town which would be of substantial benefit, and any money that is appropriated should be set apart for improvements, and not whims.

WE TOUCHED the Salem News in a tender spot when we stated editorially that, that paper "overestimates its capacity when it attempts the role of an instructor in ethics." But the truth of the charge is admitted by the attempted reply, in which it claims that had the News taken up the cause of no license, we would have quoted that sheet as a "power for good." We always like to see our exchanges upon the right side, especially when we know the editor's heart is right, for it is simply a difference of policy, that leads the News to champion license; but we would have no different views regarding the value of the News or any other penny daily, if it championed no license, as an instructor of ethics that we have when it takes the opposite position. The province of suburban dailies is to furnish current items, and when they have done that as well as the News, they have filled their whole mission. We do not propose to resort to "chestnut" phrases about "graveyards," simply because the News or any other paper disagrees with us. But we claim the right to express our opinion upon the wisdom and propriety of any paper going out of its way to teach people alleged truisms, that those people know to be fallacies. In Salem or Lynn, a no license vote may mean free rum, and it is proper, perhaps, to advocate license for such municipalities, but in Peabody, the opposite has been proved by several years' experience to be the fact, and in light of such evidence, no one can advocate license without laying himself open to the charge of being a rummy. If the News were familiar with the past working of no license in Peabody, therefore, we do not believe it would have made the egregious blunder of publishing an editorial advising this and adjoining towns to vote for license.

THE FOLLOWING statement which appeared in a local publication of yesterday, is entirely false. The ballots referred to were printed in Salem. No ballots were printed at this office except what were ordered for and delivered to the Town Clerk.

"The town paid for printing the ballots; nevertheless a lot printed from the same type which the town paid for setting up were distributed all day Sunday at the Roman Catholic Church."

NOT TO REDUCE CIRCULATION.

The Cape Ann Breeze says, "The Newburyport News reports its circulation as feverish, that is high, so much so that a dose of double cylinder, Hoe press will be administered this week."

We hope this method is not taken to reduce circulation.

A Wonderful Offer.

The eminent Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., the proprietor of that great nerve cure, Dr. Greene's Nervura, and specialist in the cure of nervous and chronic diseases, has announced to the world that all sufferers from this class of troubles, or from any lingering or long-standing disease, can consult him by letter in regard to their cases, free of charge.

This is important to the sick, as Dr. Greene has made a specialty of treating patients through letter correspondence, and his many and wonderful cures in all parts of the country prove his remarkable success, and the marvellous curative powers of his harmless vegetable remedies. If you are a sufferer, you will not let this opportunity pass to consult by letter free of charge with this skillful and able physician. Write him a description of your case or send for his symptom blank to fill out, and a carefully considered answer, fully explaining your disease and giving you a perfect understanding of all its symptoms, will be returned free of expense.

Mr. Editor—Concerning that hearse called for by a few of West Peabody voters, I learn that a glass one must be bought to suit the fastidious petitioners. The situation is this: Previous to the appointment of W. S. Osborn as undertaker, I have never known a town undertaker to be employed by the people of this part of the town. Those requiring such services employed Mr. Waitte of Danvers or Mr. Buffum. Those men owned their teams if not their own hearse. The town has just spent money to build a tomb. A very costly expenditure. Why spend a useless sum of money for a thing no one wants or needs? People are getting big headed (some are) and must be carried to the grave behind two horses. Where are we to get the two horses? They will next ask for them; then a dozen plumes must deck said hearse; next a mull to make the coffin in, to get those goods at first cost—we shall want perhaps six or seven yearly.

The man that is pushing this scheme through went to Lynnfield for an undertaker last season. I learn that Mr. Roundy works cheaper than the town undertaker. I learn that some of the petitioners signed that petition in fun, but would vote against the measure if the meeting could have been held in day time.

There are in West Peabody 33 grave yards. Why not give each of these burial grounds a town hearse? The town could with just as much propriety. One says that the people of West Peabody don't know what they want until after they get it. Although it is so pretty to look at, I don't think any of us banker to take a ride in the new hearse, and doubt if we could see the beauties of nature any better for having a glass carriage to ride in.

FARMER OF WEST PEABODY.

I have suffered with a severe cold all fall and winter, and couldn't secure any relief until I commenced using Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. Since that time my head has been clear and I've experienced no difficulty in breathing. I consider it a most wonderful remedy.

There is another strike at the factory of J. H. Winchell & Co., Haverhill, about the prices paid for work on a heel burnishing machine recently introduced. The firm hired a non-union man to run it at 25 cents per case. The Union wanted one of their own men employed at 30 cents per case. Failing to carry their point, all machine operators quit work. The non-union hand left rather than cause trouble, whereupon the firm decided that 25 cents was all they would pay a union operative. The matter is still unsettled. The entire force in the bottoming department have been discharged and what help remain will go on strike.

Wallace, Elliott & Co., of Haverhill, were notified by the Union that unless they accepted the standard Haverhill price list by 10 A. M., Saturday, the 7th the men would be called out. The firm at first refused, but later compromised by accepting the price list on condition that it should not be posted in their factory. On Tuesday, however, the men struck again.

Town officers elected monthly are as follows:

Salisbury: Town clerk, Geo. W. Merrill; treasurer and collector, Samuel Coffin; selectmen, John L. Cilley, Chas. F. Peel and Wesley Pettingill; school committee, Amos B. Coffin; road commissioner, Chas. N. Pike. License, 64 yes and 85 no.

Lucian Newhall of Lynn, while attempting to board a train that city on Monday, slipped and fell to the ground as a shifting engine was approaching. Fortunately he escaped with slight facial bruises, although the engine came within two inches of his head.

The manufacturers along the Merrimack are endeavoring to get cheaper coal, and are to make a move to this end by running barges direct from New York to Haverhill, in the hope of doing away with the expense of coal carrying schooners. The barges are to be operated by a New London company.

Lynnfield elected on Monday: Town clerk, F. P. Russell; treasurer and collector, John M. Danforth; selectmen, assessors and overseers, John M. Danforth, Andrew Mansfield and Frank Newhall; school committee, W. J. Munroe for 3 years and Warren Newhall for 2 years. License, vote stood yes 41 and no 62.

A fair under the auspices of Post 89, G. A. R. will be held at the Town Hall, Beverly, opening Tuesday, April 7, and continuing through the week. The fair is to be inaugurated by a military and civic ball and the Governor and staff, Department Commander and staff and others have been invited to participate.

The class of 1841 of Dartmouth College numbered 78 at graduation; 52 have passed away. The survivors will hold a re-union at Hanover on the coming commencement. Among the survivors are James Davis of Amesbury, Moses Foster of Andover, Philip C. Knapp of Lynn and John J. Marsh of Haverhill.

From the Lynnfield selectmen's report it appears that the expenditures of the town for the past year amounted to $8,185 53. The treasurer's report shows that the cash on hand and amounts due the town—nearly all on taxes—is $3,603.13; the liabilities, $3,000; and the balance in favor of the town, $603.19.

J. H. Winchell & Co., Haverhill, on Tuesday discharged all employees in their shoeshops operating on turned work, about 75 in number, on account of the high prices fixed by the Shoeworkers' Union. The firm says it will move its turned shoe department to its New Hampshire factory.

John said Mrs. Wings at the breakfast table lately, you've been studying palmistry lately, haven't you? Wings thought something was up and evaded the question by another. What makes you think so? he asked. Oh, last night you kept asking in your sleep, What kind of a hand have you got?

A REAL LUXURY!

Looking out over the many homes of this country, we see thousands of women wearing away their lives in household drudgery that might be materially lessened by the use of a few cakes of SAPOLIO. If an hour is saved each time a cake is used, if one less wrinkle gathers upon the face because the toil is lightened, she must be a foolish woman who would hesitate to make the experiment, and he a churlish husband who would grudge the few cents which it costs.

If your grocer sends you anything in place of SAPOLIO, send it back and insist upon having just what you ordered. SAPOLIO always gives satisfaction. On floors, tables, and painted work it acts like a charm. For scouring pots, pans, and metals it has no equal. Everything shines after it, and even the children delight in using it in their attempts to help around the house.

Grocers often substitute cheaper goods for SAPOLIO to make a better profit. Send back such articles and insist on having just what you ordered.

B. M. Hills was knocked over by his horse starting too suddenly, as he was getting on the wagon at the water trough on Central street, Tuesday evening, and a wheel passed over his leg and arm. He was assisted to his feet by Elmer Poor, who chanced to be passing. Fortunately no serious results were sustained.

At their session last Saturday, the Selectmen granted the petition of the Naumkeag Street Railway Company, to lay a track up Lowell street as far as the residence of Eben U. King. The location is in the middle of the road. If the track is laid, as asked for, it will be a great convenience to the public and will open up some nice house lots that have hitherto been considered too far away from the square.

TOWN MEETING.

Many bad days have been experienced in the town meetings of the past, but it is a long time since we have had one as disagreeable as last Monday. The snow that fell the latter part of last week would have made travel sufficiently difficult, but added to this the warm rain that fell almost all day served to add inconveniences that were entirely needless. But notwithstanding the weather, a large vote was polled, many infirm and aged people getting to the town house whom it seemed hopeless to count on. The Australian ballot too, which had been looked upon with consternation by the wisecracks, proved much less of an obstacle to a free expression of the wishes of the voters than could fairly have been presumed upon by the most enthusiastic supporters of that complicated device. There were 1577 ballots cast by the male voters and eleven by female voters. The work of counting was necessarily slow, and it was 2 o'clock before the work was finished and the result announced. The Caucus ticket was almost entirely victorious. The old Board of Selectmen was re-elected by a very large majority. The Board of Assessors made up at the Citizen's Caucus was re-elected with the exception of Mr. Relihan. Mr. Jacobs had previously declined to be a candidate, and the statement had been published in Saturday's papers, that he would not stand if elected. Dr. John J. Shanahan, who was placed in nomination by the Citizen's Caucus, under similar circumstances, having also declined in print, to be a candidate, was elected by a large majority. In the defeat of Mr. Relihan, the town loses an efficient officer, but in case Mr. Jacobs adheres to his previous intention of declining the honors, Mr. Relihan may be elected to the vacancy.

The result of the license vote was announced at 5 o'clock Monday afternoon, about a half-hour after the polls closed and was greeted with tremendous cheers by the friends of temperance. The vote stood 720 for, and 787 against license, with 70 blanks. The temperance people gained 213 votes over last year and the liquor dealers $3. A hard battle was fought and the conquest was almost as much of a surprise to the victors as to the vanquished. Sample ballots had been put out, at great expense to the liquor dealers, and every known device was resorted to, to ensure a license vote. On the other side, tracts were judiciously scattered, the check list was carefully studied, and every man who could be brought out, was conveyed to the polls or personally interviewed. The result of the vote for town officers is as follows: the names marked with an asterisk being the successful candidates: License—Yes, 720; No, 787. Last year—Yes, 627; No, 574. Town Clerk—N. H. Poor 1267. Collector of taxes—Lyman Osborne 1354. Town auditor—G. Fred Osgood 1203. Town treasurer—N. H. Poor 1206. Selectmen—P. H. Coleman 844, Chas. E. Flint 441, Chas. H. Goulding 1002, W. A. Election Notes.

The composition of the Water Board was unchanged by Monday's election.

Levi Preston has been called by the town to fill a position held by him some years ago,—that of Assessor.

The Board of Overseers of the Poor remains the same as last year.

Chairman Goulding received a highly flattering vote Monday. His vote for Selectman was 1002 being next to the highest cast, Mr. Poor receiving 1021. He was also elected to the School Board by 740 votes, the highest number received by any candidate for that board.

G. F. Osgood as Auditor, Lyman Osborn as Collector and Nathan H. Poor as Clerk and Treasurer will serve the town another year.

The strength of the American ticket was about 400; the maximum being 756 and the minimum 382.

Voting was pretty brisk all day, and during the noon hours 100 votes were cast every twenty-five minutes.

Few mistakes were made on account of the Australian ballot, but those that did occur were comical.

One man marked a cross against no license and left his ballot in the slip. "He wasn't in it"—neither was the ballot.

One ballot went into the box without a single cross. That voter believed in taking things straight.

Chairman Goulding was chosen moderator of the town meeting.

The adjourned town meeting will be held on Monday evening at 7.30.

The School Board will organize with Thomas Carroll, Rev. J. W. Hudson, Cabell F. Winchester, P. H. O'Connor, Charles H. Goulding and George M. Foster as members.

No change has been made in the personnel of the Board of Health.

The organization of Peabody Institute will stand as follows: Rev. J. W. Hudson, J. Howard Fallon, Harry F. Walker, O. B. Chadwick, George F. Barnes, Richard Barry, Frank C. Merrill, Joseph F. Wiggins, P. H. O'Connor, D. P. Grosvenor, Rufus H. Brown and Dr. J. J. Shanahan.

The constables are Thomas W. Peasley, Timothy D. Crowley and T. N. Earnaby.

The old Boards of Sinking Fund Commissioners are re-elected. No opposition ticket was in the field.

IN THE NIGHT.

As I enter the shadowy portals of night,
To stray in her solitude vast,
Pale memory whispers a vanished delight
And summons a shade from the past.

Lol my Marguerite plays the sweet passion and skill
That we loved speak again in her art.
How the strains of her violin sound, at her will,
Like the chords of a human heart

It is only a dream, such as travelers say Thirst gives in the lands of the sun;
And the sad, sweet face and the form pass away—
The music and glory are done!

I call on my love in grief's passionate words,
If only one moment to stay;
But all that I hear is the twitter of birds
That wake in the morning gray.

Where the far distant Alps seem a cloudland of snow,
Are a lake and a valley so fair,
And a sculptured stone, with its record of woe,
To tell she is sleeping there.

—W. Gow Gregor in Once a Week.

WAYLAI.

"Chip, you'd better start at once.
Don't be on the road after dark with so much money about you."

The window was high from the ground, and the disreputable looking tramp who had entered the garden heard Mr. Stockwell's remark and came to a stop on the graveled walk.

Neither Mr. Stockwell nor his trusted clerk, Chip Ferris, saw him as he half crouched beneath the open window, from which place their tones were plainly audible.

Mr. Stockwell had the largest grocery in Lebanon, and Chip Ferris, though only 17 years old, was his right hand man.

He owned another grocery in Milldale,
a thriving little village eight miles away,
and Chip had just been directed by him to go over and collect the month's receipts from the man in charge.

"Tell Hanley I'll be in Milldale to see him just as soon as I can get out of the house," said Mr. Stockwell, who had been overcome by his old remedy, the rheumatism. "I've instructed him in the note to turn over the collections to you, and if any stock is needed he can let you know."

The man at the window did not wait to hear more, but went noiselessly to the gate, all thought of begging removed from his mind.

A companion, as ragged and vicious looking as himself, stood waiting for him some distance down the street.

"What kept you so long?" he growled.

"Any luck?"

"I should say so," was the response.

"You didn't get any money, did you?"

"No, but we'll soon have plenty if we manage things right."

And he proceeded to confide what he had overheard, whereat the other worthy's eyes glistened.

"Well, that is luck, and no mistake," he said. "If he's only a boy it will be as easy as rolling off a log. There he comes now."

At that moment Chip Ferris was closing
Mr. Stockwell's gate.

He walked down the street in the direction of the two men, giving them no more than a casual glance as he passed by, for tramps were no rarity in Lebanon.

"Those fellows are pretty rough looking customers," he thought. "It's a wonder the constable hasn't got them."

It was 3 o'clock then, and he went to the stable in the rear of the shop and harnessed the horse to a light vehicle.

The drive to Milldale was a pleasant one, and Chip enjoyed the prospect of it exceedingly.

About a mile from town, resting under a leafy tree by the roadside, were the two tramps he had seen some time before.

"Hello!" he said to himself. "There are those fellows again. I wonder what they're up to now."

He passed by in a cloud of dust, and looking back, saw that an animated conversation had suddenly sprung up between the two.

Somehow Chip got it into his head that they were talking about him.

"They can't know about the money, of course," he said, uneasily. "Such men look evil enough to do anything."

When he reached Milldale he was disappointed to learn that Mr. Hanley had gone into the country to look at a colt that he thought of purchasing.

The money was locked up in the safe and he had the key with him, so that there was nothing for Chip to do but to wait for his return, which he did with a good deal of impatience.

It was nearly 6 o'clock and the sun was far down in the west when Mr.
Hanley came back, and Chip lost no time in transacting with him the business on which he had come.

"Better stay with me to supper, Chip," said Mr. Hanley. "There'll be a moon at 8 to light you back."

"No, thank you," said Chip. "I don't want to be out late with this money. I'll just take some bread and cheese with me."

He bade Mr. Hanley good-by, and, giving his horse the reins, was soon going at a smart pace through Milldale, until the last of the straggling houses at its outskirts was left far behind.

The sun sank behind the distant blue hills and twilight came on.

"It won't be long now before it's dark," said Chip. "I hope I won't meet those tramps again. They'd stop me in a minute if they thought I had so much money about me."

As the light faded he grew more nervous, and, with an idea in his head, he reined in the horse to carry it out, first looking around to satisfy himself that no one was in sight.

In his pocket was a copy of the village paper, which he carefully tore into strips
the size of bank notes.

He selected from the roll of notes Mr.
Hanley had given him four of the least valuable and wrapped them around the strips, placing them in his pocketbook.

The money he hid in one of his shoes.
"Perhaps I'm over cautious," he told himself, with a smile. "Those men have likely enough taken another road, but if they should try to rob me this bogus roll may fool them."

He was half way home when he came to a large tract of woods, through which the road passed for some distance.

The thick foliage of the over arching trees shut out the light, and the road was so bad that Chip was obliged to let the horse walk.

There was an absurd story which had long been current of a headless horseman who appeared in these very woods, and Chip could not help recalling it with a shudder in spite of its utter improbability.

Suddenly the horse shied, and the startled boy caught sight of two dark figures lying in wait at the side of the road.

The horse gave a leap forward, but a hand seized the bridle and averted the animal to one side, so that the vehicle was nearly overturned in the deep rut.

"No, you don't, youngster," a gruff voice said. "Just you give up that money you got at Milldale or it will go hard with you."

"How do you know I got any money?"
asked Chip, with a fast beating heart, for he saw the gleam of a revolver that was in the man's hand.

"None of that," replied the rascal angrily. "You just give it up, that's all.
If you don't you'll never drive this wagon again."

Chip took his pocketbook out with trembling fingers, and the man greedily snatched it from him.

"You'll let me go now, won't you?" the boy pleaded.

"Not much," said the robber coolly.
"Get out of that vehicle, and don't waste any time about it. Do you hear me?"

With shaking limbs Chip obeyed and submitted to a thorough search of his pockets, after which he was bound, with his arms behind him, to a tree.

"There, I fancy that'll do," said the man, with a chuckle. "Turn the vehicle round, Bill, and let's be off."

"Are you sure you've got all?" his companion asked.

"Yes," was the reply. "If we hadn't used up all the matches trying to get a light for our pipes I'd count what was in the pocketbook."

The two rogues jumped into the vehicle and drove off in the direction of Mil-dale, leaving Chip straining and tugging at the rope that bound him.

His fear that the robbers would return when they discovered the deception that had been practiced upon them made him almost frantic, but all his efforts to free himself were in vain.

Helpless and exhausted he awaited the outcome, turning pale at every noise that he heard in the woods.

He was as brave as any ordinary boy, but beads of perspiration were on his brow and his hair almost stood up on end when at length he heard the ominous sound of wheels drawing near.

"Good gracious!" he said in terror.
"It's they; and they'll kill me."

Nearer and nearer came the sound, and then, as the vehicle passed by, there was a sudden transition from despair to hope.

"Stop!" cried Chip wildly. "Help, help!"

"Who is it?" a startled voice called back. "What are you doing there?"

"It's I—Chipman Ferris," said the boy.
"Two men, who tried to rob me, have tied me to a tree."

He heard some one alight, and the next moment footsteps came crashing toward him.

Chip was overjoyed to recognize Mr.
Bolton, a farmer well known to him.

"How did you come to get in such a fix, Chip?" he asked, as with a few cuts of his knife he released him from his uncomfortable position.

Chip explained to Mr. Bolton how he had been waylaid, and the farmer said indignantly:

"The villains! They must have taken the road to Malden, for I didn't pass
them."

Just as they were getting into the farmer's vehicle they heard the sound of angry voices from behind.

"Quick, Mr. Bolton!" cried Chip, excitedly. "They are armed, and they are coming back."

The farmer needed no urging, but gave his horse the whip.

As they flew on they still heard the desperate men venting their rage in angry threats, and they knew they were in hot pursuit.

They emerged into the open, and looking back in the light of the moon that had risen, Chip could see the men as they beat their jaded horse in their effort to overtake him.

The rascals shouted out for them to stop, and discharged their revolvers to intimidate them, but Mr. Bolton's horse was the fresher of the two, and they soon gave up the chase.

Chip was glad when he saw at length the lights of Lebanon shining out from ahead, and it was not long before everyone in the village knew of the attempted robbery.

The constable and several men at once started out to arrest the tramps and found the horse and vehicle abandoned by the roadside, the men having feared capture and taken to the woods.

But the telegraph is effective, and the very next day the robbers were arrested in another county and got the punishment they so richly deserved.—New York World.

He Didn't Purchase the Shoes.

It was nearly 6 o'clock one evening when a gentleman, apparently 60 years of age, entered one of our leading shoe stores. He wanted a pair of shoes, he said, and the clerk proceeded to supply his wants. The customer selected a pair of $3 shoes, and while the clerk, who was in a hurry to get home, was hastily doing them up the man hunted his pockets over and after much exertion pulled out thirty coupons in payment for the shoes. The clerk protested that the coupons were of no use, and the man insisted that they were. The clerk explained that the firm had published coupons in an evening paper with the announcement that they would deduct ten cents from each dollar purchased.

The man had cut the coupons from thirty papers and saved them to secure a pair of shoes, and was deeply disgusted that he couldn't get them.—Springfield

HONESTY AND MEMORY.

IT LOOKED AS THOUGH THE MAN WAS GUILTY OF A CRIME.

A Case Which Shows That Circumstantial Evidence Is Not Always Conclusive Proof of Guilt—A Woman Makes Up in Forbearance Her Loss of Memory.

Two weeks ago a family of two persons—husband and wife—rented a small apartment up town and proceeded to furnish it. The carpets were supplied and laid by a reputable house. Something about one of them was unsatisfactory, and a man was sent to investigate.
The wife—Mrs. L.—was on her way out of the building to post a letter when she encountered him. Recognizing him, she said: "Here is the key; I will be back in five minutes. Go up and see what can be done."

No sooner had she got on the street when she thought suddenly of a roll of bills, nearly $100, which she had carelessly left in a glove box on her dressing table. There was nobody in the apartment, as no servant had yet been engaged, and she was tempted to return at once to look after the money. "But surely," she thought, "that man is honest; I need have no fear," and she hurried on.

In less than ten minutes she was back,
and met the carpet man just outside her door. He stopped and spoke with her concerning the troublesome carpet, and promised a speedy remedy. They separated and she entered her apartment.
Almost mechanically she went to her dressing table and raised the lid of the glove box. The money was not there.

DAMAGING EVIDENCE.

Without delaying an instant she hurried into the hall and down the stairs, overtaking the carpet man as he had reached the street.

"Will you come back a moment,
please?" she said.

He did so at once. When they were again in the apartment she faced him.

"A curious thing has happened. When I went out this morning I left a roll of bills—$90—in that box over there. It is gone now."

The man did not seem to understand for a moment. "Well," he said unmeaningly.

"Well," repeated Mrs. L., "there was nobody in the apartment but"—

The man interrupted her. "God, madam," he said earnestly as the significance of her words dawned upon him,
"you don't think I took your money?"

"I don't know what to think," replied Mrs. L.; "the money was there and now it isn't."

"But I'm an honest man," he went on.
"I've got a little girl. Do you think I'd steal? Why, I've been eight years with So-and-so. They know my character.
Look around for your money. Perhaps your husband took it."

"That is possible," said Mrs. L. "Will you come with me to his office and find out?"

He acquiesced and the journey down town was made. Mr. L. had not taken the money. The man was greatly disturbed.

"You can search me," he said. "There's my own money," producing a small wad,
"left from my last week's wages. I haven't another cent about me." And he turned his pockets inside out.

Mr. L. was impressed with the man's appearance and earnestness. Mrs. L. was puzzled and her money was gone.

A CASE OF POOR MEMORY.

However, nothing further was done at the time, and the man went back to his work asking only that he and not they report the occurrence at the carpet dealer's shop.

Mrs. L. went home and ransacked drawers and boxes, moved furniture, and opened trunks in a vain search for the money. Several days passed, when, on going to an upper shelf in a wardrobe, Mrs. L.'s attention was attracted to a towel pinned in a roll.

What was that? she wondered. She took it down and opened it. Inside was a discarded wallet, and in the wallet the missing bills.

And they had been put there by Mrs.
L. herself. She recalled, on seeing them, that the night before the man came she had thought, just before going to bed, that it was careless, with so many persons coming and going in the course of the settling process, to leave money loose in a box on the table, and she had elaborately thought out this hiding place.

Then she had slept, and by morning had lost all recollection of what she had done.

It was late Saturday afternoon when she found the money, and storming, but it must be related to Mrs. L.'s credit that she did what she could. She sent a dispatch to the man in care of his firm stating that the money was found. On Monday she went to the shop and explained the matter to the superintendent, asking that the man be asked to come to see her. He did so and received an apology for the imputation on his honesty.

Then Mrs. L. tried to reimburse him for his "loss of time;" this he would not permit. The money was found—that was all he wanted. So it all ended happily. But the story may be taken as forcibly illustrating the uncertain value of two things—a woman's memory and circumstantial evidence.—Her Point of View in New York Times.

Miraculous.

"Bre'er Johnsing, does yo' b'lieve in miracles?"

"Does I b'lieve in miracles? Suttently
I does. Didn't I jest have one of 'em down at my house?"

"Yo'! A miracle down at your house?"

"Yes, sah; dat's what I said. Dey was jes' foun' chickens in my coop when I went to bed las' night, an' when I woked up dis mornin'!"

"Dey was eight?"

"Eight? No, yo' fool man! Dey was'n't none. Done stole."

"Humph! Wha's de miracle?"

"De coop was lef'."—Judge.

A Clear Head.

"I tell you, laugh as you will, Mr.
Softy has a clear head."

"Indeed!"

"Yes; clear of all brains."—West Shore.

UNCONQUERED.

High o'er the city's roofs a storm blown gull,
Driven landward from the sea,
Battles against the winds without a lull,
Yet inland farther, ever back
Helpless is tossed with flying rack;
But messenger of constancy to me,
I joy to see him facing ocean still,
As beaten souls through storm and night
May changeless face the hidden light
By heaven sent power and strength of steadfast joy.

—M. A. De Wolfe Howe, Jr., in Youth's Companion.

CLEVER AUNT KATE.

"It ain't no use in a-goin' agin your pa, Jennie—he's had his own way 'round here continual, for more'n thirty years, an' you'll jest hev to give in; no use talkin' at him. 'Tonly makes him wuss." Poor little Mrs. Olcott had been accustomed during the whole of her married life to "jest give in," and her only chance of peace was in yielding to her selfishly determined husband and allowing him to carry his point without opposition.

Jennie was differently constituted. She inherited her father's strong will, and he had, much to his surprise, suddenly discovered an opposing force in his youngest child.

She had been away from home for nearly three years—this pretty, brown haired girl with the determined face and graceful carriage, and the father secretly admired and almost feared her. A wealthy and childless aunt in the city had besought Jennie to share her home, and Hiram Olcott's pretty daughter, though clinging to the farm, with all its dear memories of childhood and childhood's joys, chose wisely when she yielded to her aunt's request. It was better, far better for her, for even after her going there were plenty of children to keep the miserly old farmer in a perpetual grumble about money matters.

It was May and the country wore one glad smile, and Jennie hailed with delight the prospect of a visit to her home, assuming very willingly the responsibility of housekeeping while her two unmarried sisters attended the wedding of a cousin in a distant town.

This morning she was cooking, and with her sleeves rolled above her elbows stood beside the kitchen table. In one hand she held an earthen plate while the clip, clip, clip of a fork sounded noisily as she whipped some eggs to a froth.

"Yer sisters hed to marry to suit him," waived the nervous little woman, "an' you'll hev to, too; ef you don't there be awful fusses, so you'd jes better give in."

That morning the father had spoken to Jennie of a young farmer, whom he termed a "likely catch." She had expressed her opinion of him in so decided a way as to alarm Mr. Olcott for the safety of his much prized authority.

He was wont to speak of himself as a marvelous example of the patriarch. "Make 'em mind," he would say. "Keep yer household beneath yer feet; govern 'em well, an' they'll git along."

Jennie's boldness in opposing his judgment so stupefied him that his anger had not yet had time to blaze forth; but Mrs. Olcott knew it would come, and so after her husband had left the kitchen she pleaded with the girl to "give in." Jennie had been very thoughtful during the little woman's appeal, but now she was resolved, and it was the Olcott in her nature which spoke. "I wouldn't marry Jordan Moggs though father should threaten to murder me."

The eggs were stiff now, and as she set the plate down on the table she turned from her mother and busied herself among the ingredients for cake baking which were before her. Jennie was blushing as she began softly, "There is some one in Poole I like very much, mother, and he's coming out here to—" "He needn't mind comin'," said Farmer Olcott, grimly as he stepped quietly into the kitchen. His face wore a cunning leer, and his wind reddened cheeks were distorted by the sneering curves of his hard lined mouth. Seating himself on one of the painted wooden chairs, he drew the bootjack toward him and took off his heavy shoes with a calmness and deliberation which warned Mrs. Olcott that he was thoroughly aroused. The poor little nervous, broken spirited woman had learned that this particularly quiet and inoffensive manner of removing his footgear always preceded a burst of passion.

Hiram Olcott set his cowhide boots by the stove to dry, kicked the jack under the table, and, turning toward his daughter, shouted:

"Don't let me ketch none o' yer city fellers comin' to see you. Ef they do, I'll talk to 'em; not a word now," he growled, shaking his long finger menacingly at Jennie, as she essayed to speak. "I'm master in my own house, an' you'll not talk till such time as I'm done. You've been away an' kinder forgot how things is run here, but you might as well get broke in now. I tell you I won't hev any city fellers a follerin' you; an' ef I ketch yer aunt Kate makin' matches fur you I'll jest fetch you home from bein' a fine lady down there an' set you workin'!"

Before Jennie could speak he had gone into the dining room, slamming the door behind him.

Tears of mortification and rage stood in her brown eyes and hot words leaped to her lips, but as she glanced down at the agonized face of the little woman beside her the fierce mood changed. She bent to kiss the pain drawn lips, murmuring, "Never mind, mother dear; I'll be patient for your sake."

"That's a good girl, Jennie," replied Mrs. Olcott, with a sigh of relief, "try and git along peaceable like, an' jest give in for the sake of quiet. Yer pa's gettin' wuss and wuss."

Jennie wrote a partial account of what had occurred to her Aunt Kate, and this was the answer of that clever woman: "My Dear Niece—Your father needs managing, and I will undertake to do it. I have written to him to come down to the city and advise me about the sale of a piece of property, and you need not be surprised at anything that happens." Mrs. Kate Calding was the only one in the world who ever did understand her brother Hiram, and she had planned a clever little ruse to be played on the unsuspecting farmer.

Mr. Bryan, whom Jennie had confessed to her mother she cared a great deal for, was well suited to her. He had not yet declared his love, but it was not unguesed by the shrewd little maiden. To Mrs. Calding, however, he had opened his heart, and she bade him wait a little. She knew how prejudiced her brother was against all arrangements not conducted by himself, and rightly concluded that he might put serious difficulty in the way of the young people. After satisfying herself that the name of Jennie's lover was quite unknown to her brother, she resolved to introduce him as a young man who would be a good match for Jennie, if only the girl could be wise enough to think so. Allowing him to believe they had never met she trusted to his unequalled obstinacy to do the rest.

"I've wanted so much to talk with you about Jennie," said that lady, as she and Hiram sat in her well appointed drawing room the night of the arrival.

"Yes, and I'm willin'." She ought to be settled," said the old man decidedly.

"It does not do, Hiram," began Mrs. Calding, watching the hard lined face intently, "to depend on a girl's choice, and"

"Well, I guess it don't," he interrupted with a sneer.

"There is a young man in town who I know admires Jennie, and if he should meet her I think something would come of it." Very quietly, yet with the utmost caution, she made this statement.

The old man was interested. "Rich?" he inquired, rubbing his hands gently together.

"Yes," was the answer; then she went on.

"Of course it's so very uncertain, Hiram. You see, Jennie might refuse to have a word to say to him, and"

"Now, Kate, look here," interrupted the thoroughly excited old man, as he drew his chair nearer hers and emphasized his words with decisive gestures, "ef I like that young man I'll jest take him out home with me, an' I'd like to see Jennie tell him to go, if I'm livin'."

Mrs. Calding was delighted at her success thus far. The next day Mr. Bryan was introduced, and became the old man's ideal of a son-in-law.

On the farmer's return to his home Mr. Bryan accompanied him, having accepted the hearty invitation of his new friend to "jest run out an' take a look around our part of the country."

Jennie had been apprised of Mr. Bryan's coming, and of the little deception in which she was to play her part. She met him as if he were a stranger, while her father secretly rejoiced at the thought of subduing his proud young daughter.

Mr. Olcott took an early opportunity to enlighten Jennie as to her duty toward his new friend, and with a twinkle in her eye she promised to do her best to please him in the matter.

A week passed. Jennie and Mr. Bryan were very happy. The days were delightful ones to them, and the old farmer rubbed his hands at the success of his scheme, and gave his consent to an early marriage with no hesitation.

He often speaks now of his match making. "There's Jennie," he will say. "She'd hev picked up with some empty noddled city chap ef I hadn't jest took her in hand. I brung Bryan out an' told her that she'd got to behave to him. It's too only way to do—jest make 'em mind, an' they'll git along."

They would not deceive him for anything—the happy young couple; but when he boasts they think with loving gratitude of clever Aunt Kate.—Frances Burton Claire in Drake's Magazine.

Charity in the Rockefeller Family.

John D. Rockefeller's method of disposing of charity is described by The Cleveland Plaindealer. It says that the great bulk of his mail is examined by his private secretary, and only the few appeals which impress the latter gentleman favorably are passed along to Mr. Rockefeller, who takes a stack of them to the breakfast table every morning and distributes them among his children. These members of his family are charged with the duty of opening the letters and consulting their contents. Then each child decides what shall be done with the application, and the decision is written on the envelope and the name signed for reference if need be.

After breakfast, Mr. Rockefeller gathers up the mail and personally inspects each application. He then weighs the case and then acts as his conscience dictates. This dictation is frequently contrary to the decision rendered by his child, but that doesn't end the matter; not at all. The father gathers his children about him and reviews the case, announcing his decisions, and when they conflict with those given by the children he explains the reason for the departure from the recommendation.

A Double Dog.

Tom Wyly, of Johnsonville, has a most remarkable freak of nature; it is a double female dog pup, about six months old. It has four well developed legs in the proper place. Aside from these there is another well developed leg protruding from near the root of the tail and has grown about half the distance to the ground, at which point two well developed feet began to form and have grown in perfect shape, and both feet now drag on the ground as she walks. She is in perfect health and is a well developed double female, each part of her organism performing in unison its separate functions.—Nashville American.

HEXAGONAL POWDER.

WHY AND HOW CANNON POWDER IS RAMMED BEFORE IT IS USED.

It Is Compressed by Hydraulic Machines Into Convenient Little Prisms—Something About the Press That Does the Work—A Complicated Process.

A large number of persons who visited the scene of the disastrous powder explosion of the Du Pont Powder mills carried away with them, as mementos of the explosion, little six-sided pieces of a black material which they generally supposed to be iron or some soft metal. These mementos were six sided, about 1 1/2 inches long, one inch in diameter, and were pierced by a small round hole. They appeared to be blank six sided nuts, ready to be tapped or threaded to make them available on the bolts of the mill machinery. They appeared to be innocent little things, easy to pilfer and convenient to carry, and served nicely as mementos of the great explosion.

In reality these innocent looking mementos are lumps of concentrated explosive energy. They are prisms or lumps of prismatic powder. The name is doubtless owing to the peculiar shape given to each piece or block, which is that of a short hexagonal prism. This form is the result of intense pressure to which the powder is exposed in its passage through a powerful hydraulic press. It was chosen for the same reason that the honey bee chooses to make the cells in its comb hexagon—economy of space. In building cartridges for big guns out of this powder the pieces fit snugly together.

The compression has put every possible ounce of force into the prism, the small size of the prisms enable the gunners accurately to measure the force of each charge, and the hexagons pack together without loss of space in the load chamber of the gun. In the manufacture of this powder science has learned to ram the charge of powder before putting it into the gun barrel.

THE MACHINE.

The concentration of power by means of the hydraulic press is so great that solid prisms of this powder loaded into a gun would probably burst it, and if not would be wasted by ejection from the gun before it was all burned. The round hole in the prisms of powder, which makes them a complete duplicate of a blank six sided iron nut, is to secure expansion equally in all directions, and to insure the combustion of all the explosive.

The machines by which these prisms of concentrated power are manufactured are models of compact, strong and accurate working machinery. One of them stands about eighteen feet high, and will weigh about 50,000 pounds. It occupies a floor space 4 feet 4 inches by 3 feet 4 inches, is capable of exerting a pressure of 135,000 pounds on a surface of about fifty-four square inches in area, and will make fifty-four prisms of powder at every stroke of its pistons.

The most apparent feature of this press is its weight and strength, and its surprising characteristic is ease of movement and control. It is composed of two water cylinders and two rams, connected by four polished iron rods about four and a half inches in diameter, standing on a rectangular foundation. The cylinders and rams are at opposite ends of these rods. The rams work toward each other centrally with the rods.

Between the rams are four cast iron plates six inches thick, 3 feet 2 inches by 4 feet 6 in area, three of which move with the ram and one is stationary. This stationary plate is perforated with fifty-four round holes, about two inches in diameter, that have been partially filled with brass bushings. Through these bushings are the six sided holes in which the powder is compressed.

THE PROCESS.

Working directly over this plate is a similar one attached to the ram of the upper cylinder, and guided by the four polished iron rods which fit into a half round recess at each of its corners. It is armed with six sided brass plungers, which in its descent pass into the six sided holes in the stationary plate. Below the stationary plate is another plunger plate similar to the upper one, and below this is the needle plate. The needle plate is armed on its upper surface with fifty-four long steel needles, which extend up through the lower plunger plate and into the hexagon holes in the stationary plate. These needles make the round holes in the prisms of powder.

The power of these presses is generated in the cylinders simply by pumping water into them and behind the rams. The cylinders are 11, 12 and 13 inches in diameter. The upper one has two compartments—the ram filling the lower one, and above it is a cylinder with a lifting piston by which the ram is raised after its downward stroke in compressing the powder. The lower ram is raised by pumping water under it, and is lowered by letting the water out, which will be accomplished automatically.

In operation the parts of this press are so adjusted that the plungers of the upper and lower plunger plates and the needles approach each other through the movement of the rams. The holes in the stationary plate are stopped on the lower side by the ends of the plungers, and the needles entering through the plungers extend up through the stationary plate. The hexagon holes are then filled with wet powder and the rams brought together, exerting a pressure of 2,500 pounds on the powder in each of the holes, compressing into a solid hexagonal prism 1 1/2 inches long, one inch in diameter, with a hole of about 1/8 inch in diameter through it longitudinally.—Wilmington News.

If you wish to hear a fly walk, you can do it without the aid of the megaphone. Having made friends with the fly, spread a silk handkerchief over your ear and induce the insect to crawl across the handkerchief. As he approaches your ear you will distinctly hear a harsh, rasping sound, made by the contact of the insect's feet with the filaments of silk.

QUALITIES OF THE JAPANESE.

Sir Edwin Arnold's Enthusiastic Opinions of Japanese People.

As for the people, I am and always shall be of good St. Francis Xavier's feeling. 'This nation is the delight of my soul.' Never have I passed days more happy, tranquil or restorative than among Japanese of all classes in the cities, towns and villages of Japan. Possibly that is because I have had no business relations with my kind and pleasant Japanese friends, and have never talked very much metaphysics; but it seems certainly an easy way to keep on the right side of folks to let philosophy and theology alone.

Moreover it is, no doubt, necessary for such experiences to go a little behind that sort of Japan which you find on the Hattobas of Yokohama or Kobe, in the Yoshiwaras of those and the other open ports. At very little distance from the surface, which we civilizing westerners have done our best to spoil, will be still discovered the old, changeless, high tempered, generous, simple and sweet mannered Japan of old.

I frankly confess it has entirely charmed me; and therefore what I say of this Japanese nation, and their manners and customs, must be received with the proper caution attaching to the language of a friend, and even a lover. But where else in the world does there exist such a conspiracy to be agreeable; such a widespread compact to render the difficult affairs of life as smooth and graceful as circumstances admit; such fair decrees of fine behavior fixed and accepted for all; such universal restraint of the coarser impulses of speech and act, such pretty picturesqueness of daily existence; such lively love of nature as the embellisher of that existence; such sincere delight in beautiful artistic things; such frank enjoyment of the enjoyable; such tenderness to little children; such reverence for parents and old persons; such widespread refinement of taste and habits; such courtesy to strangers; such willingness to please and to be pleased.—Sir Edwin Arnold in Scribner's.

Crabs Are Fighters.

Crabs particularly are fighting animals; in fact, they will fight anything. I have seen a crab, in conflict with a lobster, catch the latter over the fore part of the head, where the shell is hardest, and crush it in by one effort. And it rather bears out my idea that the claws of these creatures are particularly weapons of war; that the moment one of them receives severe injury in a claw it drops it off by voluntary amputation, severing its connection with the body at the shoulder by an act of its own will. It seems to me probable that if the claw were necessary for feeding nature would rather seek to cure an injury to it than let the animal discard it altogether.

The species of crab which is most conspicuously a fighter is the hermit crab. Its first idea of independent life is to eat a harmless whelk and occupy its shell; its next notion is to give battle to every crab of the same persuasion as itself that it comes across. Altogether hermit crabs are undoubtedly the most quarrelsome creatures in existence.—Interview in Washington Star.

Education in the Argentine.

There are two universities, one at Buenos Ayres and one at Cordoba, which together counted 993 students in 1889, and delivered 234 diplomas, including 81 doctors of law, 85 doctors of medicine, and 11 civil engineers. In the whole republic there are sixteen national colleges, with a teaching corps of 464 professors and an attendance in 1889 of 2,599 pupils. In the capital and the provinces there are thirty-five normal schools, with 12,024 pupils of both sexes, who become professors and teachers, chiefly for the primary schools.

In Buenos Ayres in 1889 there were 285 primary schools, directed by 1,571 teachers and attended by 54,500 children. In the provinces there were 2,719 primary schools, with a teaching staff of 4,532 and an attendance of 205,133. To resume, the results obtained were 3,042 primary schools, 6,103 teachers, 259,695 pupils, 2,373 primary schoolhouses in the whole republic. Of these schoolhouses 485 are the property of the nation or of the provinces and 1

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL.

A perfect ovation of applause greeted Sarah Bernhardt as soon as the first syllables were heard to drop from her lips behind the scenes of the Tremont Monday evening and when she came before the curtain bearing a mammoth bouquet and leaning on La Tosca's stick the enthusiasm of the audience knew no bounds. Again and again she recognized the applause with stately bows, but the delight of the spectators seemed interminable. Finally quiet was restored, and she proceeded with the scene. She has changed but slightly since her last appearance in Boston four years ago. She has become somewhat more rotund but it is not very perceptible, and she has lost nothing of her former grace of figure or gesture. Tremont Theatre was filled to overflowing with the elite of theatre goers, and the reception given this noted actress on Monday was a high compliment. The drama was well appreciated. Although not of a particularly ethical nature, it contained strong parts that gave full play to the actress' wonderful powers, but one could not help being reminded as the play proceeded that the genius of the star was worthy of a better price, one that might have left a pleasant memory, as a monument to her skill.

"Sunlight and Shadow" has proved very popular and has received the commendation of press and public. The auditorium of the Boston Museum has been well filled at each performance during the week, and still the interest is unabated.

The Anglo-Swedish comedy, "Yon Yonson," presented by Gus Heege and a clever company of comedians has proved quite successful at the Boston Theatre, as we predicted it would. Performances will be given every evening next week and Wednesday and Saturday afternoons.

Joseph Murphy will appear on the boards of the Globe Theatre, Monday evening.

The days of "Ship Ahoy," at Park Theatre, are numbered—but two more weeks will be devoted to this comedy.

"Blue Jeans" is the attraction at the Hollis street Theatre at present.

"Dr. Bill" will occupy the Tremont stage next week.

At the Grand Opera House, "The Fakir" appears for the last time this evening. Monday will open an engagement with McKee Rankin.

The old Gilsey mansion on Twenty-eighth street, New York, is fast disappearing to make room for Harry Miners' new Fifth Avenue Theatre.

John Stetson will manage Henry E. Dixey next season, if Henry does not change his mind and sign with T. Henry French, for a season at the Garden Theatre.

"Yon Yonson" has been stirring up the quiet burgh of Philadelphia. Gus Heege's funny play and the Astor-Willing wedding were the two greatest events in the Quaker City this week.

The next of Charles H. Hoyt's plays to be produced is "A Temperance Town." It is a satire on the prohibitionists.

Gus Heege author of Yon Yonson, is writing a farce-comedy for Thomas E. Jackson, who will twinkle in the theatrical firmament next season.

George K. Fortesque will go to Australia in the spring, where he will be starred in burlesque.

Insolvency Court.

A session of the insolvency court was held in Salem, Tuesday, before Judge Harmon.

First meetings were held in the case of Capt. Robert Tarr, in which Eugene J. Hadley of Boston is appointed assignee; and Edward Higgins, in which T. Frank Hanson is assignee.

Second meetings were held in the cases of Benj. C. Mudge, Rufus H. Lefavour, Augustus Dresser, Eben F. Richardson, Rich & Gibson, George E. Thurston, William Gibbs and Porter & Osborn.

Several third and adjourned third meetings were held.

The Season for April just received. The illustrations are, as usual, of a practical and seasonable style. Some very handsome jackets, for both house and street wear, of a desirable shape and becoming to all figures are shown; also, new and novel designs for costumes for ladies and children, that will commend themselves at sight. This special feature of costumes for children makes the Season invaluable to mothers who are interested in having their children dressed in comfort, combined with beautiful shapes, and new in effect and design. Another desirable feature of the Season is the quantity and quality of new and rare illustrations given for fancy articles for home adornment. Nothing old or reproduced from other works, but specialties only found in the Season which should be in the hands of every family in the land who desire to make their children useful members of society and art. Yearly subscription, $3.50. Single copies, 30 cents. The International News Company, 83 and 85 Duane Street, New York.

Probate Court.

At the session of the probate court, held at Lawrence Monday, the following wills were proved: Wm. S. Crowley, No. Andover; Daniel Leaveck, Lawrence; Ellen McCarthy, Lawrence; Jeremiah McCarthy, Lawrence; Marcus Morton, Andover; Nancy J. Swett, Haverhill; Georgiana Spaulding, Lynn.

Administrations: Nancy J. Priest, Bradford; Isaac Prince, Lawrence; Ellen Riordan, Lawrence; George W. Upton, Salem; Catherine McCormick, Lawrence.

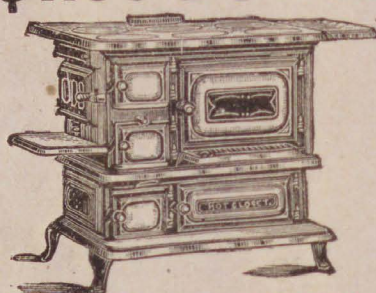

Among the inventories filed were the following: Joseph S. Morse, Methuen, $6184 50; Benjamin Russell, Danvers, $11,777 25; John Proulx, Salem, $4398 07; Henry Luscomb, Salem, $3200; Phoebe J. PARTIAL PARALYSIS

AND THE

Demon Neuralgia

VANQUISHED!

PORTLAND, ME., Nov. 1, 1890.

D. S. Co.—
Messrs.—For some six years I have been afflicted with spells of numbness, seizing me in my limbs, and at times affecting my power of articulation so I could not speak. This would be followed by hot-flashes, leaving me very weak and nervous.

Neuralgia also claimed me for its victim, and beset me for weeks at a time with its maddening pain. I grew very irritable. MY BRAIN FELT TIRED. Spells of despondency became more frequent, and it seemed to me sometimes that REASON WOULD BE DETHRONED.

Last March your advertising team passed our house, and as a boy came running up the steps, I met him at the door, and took the paper he handed me. In the quiet of my chamber, I read it through and through. I sent a boy to H. H. Kicker's for a bottle of DANA'S SARSAPARILLA. It helped me from the first. I am now taking my seventh bottle, and have not had a NUMB SPELL FOR OVER THREE MONTHS. MY LAST ATTACK OF NEURALGIA WAS OVER FOUR MONTHS AGO. My nerves feel strong, and I am well, or at least very near it. I have a good appetite, and have gained nineteen and one-half pounds in weight. I never expected to feel as I do now. My gratitude is unbounded. I hope that all afflicted as I was will try the renovating powers of DANA'S SARSAPARILLA.

Sincerely yours,
CLARA E. BLACKBURN.

The Patent Centennial Celebration.

Elaborate arrangements have been made to celebrate the Beginning of the Second Century of the American Patent System at Washington on the 8th, 9th and 10th of April next. All of the railroads leading into the National Capital have reduced their rates for the occasion and a great crowd is expected. President Harrison will open the celebration, and the literary exercises will be presided over by some of the most eminent inventors in the country. Twenty addresses upon the different phases of invention will be delivered by men who are famous as masters of the subjects they will discuss. A national association of inventors and manufacturers of patented articles will be organized. There will be a grand reception at the Patent Office by the Secretary of the Interior and Commissioner Mitchell, at which it is expected Cyrus W. Field, Thomas A. Edison, George Westinghouse, George M. Pullman and others will assist. There will be a military parade, a grand excursion to Mount Vernon, a Planked Shad Banquet at Marshall Hall near Mount Vernon; and the Navy Yard, the National Museum, the Post Office and other interesting national establishments will be open to the visitors. This is the first time in the history of the Republic that the inventors have celebrated.

Death Of Lawrence Barrett.

Lawrence Barrett died suddenly last night at the Windsor Hotel, New York. He has suffered several days from a severe cold, and his demise was not wholly unexpected by his immediate friends. While playing De Mauprat to Edwin Booth's Richieu he was seized with a severe chill Wednesday night and was obliged to give up his part during the third act. He was taken to his hotel and Mrs. Barrett was telegraphed for. Since that time he has sank rapidly.

Two new mails will be put on between Boston and Peabody commencing Monday, March 23.

A direct pouch will leave Boston at 6.05 A. M., arriving in Peabody at 7.07 in time for first delivery. A direct pouch will be dispatched from the Peabody office at 4.40, due in Boston at 6 P. M.

This will give a direct mail with Boston, South and West.

My daughter was troubled with neuralgia in her neck and back and was cured by Salvation Oil. I endorse this remedy fully and cheerfully recommend it. G. FIFER, 100 North Poppleton St., Baltimore, Md.

ADJOURNED TOWN MEETING.

REMARKABLE QUIET PREVAILED.

Many Appropriations Passed During the Evening.

The adjourned Town Meeting was held on Monday evening at 7.30 o'clock. The deliberations were presided over by C. H. Goulding, as Moderator and the session was notable for the absence of the noisy harangues to which citizens have been wont to listen. About four hundred people were in the hall. Business was transacted with despatch and many appropriations were made during the evening. The Warrant was proceeded with in regular order, although several attempts were made to give precedence to articles that were on the latter end of the list.

The first article taken up related to election of fence viewers, field drivers, pound drivers and surveyors of lumber. The same officers as last year were elected, by hand ballot, with a few exceptions. They are as follows: Surveyors of Lumber: Isaac A. Drown, C. G. Folsom and John Hackett; Field Drivers: Robert G. Buxton, Daniel A. Galucia and George Reynolds; Fence Viewers: Chas. G. Folsom, John I. Ingham, Benj. H. Taylor and Alerson Galucia; Pound Keepers: Bowman Viles, Robert P. Brown, and Edwin Buxton.

The Report of the Finance Committee was then taken up, and the several recommendations acted upon in rotation. The pay for town officers and firemen was made the same as last year. Chief Engineer Littlefield succeeded in getting an extra appropriation of $500 for the Fire Department, and authority to put in three extra fire alarm boxes, making the total appropriation for that department $8,300. S. F. Blaney then moved to amend the recommendation of appropriation for the Poor Department by adding $500, to be used for hose, bath tubs, water closets and a stand pipe at the Alms House, making this appropriation $9,500. The stand pipe is to be erected in case high service water is not extended to the poor farm. Mr. Blaney also secured an appropriation of $500, not recommended by the Committee for the purpose of laying edgestones and pavements around the public buildings. The special appropriation recommended for paving was opposed by Jonathan King and the vote was so close it was at first declared lost, but on a recount, it was carried—162 voting in the affirmative and 137 in the negative.

Charles C. Dodge moved that the two electric lamps on the Square be continued, provided a price could be made the same as Salem pays. Chairman Goulding informed the meeting that to adopt such a vote would probably result in the removal of the lights. The motion was opposed by Thomas F. Lyons. Amos Merrill, Esq., then moved an amendment, that the lights be continued at the discretion of the Selectmen and the latter motion was carried. The list of jurors was then read and accepted.

George O. Pierce moved that the town grant the use of Town Hall to Post 50 G. A. R., for Memorial Day and the motion was carried.

The article relating to appropriating $250 for Memorial day was adopted.

The article relating to the abolition of the Sinking Fund was referred to the Selectmen to report at the next adjournment. The article relating to laying out Lynnfield and Oakland streets was also referred the selectmen to be reported upon at the same meeting.

The article relating to the stone crusher and road roller, was referred to a special committee to report as soon as convenient after investigation.

The article relating to purchasing a hearse for Oak Grove cemetery was the last that was considered. Rev. Willard Spaulding was present and made a lengthy argument in favor of the scheme, and J. Shedd Needham appeared in opposition. Some further opposition developed from West Peabody, and the measure was voted down 70 votes in the negative and 23 in the affirmative.

The appropriations passed during the evening are as follows:

Town officers	$7,000
Fire department	7,500
Hose and hydrants	800
Highways	10,500
Poor department	9,500
Paving	2,000
Edgestones and concrete	2,000
Lighting streets	4,000
Police	8,000
Support of schools	30,500
Water works	6,000
Town hall	1,000
Board of health	400
Printing and stationery	900
Miscellaneous	1,000

Interest on town debt	13,000
High service sinking fund	1,600
Warren school house note	2,000
Reducing that portion of the town debt for which the general sinking fund was established	10,000
Cedar Grove cemetery	500
Post 50, G. A. R.	250

Total $125,540

An ox was driven to the shoeing establishment of A. Taylor Dodge on Central street, Monday, to be shod. The animal was secured in the sling, in the usual manner, but when the first shoe was applied he gave a vigorous spring and ruptured an artery, from the effect of which he died. Great care had been taken in getting ready for the operation of shoeing, as is the custom of Mr. Dodge, who is an expert in this line of business, and no blame is attached to anybody for the unfortunate occurrence.

THE JUDGE'S SECRET.

By ALFRED BALCH.

[Copyright by American Press Association.] CHAPTER I.

Mr. Jackson picked up a half sheet of note paper and handed it to his friend.

When Mr. Abner K. Gardner, chairman of the Democratic county committee, prosperous so far as his real estate business was concerned, partly of person, shrewd of eye and merry withal, came down the stairs that Monday morning, two weeks and a half before the election, he was probably as contented a man as could be found in the old Bay state. And why should he not have been? Mr. Gardner was one of the keenest politicians in the land, loving the game for the power it gave and the delight of matching himself against the long headed policy of his opponents, but caring nothing whatever for office.

A story told of him will illustrate his character better than columns of description. When Mr. Charles T. Kerr, the chairman of the Republican county committee, found himself embarrassed in his lumber business after the great flood in '81 the first man to come to his assistance was Mr. Gardner. The reason this gentleman gave was characteristic. "Politics in this county would lose all their snap if Charlie Kerr went up," he said, and drew the check. Now be it observed that this same Charlie Kerr had just elected his ticket, and Mr. Gardner saw no really good reason why he should not repeat his success the next time, but then Mr. Gardner loved a "foeman worthy of his steel" with an enduring love.

Honestly anxious as many politicians really are that good men and true should be elected to office to serve and rule the people, Mr. Gardner prided himself more on the nomination for county judge of William Truesdale Jackson on the Democratic ticket than on all the other men before the people. It had literally cost him years of work and thought to persuade Mr. Jackson to allow his name to be used, and when he at last succeeded he felt that he had added a tower of strength to his side. For of all men in that section none stood higher than "the squire," as they called him in kindly country fashion. A sound lawyer, a just and conscientious man, a good citizen, a wise counselor, he was one whom all respected and not a few loved.

A somewhat stern and grave man, his massive face crowned with a forehead like a dome, he looked the ideal judge. Possessed of a ponderous kind of eloquence, with an extraordinary power of making the most intricate case clear to the minds of judge and jury, his practice was naturally large and lucrative. In fact the salary of the position which he sought was far less than that which he earned by his work. It was the tribute he had honestly earned by his life that no man, even among his opponents, suggested that the squire wished the position for personal advantage. If you will picture to yourself a somewhat tall man dressed in black, a smoothly shaven face, hair rather thin and grizzled with deep thought, keen yet kindly eyes, which seemed to look through you, a slight stoop of the shoulders, a deep, melodious voice, you will see the squire before you.

As Mr. Gardner entered the pleasant dining room of his home, and greeted the noisy girls and boys who sprang forward to kiss him good morning, his eye caught sight of a note lying on his plate. Recognizing the handwriting of the squire he opened it, and as he read an expression of extreme perplexity spread over his face. Dropping the note he eagerly seized the morning paper, and hurriedly looked through it until he found an item which, when he had read, he walked slowly toward the bow window of the room, whistling softly to himself the first few bars of an old hymn tune. Men used to say that you could always tell that Abner Gardner was puzzled when you heard that air. Picking up the note once more he read it, and whistled again.

"What is it, Abner?" asked Mrs. Gardner.

"Nothing much; the squire wants to see me," answered her husband absently, and Mrs. Gardner knew him too well to ask any more questions.

In order that you may see what it was that puzzled Mr. Gardner so much, I will reprint the note:

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Oct. 24.
Homer K. Gardner, Esq.:
Dear Sir—An item in the Republican of this morning has attracted my attention. You will find it in the fourth column of the first page under the headline, "Can This Be True?" I should be glad to confer with you before I answer it. Yours faithfully, WILLIAM T. JACKSON.

The item in question was short and read as follows:

CAN THIS BE TRUE?
A correspondent has sent the following note to us, and it seems to call for a reply from Mr. Jackson at once. Without any information on the subject we cannot answer the query, but we hope, for the sake of a man who is generally respected, it is not true.

To the Editor of The Republican:
Sir—Can you tell me whether the William Truesdale Jackson who has been nominated by the Democrats for the responsible position of county judge is the same William Truesdale

Jackson who deserted from the Second Massachusetts infantry the night before the battle of Gettysburg, and was condemned by a court martial to suffer the penalty of desertion in the face of the enemy? If he is there are old soldiers enough hereabout to know him under no other name. Yours, A. HARRINGTON.

Mr. Gardner finished his breakfast with a light heart and made his way down to Mr. Jackson's house. He never doubted for a second the squire had prepared a positive denial of the story, and he found himself wondering with a vague curiosity who the deserter could be. Entering Mr. Jackson's house he found that gentleman in his library. After greeting each other Mr. Jackson picked up a half sheet of note paper and handed it to his friend. On it Mr. Gardner read:

To the Editor of The Republican:
Sir—In answer to the query contained in your columns this morning permit me to inform you that I am the William Truesdale Jackson who deserted, not the night before but two nights before, the battle of Gettysburg from the Second Massachusetts infantry, and who was subsequently condemned to the penalty of the military crime. My reasons for that act were and are personal to myself. I have only to add that although I was then much younger than I am now and with much less experience than I now have, I would, were I placed in the same position today, again desert before night had fallen. I remain, sir, your obedient servant, WILLIAM T. JACKSON.

Mr. Gardner looked up, his mouth shaping itself for the hymn tune, and as he looked a faint wave of color for a moment rose to the squire's cheek.

"You are not going to send this, I hope," said Mr. Gardner.

"Most certainly I am. If my fellow citizens choose to honor me with their suffrages, they shall do so with no false pretenses on my part."

"But, my dear squire!"

"The thing is true; why should I deny it?"

"There is no use of a denial. Let it alone, say nothing, and there is not a man in the county who will believe it." Mr. Johnson smiled somewhat sadly. "My friend," he said, "a suppressive veri will not help me in this matter. It is better to tell the truth; better, because it is right, and better policy as well. It is easy to identify me with the deserter—in fact, I have no doubt this has been done already. But even were it not, were that paragraph the last of it, now the question has been raised I could not consent to be silent."

"But the ticket!" broke in the unhappy chairman.

"I think it would be better that I resign."

"Not for a moment. That would be absolutely fatal. But squire, if you must acknowledge it, why not tell your reasons for leaving the service? I'm sure they were good ones. Then it would be all right. But that note is so curt; it flaunts your desertion in the face of men as though you were proud of it; it fairly defies all public opinion."

"I am proud of it, sir, and I thank my God that he permitted me to desert," broke in the lawyer in his deepest tone, through which there rang an accent of strong emotion. "But neither to you nor any other man living will I tell why I deserted. It must suffice you that I did, and have never regretted it. Understand me, Mr. Gardner, and as he spoke the faint color once more showed itself, "I know as well as you the disgrace which attaches to the name of a man who deserts on the eve of a great battle. I know he is called a coward and a poltroon. I am of no sterner stuff than other men, and it has required all the trust I have in One who is wiser than I to make it clear to me that the burden was laid on me for some good purpose."

"I have thought that perhaps some other way might have been found and I have been spared, but it was not to be. I do not regret the act, but I mourn over the necessity for it. My name as a man is as dear to me as yours to you. I make no vain boast, Mr. Gardner, when I say to you that if my life would benefit my country I would give it gladly. Yet I stand before men as one who fled at a supreme moment of that country's peril. This is not easy for me, for I am a proud man, sir, and I am not a coward; but I console myself as best I may by the consciousness that there is One who knows better than men, and that he in his wisdom has afflicted me. But, sir, while this is hard enough, it would be far worse were I to descend to falsehood, for then I should be ashamed in mine own eyes."

Mr. Gardner's eyes were moist as he grasped the lawyer's hand and stammered out an apology for his mistaken though well meant advice. He offered to carry the note to the office of The Republican himself, and the squire, visibly gratified by this, acquiesced gladly.

To say that Mr. Jackson's answer to The Republican created a storm of talk is to put things in the mildest way. The orators opposed to the Democratic ticket made the most of the weapon which had been given into their hands. Able editorials filled the Republican papers, and the machinery of the Grand Army was used to increase the excitement. While enemies taunted the deserter friends implored Mr. Jackson to speak, but to no purpose. Entreaties and abuse seemed to pass him by with equal lack of effect. When he appeared at public meetings—for as soon as the county committee had decided he should not withdraw the squire showed he was not afraid to face any music going—there was at first a disposition to hiss on the part of some who were there. This, however, was speedily put down by the majority. It was impossible for these people, among whom he had lived true and blameless for many years, to tolerate open disrespect when shown to him, and once the man got a hearing there was little danger of his audience thinking of aught save his spoken thoughts.

Mr. Gardner, shrewd as usual, and since that talk with the squire respecting him as he never had before, was the first to see the tide had turned, and seeing rejoiced greatly. It became apparent as the days went on, and the first shock wore off, that the impassioned appeals and able denunciations were rapidly losing their effect. Three days before the election a speaker who began a diatribe against "the coward" and "traitor" was fairly hissed into silence. Men said to each other that while desertion was a mighty bad thing, no doubt, the squire said it was right for him to desert, and likely as not he knew. Others thought the man could never have deserted because he was afraid or disloyal; it was not in him. Once the reaction set in it grew as rapidly as the feeling at first, and when the results of the election were declared there were many who felt no surprise.

For it was Judge William Truesdale Jackson now, and his majority was larger than that of any candidate on either side. Whereat Mr. Abner K. Gardner smiled and chuckled, and smiled again.

CHAPTER II.

Kneeling by her bedside was a boy of about ten years.

In the month of May, 1841, a woman lay dying in the little cottage which used to stand on the old "main road" just outside the then limits of the town of Lynn. Kneeling by her bedside was a boy of about ten years, and on his head the wasted hand of his mother rested, the fingers twining gently through his hair. She was speaking—this mother who was passing away—and the boy drank in every word. She told him in feeble and broken sentences his little sister had no one but him to look to for protection, and she asked him to promise that so long as he should live that protection would be given. Satisfied by the unspoken pledge in his eyes as he looked at her, for she knew what he was, she spoke of the comfort he had been to her since his father's death; of that father who had been taken away so suddenly, and of her own joy at the prospect of seeing her husband once more. Her sorrow, too, at leaving her children dwelt in her mind at times, and then he tried to soothe her by telling her he would be brave and true. And so with a prayer for them on her lips she became silent, and the boy knew when he once more looked at her that the ears that had never been deaf to him were dead now.

The two children—Willie, aged ten, and May, aged not quite half a year—were not left penniless. Their father, Dr. William Jackson, had accumulated a little money, and their mother had owned property when she married. Their only living relation, a brother of Mrs. Jackson, lived in New York, and he at once asked them to come and live with him. For five years Willie went to the New York schools and May grew up into as charming a little girl as one could find. Then Mr. Truesdale died, leaving his money to his nephew and niece, and Willie made up his mind they would move back to Lynn. Here they lived in the house of their guardian, Judge Black, and Willie in due time went to Harvard, and winning his degree in arts, passed into the law school. He was singularly old for his age. Even as a boy he was grave, self-contained and generally silent, and he cared little for the amusements which filled the time of his fellows. He was exceedingly fond of reading, and fairly devoured all the books he could find. Studying hard, he stood well up in his classes at all times, but it was not until he got into the law school that he really showed the stuff in him. To the mind of Mr. Jackson—it was curious how soon the use of his first name was dropped by his friends—the law assimilated as its natural food. The driest of dry treatises possessed an interest for him that nothing else had. He used to astonish his guardian by reading the code for pleasure. For Judge Black was one of those easy going men who drift forward in life's race rather than push, doing their work respectfully and living in a thoroughly respectable way.

However, the judge knew a man when he saw one, and he was only too glad to offer his ward a partnership as soon as he had passed the bar. It was not long before the new firm of Black & Jackson began to attract attention in the courts. The senior partner was without a particle of jealousy, and was only too glad to give the credit for the manner in which their cases were presented to his earnest, laborious and painstaking junior. After a year or two men said, with a shake of the head, Lynn could not keep the "young judge," as they called him; that in the natural course of events he would go to Boston and seek a wider field for his abilities.

All this while May Jackson was growing up into the most winsome little creature imaginable. She was utterly unlike her brother. She was capricious, exceedingly pretty, as full of coquetry as she could live; whimsical, but just as charming as a sweet, bright, lovable American girl should be, and she loved her grave, stern brother as she loved no human being. From a time beyond which she could remember nothing he had been father and mother and brother all in one. He was never too busy to listen to her wants and wishes, never unwilling to do things for her. He comforted her in her troubles, rejoiced when she was glad. To him she brought all things that interested her, sure of interest and help from him. And this feeling for her was an odd compound of paternal and fraternal love. He had never for one moment forgotten his pledge to his dying mother, nor had it in truth been difficult to keep, for his love for his sister was a part of Will Jackson's very being. She amused him intensely as she grew up. Her capriciousness was a source of wonder, and she had the charm for him of a constant series of surprises. The two attracted every one that met them, and the love they felt for each other was a very beautiful thing.

In 1858 Will Jackson was 27, and May was a young lady just going into society. The brother had been a partner in the firm for six years, and had built up for himself a business which paid him a handsome income. It was at this time that Miss Carrie Farnham, a connection of Judge Black, came to Lynn, and Will Jackson met his fate. He fell in love with her as strong men fall in love; he fairly worshipped the ground she walked on. She, too, had not known him very long before she thought she had never seen such a man before. When she went home to Springfield she left the memory of a look from her dark blue eyes for Will Jackson to ponder over, and when, in the following August, he followed her to her home, and as they walked along a lane one evening asked her a question the answer was "Yes."

To his dying day Will Jackson never forgot that lane and the smell of the twilight time. Friends and relatives approved, and the day was set for the wedding. It is probable that May would have alternated between jealousy and gladness were it not that her pretty little head was filled with thoughts of her own just then. The time came for the wedding, and Carrie Farnham went to Boston to do some shopping. I must hurry over this part of the story. There were big headlines in the paper one morning over the story of the railroad wreck, and Will Jackson followed the body of the girl he loved as the agony of the dead march wailed and sobbed from the great organ!

He went back to his desk and plunged into work to find distraction from his sorrow. He never spoke of the girl to any one, repulsing for the first time in his life his sister May. Except that he was graver than before there was little change in the man. The following year May was married to Charlie Farnham, a younger brother of the girl who was gone, and Will Jackson rejoiced over his sister's happiness. He behaved very generously, he transferred all the property they had together inherited in trust for her and her children. As Mr. Farnham was employed in a bank in Boston May went there to live with her husband, but every week letters from Will and herself crossed each other.

When the gun which was fired on Fort Sumter in 1861 "echoed round the world," Will Jackson was one of the first men in Lynn to volunteer. To such a man the call issued by President Lincoln came as an order from heaven, and when the Second Massachusetts infantry was recruited he at once signed the roll. His choice of a regiment was natural, for one of its officers, Capt. and afterward Lieut. Col. C. R. Mudge, who died at Gettysburg on July 3, 1863, and to whose memory the beautiful church of St. Stephens was afterward built in Lynn, was his greatest personal friend. Through the long weary months of fighting and marching Will Jackson went steadily on, doing his duty as he did most things in this life—with all his might.

CHAPTER III.

Hold the little one for Will to take. He had never seen the child before.

When Gen. Lee invaded Pennsylvania, and the armies of the north gathered hastily together under Gen. Meade to repel the onward march of "the flag with a single star," the Second Massachusetts was in its place prepared to take part in what was to be one of the most momentous and most bloody battles of the civil war. And with his regiment was Will Jackson, a private still, for promotion had been offered to him in vain. The last time when his lieutenant colonel had urged him to accept, for these two were fast friends as ever, he had said with a laugh, "Old man, after this war is over there will be mighty few privates, and I'm after all the distinction I can get." So the subject was dropped—forever, as it turned out.

It was two days before the line of fire which was to end the lives of so many brave men on each side began, as Reynolds' corps struck Heth's men, that Will Jackson, coming in from sentry duty, found the mail had arrived and recognized the handwriting of his sister. As he read the letter his face grew very stern, and he more than once clenched his fist unconsciously. It was a long letter, full of repetitions and contradictions, but he made out that May had discovered her husband to be in the power of a lot of men who were urging him to do something, she knew not exactly what, but which would utterly ruin him. In one sentence she declared that Charlie was innocent of wrong doing, and in the next she implored her brother by all the love he had always shown for her, by his love for his mother, by his love for the girl who was gone, by his love for the baby his sister held in her arms, to save that baby's father. She came to him, she said, when she could go to no one else—she alone could do anything.

As Will Jackson sat there far into the night heedless of military calls a fearful struggle went on within him. He knew as every man in the fast gathering hosts knew that a great battle was pending. His sense of duty to his country, his pride in his own good name, his soldier's instinct alike made the idea of desertion intolerable to him. And yet—it was May's husband and Carrie's brother!

"What! are they all gone?"

"Yes."

"I'm going to try a sort I've been reading about, if I have to send to Pittsburgh for 'em. Macbeth & Co.'s 'pearl-top.' They say their chimneys don't break."

"Another humbug, probably."

"Don't Muggins keep 'em?"

"I'm going to see. Give me a postal card. I'll have that chimney, anyhow."

Muggins got 'em for him, and did a thriving chimney business for several weeks, till everybody got 'em; and somehow his trade has increased all round ever since.

"Mr. Cochran," he began in a voice which was as harsh as the sound of a sharpening saw, "my brother, Charles Cochran, tells me that you and your accomplices have procured from him a fraud a certain document purporting to be a note signed by John Floyd, president of the bank, in which my brother is employed. The signature on this note is a forgery, executed by my brother, but the note itself was added after the signature was written, and I indorsement has my brother's name forged to it. I have come to get this note from you."

Cochran looked at his visitor, and he looked it seemed to him that Watson Jackson's eyes blazed with constrained repressed ferocity in their deep sockets. He shuddered as he looked.

A STEP in the right direction was taken in the Legislature this week, when the Committee on Taxation reported a bill limiting the exemption from taxation on houses of worship, $50,000. Costly edifices are wholly unnecessary to the service of God, and much of the money hitherto spent in their erection and equipment could be used to better advantage in works of charity. If any society is so overburdened with wealth as to make it necessary to spend extravagant sums in erecting churches, that society can well afford to bear a portion of the expenses of maintaining the government, and thereby lift a burden from the shoulders of the poor tax payers.

AN ATTEMPT was made in the Legislature on Tuesday, to kill the Public Bar Bill, by substituting a bill providing that no liquor should be sold or delivered to be drunk upon the premises, except to persons who have resorted there for food and have ordered and received a lunch or meal, substantial enough to indicate that the person had resorted to the premises for food and not for drink. The roll call was ordered and the amendment was killed upon an almost strictly party vote. Mr. Sohler of Beverly being the only Republican who voted for the amendment.

The device was a very clever one but there were friends enough of temperance to see the trap and avert the consequences.

THE DEMOCRATIC and Mugwump press is making a great howl just at present over what they style the bankrupt treasury. Large appropriations have been made by the 51st Congress which recently adjourned, but some of the appropriations were to cover obligations to citizens of the United States who have waited long and patiently for payment. Take for example the French spoliation claims. Generations have passed away since these claims first accrued, and many spent their last hours in pauperism because of the delays of Congress in passing the necessary appropriations to make good their losses. It is well known also that the retiring Democratic House of Representatives of the 50th Congress kept down appropriations for political purposes. It is an easy matter for a congress to adjourn without having made sufficient appropriations to pay current expenses, but when importunate creditors have waited as long as human patience will admit of, there is nothing to be done but to make the necessary appropriations for paying off the old scores.

The report of Chairman Cannon of the Committee on Appropriations, published in the special numbers of the Congressional Record this week, explains the appropriations quite satisfactorily.

A RUMOR has been current in Washington this week that a commission is to be sent from Canada to negotiate a treaty. The report has caused a smile at the State Department. Secretary Blaine has never favored a one-sided treaty and as such appears to be the only kind of alliance that can be made with Canada at present, it is not probable that much will be done in the line of negotiation by the State Department. Canada would gladly discuss the matter and endeavor to convince this government that a free market should be opened to that country, but no amount of persuasion could satisfy the Canadian government that manufactures from the United States should enter their province to compete with mother England.

Sufficient time has been wasted in making compacts that have been beneficial to the other country, and if another is entered into we hope the United States will be recognized as having some rights that are entitled to respect. For years our fishermen have been harassed in the prosecution of their business, and thus far no satisfactory arrangement has been made to relieve them of the annoyances of seizures for technical violations of treaties that never should have received the sanction of our government. If anybody can arrange a treaty that will give us a share of the rights that have been long denied, Secretary Blaine is the individual, and we hope he will have an opportunity to demonstrate his powers of negotiation before a great while.

Why suffer longer from Scrofula, salt rheum, pimples, boils etc., when by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla you may be cured? It is a really wonderful blood purifier.

AN EFFORT is being made in New York State to secure bi-ennial sessions of the legislature and to separate municipal from state and national elections. Both changes are desirable, and the latter is particularly so, as municipal affairs are allowed to take care of themselves on election day, the state and national issues considered naturally being, as of primary importance, and thus divert attention from local matters.

It is reported that Queen Victoria, although not seriously ill, is giving her friends much apprehension. She is exhibiting marked signs of age. The death of the queen will make a great change in the political horizon of Great Britain and may result in a republican form of government. While England enjoys the most liberal monarchical government of any country on the globe, the expenses incident to any form of monarchy are so enormous as to lead to discontent among the lower classes, who are the drawers of water and hewers of wood.

THE CAPE Ann Breeze publishes the following concerning the Danvers light plant:

"A good report comes from Danvers where the trial has been made of the town furnishing its own electric lights. Gloucester for some time past has been under contract to pay $6.67 per month, for her arc electric lights, while her incandescent lamps are paid for at the rate of rising seventeen dollars yearly. Thus it will be seen that for her arc lights the city pays $80 per year. In Danvers, the total amount expended reached $2853.64, and the next cost per light per year was only $45.59; with a cost per lamp per night of 17, 22 25 cents. As we have not the official report of the matter, it of course is impossible to give the number of arc and incandescent lights used at Danvers; but from the figures at hand it would seem that the experiment of a town's doing its own lighting was a success."

At the recent hearing at the State House facts and figures gathered from every part of the United States were presented by Mr. Burdett, who appeared in opposition to the petition of Peabody and other towns for leave to establish an electric light plant, but out of his entire list, which required several hours to read, there was no city or town that showed its electric plant to be on a paying basis. We have all seen these Danvers figures before, and most of us know, as our Gloucester contemporary will learn by scrutinizing the Danvers report, that certain items have been excluded from the computation that materially alter the rate of cost per lamp. Interest, loss of taxes and several other items were excluded from last year's reports, and as the committee seemed to believe it proper to leave out those items then, we presume it will be found that they are still wanting.

THE CHARGES preferred by Mayor Matthews against Police Commissioner Osborne seem to be taken as true by Governor Russell, although the committee of investigation failed to agree upon the guilt of that official. The Governor on Wednesday ordered the removal of Commissioner Osborne and nominated in his stead, Col. Henry Stone, a Republican. The whole matter is in the hands of the Executive Council and will be determined by that body next Wednesday.

Some adverse comment has been made upon the action of the Governor, and insinuations have been thrown out, of political policy, but the evidence produced at the hearing upon Mayor Matthews' charges, we think, fully justified the course taken by the chief executive, and shows courage rather than political policy. It is a common occurrence to ascribe almost any acts of high officials to cupidity, especially if they are in any way out of the usual course and display signs of originality or novelty. Courage and originality are commodities of such rarity in politics as to be seldom taken at their true value when discovered; in fact it seems often almost suicidal for one seeking public favor to display any signs of these virtues. We trust the Council will sustain the action of Governor Russell in the bold step he has taken.

Col. Henry Stone, who was named as successor of Commissioner Osborne, was born in Maine, and graduated at Bowdoin College in 1852, and from that time until the outbreak of the Rebellion, was engaged in journalism in Portland and New York. In the early part of 1861 he removed to Wisconsin, and when the first infantry regiment was organized he was commissioned Lieutenant. He served through the war in various commissions. He took part in all the engagements of the Atlanta campaign and was, in 1865, commissioned Lieutenant-Colonel of the 100th regiment of colored troops. Since his separation from the army in December, 1865, he has made his headquarters in Washington, New York and Boston. He is at present J. V. C. of the Loyal Legion of Mass., and a member of the G. A. R. and several historical and literary societies. In case of a concurrence by the Council in the action of the Governor, Col. Stone will assume the duties of Commissioner with credit.

THE MOB violence which has been perpetrated at New Orleans during the past week, casts a stigma upon the whole country, in the eyes of the outside world. But the doctrines of state sovereignty, so tenaciously adhered to by southern states, are a bar to national control, and any interference by the Federal government would be met with a wail of opposition from every state south of Mason and Dixon's line, to say nothing of many of the more northern states. There is an unfortunate gap in the Federal constitution that permits the whole country to suffer for the shortcomings of individual states.

In the present case, however, which has grown out of the murder of Chief of Police Hennessey, whose vigilance threatened to dismember the "Mafia," and send many a perjurer to the penitentiary, there is a stronger incentive to resort to lynch law than is usual. There are times when a summary vengeance, though not justifiable, is the only remedy left to an outraged people.

MORTGAGEE'S SALE.

BY SAMUEL A. JOHNSON,

AUCTIONEER,
139 Washington Street, Salem.

Mortgagee's Sale of Real Estate To Mary A. McCarthy, widow of Jeremiah McCarthy, Hannah O'Connell, daughter of Jeremiah McCarthy and to all persons interested in the estate of Jeremiah McCarthy:

By virtue of a power of sale contained in a certain mortgage deed given by Jeremiah McCarthy, late of Peabody, in the County of Essex, and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, deceased, to Ryan D. Perkins of said Peabody, dated the twelfth day of April, A. D. 1888, and recorded in Essex County South District Registry of Deeds, Book 1219, Leaf 288, for breach of the conditions contained in said mortgage and for the purpose of foreclosing the same, will be sold at public auction, on the premises hereinafter described on Monday, the sixth day of April, A. D. 1891, at three o'clock in the afternoon, all and singular the premises conveyed by said mortgage deed, said premises being described in said mortgage deed as follows: A lot of land with the dwelling house thereon, situated in said Peabody on a private way called Dalton's Court, bounded thus, viz: easterly by Dalton's Court about seventy feet and eight inches; southerly by land formerly of Patrick McCarthy about sixty feet; westerly by land of Kennedy about seventy-two feet; and northerly by land formerly of Cyrus Thompson about seventy-three feet. Being all of the land that Cyrus Thompson conveyed to the said Jeremiah McCarthy by his deed recorded at Essex County South District Registry of Deeds in Book 539, Leaf 249, and that Mary Thompson conveyed to the said Jeremiah McCarthy by her deed recorded in said Registry of Deeds in Book 580, Leaf 104, except so much thereof as the said Jeremiah McCarthy conveyed to Patrick McCarthy by his deed recorded in said Registry of Deeds in Book 550, Leaf 57, as explained and amended by his deed to said Patrick McCarthy recorded in said Registry of Deeds in Book 609, Leaf 168.

EDITOR PRESS.

DEAR SIR:—The bill for municipal suffrage for women will soon come up for discussion in the Legislature. This bill is in behalf of the only class of adult citizens who are politically helpless. They have personal and public interests, just as men have. These interests have to be legislated for. But women have no senators or representatives elected by themselves, and they are never members of the Legislature. Hence they are comparatively powerless as regards legislation for themselves. Any man can see how unjust it would be if he were treated in the same way. It is equally unjust to treat women so. The public will see this, and will sustain the passage of the municipal woman suffrage bill if editors of newspapers will state the case, and urge it as its justice demands.

LOCAL LINES.

The vote of last years board of selectmen granting a right to the Naumkeag Street Railway company to extend its rails to Forest street was revoked, on account of questions of drainage it is probable a new location of the track will be granted.

Robert P. Brown, Bowman Viles and Elbridge Mansfield have been appointed Forest Fire Wardens. The rights and privileges of a police officer have been conferred upon Robert P. Brown, which will enable him to make arrests in cases of setting forest fires.

The Trustees of Peabody Institute met last Monday evening for organization, and elected Harry F. Walker, chairman, P. H. O'Connor, secretary, and Frank C. Merrill, treasurer. The appointment of the Lyceum and Library Committees was left until the adjourned meeting next Monday.

This week the Dana Sarsaparilla Co. sends to the head of every family in the State (excepting in places of over 5000 inhabitants, where they distribute through agents,) a package containing Three Papers, that are veritable works of art, containing Prize Poems, Acrostics, Drawings, etc., and over Fifty Genuine Testimonials of the most wonderful cures ever wrought; nothing like these Papers were ever sent out for free distribution before. Call on your druggist and get one, or you will miss a present worth having.

The war drama, "Newbern," was presented in Town Hall, Wednesday and Thursday evenings under the auspices of Post 50, G. A. R., by local performers. As the play was presented for three successive nights two years ago, no particular description is needed here. Some of the actors of two years ago were engaged this week and performed their parts creditably. The tableaux were well done and the general effect good. Misses Lina Macpherson, Mary E. Tra-k, Mary A. Forness, and Messrs R. G. Hall, N. M. Quint, C. A. Sauger, C. P. Bancroft, Fred Wiggins and F. E. Hober sustained the leading parts. The entertainment was a financial success.

S. S. Laswell, the artist, 20 Beckford street, Salem, came to the city some three years ago, and in that time has made about six thousand portraits; many of them are hanging in the parlors of Peabody people. He has now at his studio samples of many of the leading citizens of Salem, Peabody and Danvers, including W. G. Webber, John P. Peabody, S. R. Hathaway of Salem, and the editor of the Danvers Mirror, also a beautiful life size crayon of the postmaster, T. D. Jackson, of this town. He is now prepared to show to the people of this town a line of samples second to none this side of Boston. When in Salem it will pay you to drop in to his studio and see his stock even if you do not wish to leave an order.

Mrs. Ruth Clarridge died at the Sutton Home on Tuesday at the advanced age of 91 years. She was the grandmother of Charles S. Goldthwaite, who resides on Central street, and for quite a number of years resided in his family. When the Sutton Home was opened last fall, she expressed a desire to be admitted although comfortably situated in her former quarters, and accordingly arrangements were made for her to enter the home, she being one of the first inmates. She has enjoyed remarkably good health in her new abode and seemed well contented with the environments. Her death was extremely sudden. Tuesday morning she had a shock of apoplexy, followed about 4.30 in the afternoon, by a second which resulted fatally. The funeral took place Thursday afternoon, at one o'clock.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL.

Primrose and West's Minstrels have attracted large audiences to the Boston this week. Monday, a "Brass Monkey" will commence an engagement.

"Ship Ahoy" closes at the Park Theatre next Saturday.

"Dr. Bill" occupies the stage of the Tremont Theatre this week.

"Sunlight and Shadow" has had a very successful run at the Boston Museum. Next week closes the engagement, and on Monday, the 30th, "New lamps for Old" will be put on the stage.

The Ho'llis Street Theatre has been well filled for the past two weeks, "Blue Jeans" being the attraction. Next week closes the engagement of this interesting comedy.

Joseph Murphy closes his engagement at the Globe tonight. Monday, for one week only, A. M. Palmer's Travelling company will occupy the stage under direction of Mr. H. S. Taylor in the great success, "Aunt Jack" with a prelude entitled "A man of the world," in one act.

Geo. W. Heath's, Atkinson Comedy Co., in the new "Peck's Bad Boy" with special scenery, stage settings and trick devices will appear next week at the Grand Opera House. The recent election of Geo. W. Peck, the author, to the governorship of Wisconsin has created a fresh interest in this comedy. During the present season the play has been rewritten and some new features added.

Rich and Harris have decided to give Boston its tenth theatre.

Ted Peiper is still with "Bluebeard, Jr." He is one of the few actors who are really indispensable.

T. H. Winnet has called his new comedy "His Nibs, the Baron."

A new sporting and dramatic paper called The Referee, will be started April 4 in New York, by E. A. Perry, for fourteen years connected with the Boston Herald.

"Natural Gas" gave two performances in Milwaukee last Sunday and broke the record at the Bijou Opera House. It is an old story with Dounelly and Girard this season.

George Backus' clever one-act piece, "In the Gloaming," will most probably be given in Boston next week in conjunction with "Aunt Jack."

Dan Sully and "The Millionaire" have caught on very big in San Francisco.

Stuart Robson will begin his New York engagement at the Union Square Theatre, on April 27. "The Henrietta," "Is marriage a Failure?" and a grand revival of "She Stoops to Conquer," will be the principal plays performed.

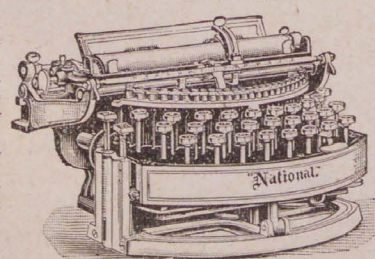

"O'Dowd's Neighbors," with Mark Murphy as the star, will begin its peregrinations some time this week. The supporting company is unusually strong, and with clever management, the piece is sure to prove a winner.

Something Worth Knowing.

If you are suffering from lingering or long-standing complaint which refuses to yield to treatment, why do you not consult the skillful and eminent Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., by letter? He is the discoverer of the wonderful remedy, Dr. Greene's Nervura, and is a specialist in the cure of all forms of nervous and chronic diseases. He devotes special attention to the treatment of patients at a distance through letter correspondence, and his success in restoring even the worst and apparently incurable cases to health with his harmless vegetable remedies is marvelous.

Write him a description of your case and he will return a carefully considered answer fully explaining your disease, and giving you a perfect understanding of all its symptoms, free of expense. It will, therefore, cost you nothing to consult him, and there is almost a positive assurance of being cured as thousands of others have been. Send for his symptom blank to fill out.

THE DESERTED FARM.

A dust worn traveler draws his rein At sunset's dreary hour, With longing looks for his old plain Gives sway to memory's power. Long years have passed since last he viewed His native heath and hill, And silence now with shadowy brood Makes nature weirdly still. There stands the homestead of his youth, And clustering round its door Come visions bright of love and truth From memory's endless store.

He sees again his father's form Within the doorway stand, His thin locks, whitened by the storm, By passing breezes fanned; Mother and sisters, brothers, there Resume their wonted place, And lost awhile in scenes so fair He sees each loving face, But wakened from his blissful dream The past returns no more; Alone he stands while sunset's gleam Casts shadows on the door: Deserted now its windows blank Stare at the passers-by, And weeds and grasses stale and rank, In wind swept chaos lie. No more from pastures green, at night, To farmyard come the kine, Nor homeward come with hearts so light The boys of "Auld Lang Syne." No neighing steed from yonder stall Impatient calls his mate; The shades of night around him fall, And all is desolate.

He turns again—with lingering look Surveys the old domain, He hears the murmuring of the brook Which onward seeks the plain; His old New England hillside home, Amid the gathering gloom, The wanderer turns once more to roam And leaves it to its doom. The sighing winds a requiem sing Amid the cheerless calm, A saddened memory still to bring The old "deserted farm."

A FAMOUS GEM.

"Eh!" said Uncle Venable. "You want to—get—married?"

"If you don't mind, sir," said Verberna, drooping her pretty head, while a blush like the lining of a pink sea shell crept over her face.

"But what nonsense that is!" said Mr. Venable, shutting his cabinet drawers, leaning back in his chair and looking at Verberna with eyes like gimlets. "Who is the young man?"

"Please, uncle, it's Fritz," whispered Verberna, half inclined to run away and hide herself.

"Fritz!" roared Mr. Venable. "That farmer fellow?"

"He's a farmer," admitted Verberna, "but he owns his own farm, sir, and his mother is very anxious for me to come there, because—"

"Oh, I can imagine that!" said Mr. Venable with a sneer. "You, a Venable, talking about marrying a farmer! You, the heiress of the Malmaison emerald! You, that might take any place in society that you wish when once the value of the gem is known, to talk of allying yourself to a clodhopper like that, who doesn't know an opal from a moon-stone!"

Verberna burst into tears.

"He isn't a clodhopper," said she. "And I wish there wasn't any such thing as the Malmaison emerald."

Mr. Venable transfixed his niece through his spectacles with a glare that might have paralyzed her.

"Silence, miss!" said he; "do you know it is on the reputation of the Malmaison emerald that the Venables will go down to fame? The Empress Josephine?"

"I don't care for the Empress Josephine," said Verberna, who, having drawn the sword, was now minded to cast the scabbard away. "And I'm not particular about fame, and I don't suppose I shall be a Venable forever."

"This sort of talk won't do, Verberna," said the old gentleman, solemnly. "Where would society be if every one refused to bear the responsibilities and shoulder the cares of his station? You are not merely my niece, Verberna. You are the representative—the last surviving representative—of the Venables. To you in my will is left the guardianship of the Malmaison emerald."

"I'm sick of hearing of it," vehemently protested Verberna.

"And," went on Mr. Venable, "I desire you to give up all idea of marrying this young man. It's entirely out of the question—entirely."

"But what is this about the Malmaison emerald?" asked Fritz Elcombe, in a bewildered way, when he found Verberna crying by the sitting room window a few hours later. Her blue-eyes sparkled through their veil of tears.

"You don't mean," said she, "that you have never heard of the famous Malmaison emerald?"

"That's my meaning exactly," admitted Fritz. "Do consider in my behalf that I've only been here a year, and have much still to learn."

"Well, listen," said Verberna, half crying, half angry. "It's a famous unset gem."

"Oh, it is, is it?"

"And it used to belong to the Empress Josephine."

"Did it, indeed?"

"And she wore it in those days at Malmaison."

"Hence the name, eh?"

"I suppose so. And Queen Hortense gave it to some one who sold it to somebody else, and it was finally given to one of the Venables who was a surgeon in the English army by a dying officer out in Hindoostan, to whom he had been able to tender kind offices, and so it has come down to us. It really is a wonderful stone."

"I should suppose so," politely incredulous.

"They say," went on Verberna, "that when uncle kept it in the little iron safe let into the guest chamber wall, whoever slept there used to dream of a beautiful, sad faced lady, who walked up and down in a marble terrace under the trees and wrung her hands. That was Empress Josephine, of course."

"Of course," still more incredulously.

"And my uncle declares that the color in the stone is always dim and turbid when the anniversary of the poor lady's death comes around," further added Verberna.

"Yes, that is exceedingly probable," dryly observes Mr. Elcombe.

"My uncle has been offered a great deal of money for the gem," said Verberna, with a sigh, "and I wish to goodness he'd sell it. But he won't. And what is worse, he wants me to marry a hateful, spectacled little old man in New York, who, next to himself, is the best judge of jewels in New York, and who owns a green ruby which is a dead match to Uncle Venable's unset emerald. He calls it an archaeological alliance."

"Well, I should think it partook somewhat of that nature," said Fritz thoughtfully.

"He is going up to New York to-morrow to a lapidaries' convention," said Verberna. "And I suppose he will bring Mr. Twistleton back with him. Oh, Fritz!"

"Don't be alarmed, heart's dearest," said Fritz, consolingly, encircling her waist with his arm. "The only way in which we can guard against this complication of ills is—"

"Yes, Fritz?"

"To get married while Mr. Venable is gone."

"Oh, Fritz! I wouldn't dare openly defy him like that. He has been very good to me," fluttered Verberna.

"I'll be good to you, too, my darling."

"Nonsense, Fritz! You're spoiling my hair. Do stop, Fritz!" protested the girl.

"Then promise me, Verberna."

"No, I'll promise nothing."

* * * * *

At the lapidaries' convention there was a stormy session that year. Herr Heidelberg was there, a stuffy, dried up old man, of great age and still greater arrogance, who had apparently come out of his spider web in Vienna for the sole purpose of discomfiting all the antiquaries of the western continent.

"De Malmaison emerald!" said Herr Heidelberg.

"That is a mistake. Vat you call one big lie. It occupies all your time to chase these lies and den nail him down. I haf the Malmaison emerald in mine collection."

"How can that be," said Mr. Venable, choking with rage, while Mr. Twistleton stood by ready to espouse his friend's cause, "when here it is—the very stone itself?"

He opened the velvet casket which contained the drop of green fire. It blinked at the circle of eager faces above it like a baleful eye. Herr Heidelberg laughed a shrill cackle of derision.

"Dat de Malmaison emerald!" said he. "O how easy are some folks hoodwinked! A ferry good imitation, I grant. O, yes, I can tell you all about him. But de genuine Malmaison emerald it was sell me in 1850, at Vienna, by one Capt. Giles Venable!"

"Verberna's father," thought Mr. Venable, with a start and a sinking of the heart.

"For de gracious Empress Augusta, who was den making de collection for a necklace which should outshine all the courts of Europe. I pay Capt. Venable 3,000 florins for him, and I engage my best workmen to make him an imitation Malmaison emerald which shall deceive ze very jeweler himself. I tink I make my fortune, but I am wrong. De captain he pockets his florins and he rides away. De gracious empress she change her mind. She get tired of emeralds, and she tink she will haf pearls. But I know dere will some day be market for de Malmaison emerald. I keep him; I haf him yet. Here he is, and here is ze letter from Capt. Giles Venable which proves his genuineness. Eh? Are you to be satisfy now?" And the green blaze of the real gem put the artificial imitation to shame at once.

Mr. Venable came home without waiting for the adjournment of the lapidaries' convention. He did not bring Mr. Twistleton with him.

"A man who couldn't even tell a bogus stone from a real one," sputtered Venable, "and calls himself a judge of gems! Verberna, come here."

Verberna came accordingly, with the teapot in one hand and a pan of hot graham muffins, fresh from the oven, in the other.

"I've got something to tell you," said Mr. Venable.

"Yes, uncle," murmured Verberna, her little heart giving an ominous throb under the cluster of roses she wore.

"The Malmaison emerald is a humbug!" said Mr. Venable distinctly.

"Oh, uncle!"

"And Caleb Twistleton is a charlatan and an adventurer." And he proceeded to impart to his niece the whole revelation of Herr Heidelberg.

"Your father, my dear," said he, "has wrecked the family fortunes and broken my heart. Henceforth I will give up the study of gems. I'll donate my collection, such as it is, to the Middleville museum. It may serve as a nucleus for something greater in time. And I'll devote myself to roses. They can't imitate flowers! And, Verberna—"

"Yes, uncle."

"You may marry young Elcombe, if you choose. After this, Twistleton doesn't deserve a wife."

"Thank you, uncle," said Verberna, demurely.—True Flag.

A Wonderful Memory.

The following anecdote of Mozart shows that he must have been a born musician:

"When fourteen years old he heard in Rome the 'Misereere of Allegri,' and knowing that it was forbidden to take or give a copy of this famous piece, he paid such attention to the music that when he reached home he noted down the entire piece. He was enabled a few days afterward to check the copy, when he found that he had not made a single mistake. The next day he produced such a sensation in Rome by singing the 'Misereere' at a concert that Pope Clement XIV requested that he should be presented to him. Thus, by his wonderful memory, he was enabled to begin with success his musical career."—New York Ledger.

Two Points of View.

"What we need in this community," said the speaker, "is real live men."

"I don't agree with you," retorted a bankrupt undertaker in the audience.—Munsey's Weekly.

HOW SIR RICHARD DIED.

Stately as bridegroom to a feast Sir Richard trod the scaffold stair, And, bowing to the crowd, untied The love locks from his sable hair; Took off his watch. "Give that to Ned; I've done with time," he proudly said.

'Twas bitter cold—it makes him shake, Said one, "Ah! see the villain's look!" Sir Richard, with a scornful frown, Cried, "Frost, not fear, my body shook!" Giving a gold piece to the slave, He laughed, "Now praise me, master knave!"

They pointed, with a sneering smile, Unto a black box, long and grim; But to white shroud nor badge of death Had power to draw a tear from him. "It needs no lock," he said in jest, "This chamber where to-night I rest."

Then crying out, "God save the king!" In spite of hiss and shout and frown; He stripped his decollet, dropped his cloak, And gave the headsman's man a crown; Then "On for heaven!" he proudly cried, And bowed his head—and so he died.

A Cataract in Labrador.

The interior of Labrador undoubtedly is the largest unexplored area on this continent. Up the Grand river, which empties into the Atlantic ocean at Hamilton inlet, are the Grand falls, which, if everything is true about them that is reported, are the most stupendous falls in the world. They are only about 160 miles up the river, but only two white men have ever seen them. Mr. R. F. Holmes three years ago went from England to visit the Grand falls.

He organized a little party to accompany him inland, and arrived within about fifty miles of the falls, when he was compelled to return on account of the failure of his provisions. The Labrador Indians say these falls are haunted, and they carefully avoid them, believing that they will die if they look upon them. The two white men who have seen them are Mr. Maclean, who, as he was ascending the river in 1839, was stopped by the falls, and Mr. Kennedy, who over thirty years ago had charge of Hudson Bay post, in Labrador. Mr. Holmes says the height of the falls is not certainly known, but in some respects there is little doubt they are the greatest in the world.—Goldswaite's Geographical Magazine.

Rousseau the Landscape Painter.

As we stand before a great landscape by Rousseau like the "Ravines of Apremont," lately in the collection of M. Marmontel, or of the "Hoar Frost," in that of Mr. Walters at Baltimore, one must call up a powerfully built man of middle size with a full brown beard; a wide, high forehead, which his friends declared Olympian; a shapely, straight nose; hair worn rather long, after the fashion of forty years ago; direct limpid gaze from eyes of unusual largeness and grayish blue in color, and a month whose lines indicate the absorbed man and the reticent. He was an extremely thoughtful man, not by any means smileless and the furthest remove from stupid; he was one of those who are hard to win for a friend, but once a friend, eminently the person with whom to pass weeks in the pursuit of a worthy study. There is the sympathetic man who talks, and the sympathetic man who is silent. Rousseau was the latter. Yet he could talk, and talk well, on nature, art and music, and he wrote a charming letter.

—Charles De Kay in Century.

Small Farms.

One of the mistakes of the times is the popular belief that everything in a business way must be big. The idea has grown out of our haste to grow wealthy and from superficial calculation, such as, if one acre pays $100, 100 acres would pay $10,000. Men seldom make such money out of very large orchards, and while a source of envy to small holders they are often, in fact, just holding on or are running ahead on borrowed capital. The men who make money and are getting rich out of horticultural pursuits are those who do not attempt more than they can look after personally. From ten to eighty acres are the sized tracts which pay the highest per cent. of profit, if they are properly conducted. The idea that a living cannot be made out of small place has retarded many from going into a business in which they might now be making an independent living.—California Fruit Grower.

When Pluck Was Slang.

This word affords an instance of the way in which slang words in the course of time became adopted into current English. We now meet with pluck and plucky as the recognized equivalents of "courage" and "courageous." An entry in Sir Walter Scott's "Journal" shows that in 1827 the word had not yet lost its low character. He says (vol. II, p. 30), "Want of that article blackguardly called pluck." Its origin is obvious. From early times the heart has been popularly regarded as the seat of courage. Now, when a butcher lays open a carcass he divides the great vessels of the heart, cuts through the windpipe and then plucks out together the united heart and lungs—lights he calls them—and he terms the united mass "the pluck."—Notes and Queries.

Anecdote of Michael Angelo.

Michael Angelo, at a time when Italy paid so much attention to ancient art that modern had no chance of being judged fairly, had, it is said, resort to a stratagem to teach the critics the fallacy of shaping their judgments by fashion or reputation. He sculptured a statue representing a sleeping beauty, and breaking off an arm buried it in a place where excavations were being made. It was soon found and lauded by critics and the public as a valuable relic of antiquity, far superior to anything done for centuries. When Angelo thought it had gone far enough he produced the broken arm, and, to the great mortification of the critics, revealed himself as the sculptor.—New York Ledger.

Are You Engaged?

Young Man:

If engaged, the question of a home doubtless agitates you. It may be only a few rooms, perhaps a cosy house, or maybe a mansion. In either case there are the furnishings to be procured, and where to get them is the question.

We know a place where you can get them better for less money than anywhere else (and on easy terms if you desire). A postal card or an ordinary letter will give you the information and a list of prices for a basis to work on.

Write to-day.

Young Lady:

In consulting with your future husband about the furnishings of your home, the first thing to be considered is STYLE, the second ECONOMY. Show him you have an eye to business by persuading him to examine our goods and prices.

In return, we promise you nicer styles than anybody else, and a saving of many dollars, thus proving that you were right in recommending him here.

Where Burns and Scott Met.

One of the most interesting of all the literary landmarks of Edinburgh, naturally, is the house in which Burns and Scott met for the first and only time. The story has been often told by Scott himself and others who were present, and is familiar to all admirers of both poets; but the question of the identity of the house has been the subject of much discussion among the local historians and antiquarians for many years. That it was the house of Professor Adam Ferguson there is no doubt, but as to where the professor at that time lived the doctors differ. In Peter Williamson's Edinburgh Directory of 1786—8, his address is given as Argyle Square—which was near the University, and which disappeared on the construction of Chambers Street—and this fact led to the inference that the interview must have occurred in that place, as Burns was in Edinburgh during the winter of '86-7. But Scott himself speaks of Ferguson as living in an isolated house some distance from the town (Argyle Square was almost in the heart of the city); in a biographical sketch of Ferguson printed in The Transactions of the Edinburgh Royal Society (1861-4), the writer says he lived at that time "in a suburb called the Sciennes"; Henry Cockburn in his Memorials says, "Old Adam Ferguson lived just east of my father's house," which would point clearly to the neighborhood of the Sciennes; and to crown all, Mr. Archibald Munro, in a letter to one of the Edinburgh papers about ten years ago, says he found a printed record in the Register Office, showing that Professor Ferguson disposed of his house in Argyle Square on the 31 of October, 1786—almost two months before Burns arrived in town—and that he got possession of Sciennes House on the 11th of October of the same year. This must surely settle the question of locality. Certain antiquaries assert that the stone cottage now called Alice Villa, and numbered 2 Sciennes Hill, was Ferguson's home—a claim which neither the size nor the modern construction would seem to warrant. So that the old building, or what is left of it, still known as Sciennes House, certainly appears to have been the spot Where Bobby Burns ordained Sir Walter Scott.

It stands on the north side of Braid's Place—which is not numbered—two doors from the street called "The Sciennes." The present front, entirely rebuilt, was the back of the house occupied by Ferguson. The original front, still remaining in part, looked out upon its own grounds, now a paved yard full of children and of drying clothes. This front is not visible from the streets about it, and the fact of its existence is comparatively unknown even to the inhabitants of its own immediate neighborhood. Sciennes House in its day must have been an imposing mansion. It has four windows in breadth, and is three stories high; on its roof is a balustrade, and groups of flowers and fruits carved in stone are still to be seen upon it.

The name Sciennes, by-the-way, is derived from the old Convent of St. Katherine of Siena, which once stood near by, and the word is pronounced in the local vernacular as if spelled "Sheens." The fact that all of these points are now for the first time established and made public must be the excuse for the devotion of so much space to this particular matter.—Harper's Magazine.

Simply Monstrous.

"Jimmy Cricket haint that a big 'un" was the exclamation heard from some youngsters on Boylston St. a few afternoons since, as the writer stood conversing with a gentleman near the Albany railroad bridge not far from the junction of West Chester Park and Boylston street. The cause for the boys surprise was found to be an announcement upon the long billboard, lately erected for a famous theatrical company opposite from where we were standing. A few minutes observation convinced us that the boys were not the only persons attracted to this enormous spread of matter. The board is the very largest in the world and the amount of paper used to cover it would make the fortune of every Italian Count rag-picker upon the streets of Boston. Laborers stopped work, horse cars stopped, pedestrians halted in wonderment, as Mr. J. W. Black, Boston's old, well-known photographer focused his famous thousand dollar, wide-angled lens upon the great billboard, to obtain by the sun's mysterious chemical touch an enduring photograph of the statements and familiar legends thereon. Among the chief of which was the following: "It holds the fort while Old Prouty is away!" "Every mother should have it in the house for Autumn colds, soreness, lameness in body or limb;" Think of it, Johnson's Anodyne Lintment unlike any other was originated by an old family physician in 1810; "without real merit, could it have survived for eighty years?" These in bold letters some of which nearly six feet tall, proved to be what astonished the boys. This big sign demonstrates one point clearly; the courage and persistence requisite to be successful advertisers, like I. S. Johnson & Co., the proprietors of Johnson's Anodyne Lintment; nothing daunts them. But after all, it is their forcible, persistent, courageous style of advertising which has made them successful, until they are now classed among the foremost advertisers of the day.—Boston Sunday Globe.

Massachusetts has been ridiculed by the people of New York State for the bigness of its election ballots, but without let or hindrance, our beloved State has kept on in the even tenor of her ways, increasing or diminishing in size as the exigencies of the case demanded; but how is it with the Empire now; we recently received sample party ballots of a little town election which measured separately, 135 8 by 6 inches, printed in small type and on poor paper, while the ballot in this State, under the Australian system is considerable smaller. The New York ballot is numbered before being voted. It is always best to remember the maxim, "he who laughs last laughs best."—Chelsea Telegraph and Pioneer.

Pluto's Safety Valve.

Two and a half miles south of the little Mexican village of Las Hummetas in western Arizona, in a low, sandy valley, flanked by tall mountains, there is a hole about three feet in diameter and of unknown depth, from which a dense cloud of smoke and steam is constantly arising. For 100 feet on each side of the hole the ground is moist and heated. Water collected in the holes which have been dug in this moist ground has the tendency to make one very wakeful, besides giving the face, hands and feet a paralytic numbness. Every evening at 7 o'clock large volumes of sand are shot from the hole, preceded by a roar that can be heard for miles.

An Industry That Electricity Is Killing.

The fact that the electric light has inflicted a severe blow at the occupation of the "midnight marauder," is now a familiar one, and a recent expression of opinion on the subject of protecting houses against the depredations of housebreakers, has called special attention to the means which are now available for that purpose. The task of the cracksmen is becoming a weary and comparatively profitless one, and it is easy to believe that the lament which is occasionally wafted from his lips into the columns of the daily paper, that "there is now nothing in it," is uttered with the utmost sincerity. At one time it was a very easy matter for a burglar to saw through a bar or cut a pane of glass, but with the electrical appliances now being used in many houses, and which are so easily adjusted and so reliable in operation, it is only a question of time when all houses will be provided with them. The slightest movement of door or window, after the alarm has been set, will form a connection and start a gong in a distant part of the house.

The alarm is thus given to the inmates, while the man, unconscious of the fact, is busily occupied in looking after the family silver. The same connection that alarms the sleeper, may convey the alarm to the nearest police station, so that by the time the burglar gets through with his engrossing work, he may find a couple of policemen outside, patiently waiting his pleasure. Not long ago, an enthusiastic merchant in Paris was so delighted with the working of this form of burglar alarm, that he became enamored of thief-catching as a sport. He cleverly spread stories of the hoards of jewelry and valuable bric-a-brac that were to be found in certain rooms of his house, and the bait was an irresistible one for the master-cracksmen of the city. The merchant bagged his game very nearly several times, but at last the story crept out, and his unique sporting career came to a sudden end. Screen doors as well as windows can be provided with the alarm fittings, so that the least attempt to make a hole will close the circuit, and let the inmates of the house know of the advent of their uninvited visitor.

A NATIONAL EVENT.

The holding of the World's Fair in a city scarcely fifty years old will be a remarkable event, but whether it will really benefit this nation as much as the discovery of the Restorative Nerve by Dr. Franklin Miles is doubtful. This is just what the American people need to cure their excessive nervousness, dyspepsia, headache, dizziness, sleeplessness, neuralgia, nervous debility, dullness, confusion of mind, etc. It acts like a charm. Trial bottles and fine book on "Nervous and Heart Diseases," with unequalled testimonials, free at Wm. T. Lee's. It is warranted to contain no opium, morphine or dangerous drugs.

Courtship in the Year 2000.

While the unmarried woman of the year 2000, whether young or old, will enjoy the dignity and independence of the bachelor of today, the insolent prosperity at present enjoyed by the latter will have passed into salutary, if not sad, eclipse. No longer profiting by the effect of the pressure of economic necessity of woman, to make him indispensable, but dependent exclusively upon his intrinsic attractions, instead of being able to assume the fastidious airs of a sultan surrounded by languishing beauties, he will be fortunate if he can secure by his merits the smiles of one.

In the year 2000 no man, whether lover or husband, may hope to win the favor of maid or wife save by desert. While the poet justly apprehending the ideal proprieties, has always persisted in representing man at the feet of woman, woman has been, in fact, the dependent and pensioner of man. Nationalism will justify the poet and satisfy the eternal fitness of things by bringing him to his marrow bones in earnest. But indeed we may be sure that in the year 2000 he will need no compulsion to assume the attitude.—Ladies' Home Journal.

FREE LAND COMES HIGH.

Town Lots Given Away, but There Are Expenses Attached to Them.

I heard about the man who was giving away town lots free, and one day I left the train at a small station and hired a man to drive me over to the site of the future great city. I found a sixty acre farm staked out into lots 20 feet front by 50 deep, but only one house and one person were in sight. The house was a farm cabin, and the person was the owner of it and the one I wanted to see.

"Come for a lot?" he asked as we drove up.

"Yes, in case my information is correct. Do you give them away free?"

"I do."

"I had heard so."

"Go right out and select any one you like. Those selected are marked with red stakes, those not yet taken by black ones."

I took a walk around and made a selection, and he found the number and said:

"You want an abstract of title, of course. Here it is, and the fee is $3."

When I had received it he hunted out a deed already signed, and filled my name in, called in the teamster and his wife for witnesses, and said:

"Here is your deed. I'll have to charge $4 for that."

I paid the sum named, and he then got down a big book and said:

"You want it recorded, of course. I am the county clerk. The fee for recording is $3."

I had it duly recorded, and just then dinner was ready. He invited me to sit down, but when we were through he said:

"My charge for dinner is seventy-five cents. The taxes on your lot will be due next week, and you had better leave the money. The amount is $1.75, and my commission for receipting will be twenty-five cents."

I paid him the sum named and was about to get into the wagon, when he said:

"The charge for bringing you over and taking you back is $2. Half belongs to me, as I own the wagon. One dollar, please."

"Can you think of anything further?" I asked, as I handed him the dollar.

"Well, you'll have to stop at the junction about four hours before the eastern train comes along. I own the restaurant there. Please eat all you can."

"I have," I said, after a little figuring, "paid you $13.75 for a lot you advertise to give away free. How much do you call this land worth an acre?"

"All of six dollars, sir. I've been offered five and wouldn't take it."

"Then I've paid you more than the value of two acres to get a lot large enough to bury a couple of cows on!"

"Exactly, sir—exactly, and I congratulate you on your bargain."

"Then you don't call it a swindle?"

"No, sir! No, sir! A man who will kick on buying a chunk of the glorious west for less than $14 isn't straight, and, Mr. Tompkins, I'd advise you to keep an eye on him going back and see that he doesn't jump out of the wagon and blink you out of your dollar."—Wilmington News.

Private Interview.

One may sometimes be made to see the uselessness of a foolish habit by being made the victim of similar behavior on the part of another. Here is an example of being paid "in one's own coin."

A landlord in a country village was busily employed at his desk when a farmer came to the door and asked to see him.

The man was asked his errand, but he persisted that he must see the hotel keeper alone. The latter stepped out to follow, when the farmer motioned him to follow and walked around to the rear of the hotel.

When they were well around the corner the farmer stated that he wished to buy a cow and had heard that the landlord had one to sell.

"Come on," said the other, and led the way through a garden, a patch of potatoes, and after climbing a fence, through a muddy barnyard and into the hotel barn.

When they were inside the landlord put his mouth near the other's ear and whispered:

"Say, neighbor, I've sold my cow!"—Youth's Companion.

Nicknames at College.

With students the range of sobriquets is wide and varied, a condition due to the close relations between the nickname and the nicknamed. Some well defined rules obtain, however, which show there is some method in this phase of undergraduate madness. Surnames often carry the same nicknames, although the persons may not be related, and may be separated by five or ten years in the time of their residence at college. For instance, Jones, '79, is dubbed "Buck," and the chances are excellent that Jones, '89, will receive the same nickname. Why, no one knows, but it is a curious instance of persistent personality. Again, nicknames received previously at school or at home count for naught, for the collegian is no respecter of traditions outside of the college world. So "Billy" becomes "Sister," "Jack" is transformed into "Reddy," "Joe" is elevated into "Senator," etc.—New York Tribune.

Mutual Lack of Confidence.

"I will have to owe you a dime," said Schuler Jewett to the tobaccoist as he bit off the end of a cigar.

"But I haven't got confidence in you to that extent. You will have to leave that diamond pin as collateral."

"That diamond pin is worth a dollar and a half, and I haven't got confidence in you to that extent," replied Schuler as he strolled out into Broadway puffing his cheap cigar.—Texas Siftings.

A Swedish engineer has invented a novel method of blasting by electricity. He employs a volta arc produced between two carbon rods placed parallel. When the arc is moved close to the spot where blasting is to be effected an intense local heat is created, followed by expansion, which has the effect of splitting the rock.

DINED ON ROASTED MEN.

Tale of a Fiji Cannibal Who Claims to Have Eaten Human Flesh.

The general curiosity of our entire town was aroused by the appearance upon our streets of a native of India, who was born upon one of the Fiji islands. He wore a very red or cardinal colored suit of clothes, knee pants, and jacket trimmed with black velvet collar and cuffs. Over his shoulder he carried a cloak that was tied over the left shoulder and under the right, made of white and red flannel. His head was covered with a blouse that fell down his back, and still over this a sombrero. His shoes were tied under the instep with a one-half inch white braid that wound around the leg up to the knees. His general appearance was very gaudy.

This native was converted when 23 years old, and is now 74 years of age. His father lived to be 130 years of age. His life has been spent in lecturing on the condition of his people. He speaks twenty languages fluently. When five or six years old he saw an Indian woman throw her child to a crocodile that weighed 1,000 pounds. The animal missed the child, and the mother caught it as it ran back to her begging for its life, when she threw it again. This time the crocodile struck it with its claws, tore it into two pieces and ate it very quickly. She then reported her acts to the pagan priest, and he blessed her, saying to her, "Go sin no more."

He also was a cannibal. When he was 7 years old there were twenty-one ministers who were caught traveling and prospecting for places to locate churches, and one of these ministers was beheaded every morning by their high priest and his flesh cooked, and the natives were made to stand in a row and each one was given a part of the flesh, and they stood and ate it. This was continued every day for twenty-one days, until all of the ministers were eaten up, and he ate part of twenty-one preachers.

He says the natives never do eat one another unless one is taken in war or as a missionary; that it is a mistaken idea that they eat one another to eat when this man and that is fat enough to eat; that the beasts of the field never slay one of their kind to prey upon, and that the savages have never gotten to be lower than wild animals.—Atlanta Constitution.

Geese in a Fog.

The oddest story of geese in the fog comes from Norfolk, and was told to Mr. Stevenson, the author of "The Birds of Norfolk," by the Rev. H. T. Frere. A large flock of geese were attracted to the town of Diss on a foggy night by the lights, and from the sound of their voices seemed to fly scarcely higher than the tops of the houses.

They came about 7 p. m., and, as it was Sunday evening, they appeared to be especially attracted by the lights in the church, and their incessant clamor not a little disturbed the congregation assembled for evening service. From that time until 2 a. m., when the fog cleared off and they departed, they continued to fly around utterly bewildered.

One bird happened to fly so low as to strike a gas lamp outside the town—probably it was flying round the light—just as a policeman was passing by, who very properly, as the bird was making a great noise outside a public house, took it into custody, and the next day it was with equal propriety sent off to a private lunatic asylum at Melton, where it lived for some years an honored guest.—Lectator.

When a Gentleman Seems Homeless.

Do you know when an elegant, polished gentleman seems like a tramp? It is when he allows the impression to go out that he has no place he can call home, or belonging to himself individually, by using club stationery for all of his correspondence. Something about it there is that smacks of snobbishness, poverty or secrecy more than of the dignity belonging to an exclusive or popular club. For a general address in the revolving of city life one's club is decidedly convenient, and there are certain notes and letters that have the correct air when topped by the club name, monogram or coat of arms, but when a man confines himself to the club stationery for his business letters, his formal and informal notes and all social letters it calls up that class of men who board at inferior hotels and slip around to well known high priced ones and help themselves to the paper that is left in the reading and writing rooms for the use of the guests.—Chicago Herald.

Lamp Shades.

Many of those gorgeous lamp shades that bewilder the eye from half a dozen show windows on Fifth avenue are made at home by women who have seen the proverbial "better days." The work requires nicety of taste and skill in needlework. Designs and materials are furnished sometimes by the shopkeeper, sometimes by the women that do the work. The largest shades are made over parasol frames. The materials entering into the work are silk, satin, lace and artificial flowers. Prices of the more elaborate shades vary from $10 to $50, so that the cost of a handsome lamp fully equipped may run up to $500. In some cases milliners also make lamp shades, and the fact that they are able to utilize remnants of silks and of other materials gives them a peculiar advantage in this business.—New York Sun.

But They Didn't.

John Hays, a Nebraska youth, received 460 letters from his girl, and she received 470 from him. Each one wrote on every letter, "Burn this after reading," but both took great care not to do anything of the sort. If you want a woman to save your love letters just let her think you want them burned.—De-troit Free Press.

Easter Millinery Opening.

Tuesday and Wednesday
March 24 and 25, we shall hold our Easter Millinery Opening.

It will be a most brilliant and elaborate showing of the Spring's earliest millinery, and we cordially invite every lady in Peabody to come and see the pretty hats and bonnets.

The space devoted the millinery has been very materially increased lately, and this enables us to make this one, double any previous event of the sort.

We send out no cards of invitation, but invite every lady in the county.

Rear, east front, second floor.

On the same two days we shall hold our Spring Opening of infants long and short coats and cloaks, and the new babies things.

There will be no such other assortment of these goods in the city.

See these too.

Rear west transept, second floor.

CHARLES SUTHERLAND,
Surgeon-General of the Army.

Colonel Charles Sutherland has been made Surgeon-General of the Army in succession to the late Dr. Baxter. Dr.
Sutherland is about 60 years old, a native of Pennsylvania and has been in the medical service of the Army for nearly 40 years. Rising from assistant surgeon and holding various responsible positions during and subsequent to the civil war, he became colonel and medical purveyor in 1876. He ranks high in the medical world and his appointment was universally commended.

with local applications, as they cannot reach the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure it you have to take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, and acts on the blood and mucous surfaces. Hall's Catarrh Cure is no quack medicine. It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years, and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surfaces. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing catarrh. Send for testimo-

DANA'S ABSOLUTELY CURES DIS-EASE!

CHARLES FOSTER
Secretary of the Treasury.

Charles Foster, the new Secretary of the Treasury, was born in Seneca County, Ohio, April 12th, 1828. His father kept a country store and gave his son a good education. When he was 15 years old his father's sickness compelled him to take charge of the store and the business career thus begun has been a wonderfully successful one, and it has made Mr. Foster a very wealthy man. His first appearance in public life was in 1870 when he was elected to the 42d Congress. His district had always been strongly democratic and had constantly given heavy majorities in favor of that party. He was also victorious in the three congressional elections following—a remarkable proof of his personal popularity, due to public appreciation of his admirable character. In Congress he quickly made his mark. He had the credit of adjusting in 1877 the arrangement by which the southern men were induced to consent to the inauguration of President Hayes, upon assurance that the State Government preferred by the white democratic in Louisiana and South Carolina would be recognized.
His conscious uprightness of character is recognized even by those who differ from him most widely. In 1879 he was elected governor of Ohio by a plurality of 18,129 votes; he served with great distinction. Mr. Foster is sound upon all monetary questions and and brings to the Treasury Department extensive business experience and long study of financial questions and will doubtless be to the President a valuable helper and adviser, who will proceed upon the lines laid down by the late lamented Mr. Windom.

In Australia, as in South America,
the railroad managers have discovered that Yankee rolling stock is more efficient and durable than the English article. A consignment of 18 passenger cars are soon to be sent out to Australia, and others are to follow,
"and our free trade friends," as the New York Press (Rep.) well says,
"will get one more grand object lesson in regard to the way in which protection has developed the mechanical arts in America until the finished products of our machine shops and manufactories are confessedly the best of their kind in existence."—Boston Jour-

EASTER OPENING — OF FINE — Spring Clothing!

Furnishing Goods, HATS & CAPS, FOR MEN'S, BOYS' AND CHILDREN'S WEAR.

WINTER CLOTHING. Generally when Easter comes, it's certainly time to think of Spring Overcoats—where you can get the best at the best prices. "The early bird" is always greeted with pleasure by all. Early buyers are always suited best. We'll suit you with a Spring suit, any time you call, but it is better to lead the procession. Extremes in dress do not show good taste. The best style for you is not appropriate for a chicken and may not be for the next man. "Fine feathers make fine birds" and fine Clothing makes a fine man—in appearance surely.

With us you don't have to "snell out" much money to get fine Clothing in style, material and fit, and you know it will wear well and look well.

We have now in stock for the benefit of early buyers, 1500 Men's and Young Men's Dress and Business Suits including Prince Alberts, 3 Button Cutaway Frocks, and Sacks. Over 50 different patterns to select from at prices for the finest grades ranging from $15.00 to $28.00.

And for the lower grades,

$6.00 to $12.00.

We wish to call especial attention to our elegant display of Spring Overcoats. We have nearly one thousand of these useful garments in stock, including all the new shades and some of the finest goods manufactured. There are over 40 different patterns; they are perfect in fit and we shall sell the finest grades at $15.00, 18.00, 20.00, 22.00, and 25.00.

The lower grades at:

We have now in stock nearly three thousand Boys' and Children's Suits including all the latest novelties which we shall sell at prices which will be sure to please our patrons.

ADJOURNED TOWN MEETING.

A LIVELY TIME AND LARGE SUMS OF THE TOWNS MONEY APPROPRIATED.

The second adjournment of the annual town meeting was held in the large Town Hall, about 900 people were present, and the meeting was quite a lively affair. S. F. Blaney was on "deck" and carried the crowd with a rush for several appropriations involving thousands of dollars. The article to see if the town would vote to refund the money paid by John Keefe 31. for license fees paid into the Town Treasury was in order for the evening, among other articles, and naturally brought to the meeting many of the old time followers of Mr. Blaney, which materially facilitated the passage of the motions made and supported by him.

The article relating to the extension of high service water mains to the Poor Farm was taken up, and considerable discussion followed. Mr. Blaney spoke at length in favor of the motion and easily worked upon the feelings of the voters. F. E. Earnham opposed the motion as he did not believe in breaking down the old rules. The town had always upheld the idea of not making extensions unless four per cent. on the money was assured. It was establishing a bad precedent and surely the town would be as much justified in extending water to a man living a half mile out of the way as to vote to do this thing.

Mr. Blaney said he expected some opposition but he did not fear it in this direction (Mr. Farnham's) In fact he would much rather have his opposition than his support.

Johathan King said the appropriation was a large one and should be referred to a committee to report later. Daniel Rabilly favored the extension. He knew of several families along the route who would take the water.

The motion was carried by a vote of 208 to 14. By the vote $3000 were appropriated. The pipe to be laid is a six inch main and covers a distance of nearly half a mile. Hydrants are to be connected at the Alms House for the protection of the Town Farm buildings.

After his success in the scheme just mentioned. Mr. Blaney moved to instruct the Water Board to furnish all water necessary for the use of the public buildings and other public purposes, free of charge. The motion was carried.

Mr. Blaney next moved to instruct the Water Board to reduce the water rates for family purposes, from $5.00 to $4.00 per year. The motion provoked much discussion and almost universal opposition from all who took occasion to speak upon the question, and a motion to refer the matter to a committee was made, which was voted down by Mr. Blaney's followers. The vote stood 134 in the negative and 80 in the affirmative.

An amendment was moved that the change take effect from and after July 1st. The question as amended was finally submitted to the house and carried. This of course is not binding upon the Water Board, and may be ignored, by that body, as it certainly would have been when Mr. Blaney held the reins in that department.

The last victory was followed up with a motion that the Water Board be authorized to make a thorough inspection of all supplies in manufactories and adjust and equalize the rates. This motion was also carried.

The next motion made by Mr. Blaney was to instruct the Water Board to make no connections or furnish any supplies, to any individual or corporation whatever, without a fair and equitable compensation therefor. This motion was a prelude, to a general tirade by Mr. Blaney against the town government, and certain corporations to whom he said valuable rights had been given. "The rights of the people had been trampled under foot and trailed in the dust and if a halt were not called, the people would rise in their might, to avenge the injuries and injustices and we should have blood shed." At this point, several timid and non-combatant people, like the lame captain, thought it time to commence a retreat, and left the hall. After some further talk the motion was carried.

The 20th article was then taken up—"To see if the town will purchase a new pump for the pumping station in place of the high pressure pump now there; also to authorize the sale of the high-pressure pump, in case a new one is procured; agreeably to the request of the Water Board." Mr. Blaney took occasion to assail the Water Board while this matter was under discussion. He affected not to believe the increased consumption of water, legitimate. If he were on the board—and he thanked God he wasn't, he would find out the cause of the increase if he lost his neck, as he did before. There was something rotten somewhere, in his opinion. He saw no cause for such large consumption and thought it should be looked into.

Mr. D. S. Littlefield took the floor and explained that several leaks had been found in street mains in wet places where detection was almost impossible. But due diligence had been exercised in tracing out the leakage, although nobody had "broken his back or lost his head" in so doing. He stated that Mr. Quint, the Superintendent was entitled to great praise for the attention he had given the work of the department. He had done thorough and effective work and was a valuable officer in that position.

The article relating to a Telemeter was referred to a committee to report at the next adjournment. This improvement came in for a share of Mr. Blaney's criticism. He stated that the one at Haverhill was a fair weather plaything. He wanted the system of which he was the father, followed out, as a substitute for the telemeter.

The article to see if the money paid for license fees by John Keefe, 31 was taken up, on motion of Thomas F. Lyons and it was voted to pay to the heirs of Keefe three fourths of the amount received by the town from the deceased, the other fourth has already been paid to the State Treasurer under the statutes.

The meeting adjourned at ten o'clock to next Tuesday evening, at 7.30 o'clock.

A brutal assault was made by an Irishman on an Armenian last Monday because the latter applied for work at Lennox's factory. The assailant it is thought, has skipped the town.

Main street was the scene of a lively drunken row last Saturday night about 11 o'clock. Two inebriates got into an altercation, and the one who was least fitted for a combat, as usual, challenged the other to a game of fistfights. The result may well be imagined. Bystanders interfered and tried to separate the belligerents, but to no purpose. Finally somebody called "cops" as loud as he could but no "cops" were to be had. At last the parties to the affray were induced to suspend operations until some more convenient time. After the crowd had disappeared an officer appeared upon the scene, who had been on duty on Foster street. More night police could be used to advantage if the town were able to pay for them. The assailants were subsequently arrested.

THE TWO DOCTOR GIRLS.

By MARY KYLE DALLAS.

[Copyright by American Press Association.] CHAPTER I.

"Mind footing it?" said the tall girl to the other.

When the train stopped at Corinna two girls alighted from it. Particularly tall made girls, with no frillery about them. There was a curious likeness between them: not that of relationship, for their features were unlike, and while one was tall and dark, the other was short and fair, but that which comes from following the same train of ideas or being interested in the same pursuit, the sort of thing that makes us say "That is a teacher," "That is an artist," "That is a clerk in a store somewhere," without being able to define our reasons for knowing that we are right.

These two girls, though their traveling costumes were utterly correct, had not the manner of society women. They were more offhand and independent. As they stood on the platform and looked about them they evidently felt that they could take care of themselves. The drivers of the stages from the different hotels held open the doors of their vehicles, but they took no notice of them.

"Mind footing it?" said the tall girl to the other in a careless way.

"I like it," responded the short one, with a smile. Then they took a firmer grip on two substantial traveling bags and two silk umbrellas, spoke to the baggage master in regard to two solid trunks that stood not far away, and started up the road, leaving the village and taking their way countryward. Soon they were among green fields, bounded on one side by dense woodland, on the other by a river, blue on this bright day as the sky above it. There were plenty of old oak trees, there were myriads of hazel bushes; golden-rod and Neptune's trident made a great show along the irregular stone walls. The roots of old fashioned farmhouses were visible, and here and there a red barn popped up, and a long, low brick building with a bell tower on its roof and without shade of any sort about it was visible upon a hill.

"What is that, Belle?" asked the shorter of the two girls of the other, who seemed to know the place best. "The schoolhouse, I suppose. It has the cheerful look one expects of those institutions."

"But it is not the school, my dear," responded Belle. "It is a kind of combination jail and poorhouse. They have very little crime and still less poverty here. They had two idiots, four old women and a small colored boy who had stolen a chicken in charge last year, and felt themselves crowded. There, Genie, is our home."

"Where?" asked Genie. Belle pointed with her umbrella to a red spot between two large trees and directly upon the river bank, and led the way, walking more rapidly than she had done, and carrying her umbrella over her shoulder, while Genie followed her with shorter steps, now that they were not walking together, and putting her umbrella under her arm in rather masculine fashion.

The house was a tiny building of one story and a loft, painted a bright red. A narrow entry ran through the middle, and on one side was a large room that looked like a workshop, on the other two rooms of equal size, one furnished as a bedroom, one as a sitting room. At the end of the entry was a door, and when Belle opened this she saw that from it steps descended under a low, rough shed into the water. A boat was fastened to the handrail of these steps by a rope.

"You've got the boat?" cried Genie.

"Yes," said Belle. "We'll have many a good row on that river, my dear. The place belonged to a boat builder once. You know that I've hired it for next to nothing, and our holiday won't ruin us. The boat was more expensive than the house, but we had to have a boat." As they looked down into the pretty thing, white without, green within, neither of the girls had any idea of the freight that that boat would one day contain, or that they had come there to meet an experience never to be forgotten while life remained to either.

The little red house seemed the calmest, quietest, most commonplace structure in the world, and they expected to spend a restful week or two under its roof and on the river, and to go home in September to begin life in earnest; for these girls were two new fledged medical students who had just received their diplomas, which on the arrival of their trunks they hastened to hang upon the well whitewashed walls of their habitation, one on either side of the mantelpiece. Reading these you learned that one, the tall, dark girl, was Dr. Isabelle Yolande, and that the other, the small, fair girl, was Dr. Eugenie More.

The house was already clean; a few small decorations were taken from the trunks, a little china, some table and bed linen. But there were no lambrequins or decorated wall pockets, or other pretty things with which most women surround themselves. A good many books were ranged upon some shelves in the corner of the sitting room. A disjointed student's lamp was put together and a little oil stove arranged. Two young men might have kept house in much the same style. Shortly they sat down together over a cup of coffee and some sandwiches which had made the journey with them, and then went out for a walk, arm in arm.

"I never told you why I studied medicine, did I?" asked Genie softly, growing confidential in the dual solitude.

"Never," said Belle.

"I am engaged to my cousin, who is a doctor. He is in Europe just now, and we thought it would be very nice to work together, to have one object in life. In the fall we are to be married. So many of the students have no interest in that sort of thing, but I thought you would, so I tell you."

"It is a very nice prospect," said Belle, with a little sigh. "As for me, I am all alone in the world, and I think I shall never marry."

"Oh, you are so handsome people are sure to fall in love with you," said Genie.

"They have," said Belle quietly; "but now I will tell you my secret. I have been in love; I shall never love again; I shall never see the man I still love, and I shall never forget him. His face is just there before me when I wake in the night, and often when I am walking in the street in the day time, so that I feel as if I could put out my hand and touch it. I hear his voice. I remember things he said to me. It was on a voyage to Europe that we became acquainted with each other. Papa was living then. He objected to our engagement. He told me he would put an end to it. He did. I never asked how. Then I was 18, now I am 24, but I feel just the same. I am not foolish about Carlos; I shall not sigh and pine over it; only it was sweeter than anything else can ever be. I had my happiness. It is over. Now I am a doctor with a career before me. Men's lives often begin like that. Why not a woman's?"

"Oh, Belle!" said Genie, "perhaps you will meet again after all."

"After this don't talk about it," said Belle. "I never said all that to any one else. Tell me all about your own love affair whenever you choose; I shall like to listen. I only wanted you to know all about me now that we are to be chums for the summer."

"Thank you," said Genie.

They walked on arm in arm. Suddenly Genie found that Belle had led her, unaware, into the vicinity of the ugly brick building.

"Why do you come here?" she asked.

"I want to show you the local institutions," said Belle. She nodded to two old women who sat in two dilapidated rocking chairs at the door of a long, low hung room, with benches set against the walls and an unblackened stove with a long stovepipe still standing in its place, though it was summer time, and passing around the house came to another door, which revealed a very tidy little parlor, its window adorned by white curtains and pots of geraniums, where a woman sat sewing with her foot upon the rocker of a cradle—a youngish woman in a tidy muslin gown and a neat white apron—who arose and came out to greet them.

"Do come in, Miss Yolande," she said. "I heard you were coming down, and I'm real glad to see you again."

"Thank you," said Belle. "This is my friend, Miss More, Eugenie; this is Mrs. Fenn."

"I am glad to make your acquaintance; take some seats," said Mrs. Fenn, placing chairs.

"Mr. Fenn is sheriff of Corinna," said Belle.

"Don't speak of it," said Mrs. Fenn, shaking her head. "Don't speak of it. I was as pleased when he was appointed, and I didn't mind his havin' to live here nor nothin'. The poor folks didn't give no trouble, and we hadn't nobody in the prison more'n three times a year, and when you've been strugglin' along like we had, a regular celer was suthin' to rejoice in. But lands sakes me an' he wishes we was organ grinders now or bootblacks or anything."

"Dear me! Mrs. Fenn, I'm sorry to hear that," said Belle.

"Yes, you've come on us in times of trouble and tribulation," said Mrs. Fenn. "Listen to that."

The three kept silence for a moment. Then Belle said in a shocked voice. "Who is sobbing so?"

"It's my poor Bijah," replied Mrs. Fenn, putting her handkerchief to her eyes. "He's the tenderest hearted critter alive. And jest as good and pious—and it's broke him down to think that he has got to hang a feller critter Friday next is a week. I don't think he'll live through it. It is awful!"

The girls shuddered.

"Perhaps he'll come out and talk to you," said Mrs. Fenn. "He used to set lots by you. He thought you was so smart and kinder independent, larin' to be a doctor. And I think there had order be lady doctors myself. They is things you can say better to a woman. But I'll call Bijah."

She left the room as she spoke, and was heard talking to some one beyond an inner door. Then she came back.

"Bijah will come as soon as he's washed his face and put him on a collar," she said. "He's real glad you've come. He kinder thinks you might think of something, though what there is to think of goodness knows."

"I am so sorry for him," said Belle.

"Well, that helps some when you're feelin' real desperate," said Mrs. Fenn, rocking the baby. A moment more Abijah Fenn came into the room. He was naturally a pleasant looking man of forty odd, his light brown hair had a wave in it, and his eyes had full lids and long lashes like those of a woman, but they were red and swollen just now. He advanced to Belle and held out his hand.

"Glad to see you and your friend, Miss Yolande," he said. "You must think me a great baby, but what my wife has told you about has broke me all up. There ain't been a man executed here before for twenty years. I can't do it; I can't. And it means out into the world again for me and my folks if I resign. Even so, I dunno as I could get off before the day. I know I couldn't."

He paused. The girls could think of nothing to say.

He did not seem to expect that they should, but went on slowly:

"If it was one of them tramps, like the one that murdered the peddler down to Groton, I could brace up," he said; "but this is the nicest fellow, a gentleman, Miss Yolande. I'm as sure he is innocent as I am that that there baby is. He couldn't murder nobody; taint in him. My wife knows it as well as me. Don't you, Sarah Jane?"

"I feel to know it, Bijah," replied the woman. "He says to me, says he, 'I pray you to believe me innocent, for I am.' So pretty he spoke, I can't allow it is right for Bijah to hev to hang him. I wish you'd go in and see him, ladies, and see what you judge by his looks. He is furrin, but he is real nice. He is a artist."

"It would be a comfort," said Mr. Fenn. "You see lots of folks in the city, and you air real smart. You might get an idea whether or no he done it. I'd like you should go in."

"We will go," said Belle. "But tell me, what sort of murder was it?"

"They is different kinds," said Mrs. Fenn. "Some is jest temper, this warn't. It was a mean, low down sort of money."

"Old Uncle Peter White," said the sheriff—"a good, kind old man, foolish about keepin' money in the house in a lonesome place. This gentleman is a furriner. That helps set folks agin him, they bein' a prejudice on account of them Eyetalian, and while he was down here a-sketchin' makin' pictures, Uncle Peter boarded him. Tom Bond, Smith's hired hand, give the wust evidence agin him, and, to be sure, his razor was found on the floor near where Uncle Peter was a-lyin' with his throat cut. All the boxes and drawers was open, and bloody water where some one had washed their hands in the boarder's room, and when they arrested him he had Uncle Peter's watch in his pocket. He swore he was takin' it to be repaired, but they didn't believe him. Make him talk to you; I want your judgment. A woman's judgment is good on faces, anyway, and you're extry smart."

Mr. Fenn took a bunch of keys from a peg behind the door.

"They tried to lynch him when he was fetched here fast and on his way to court," he said. "There ain't nobody but thinks him guilty only us. Ef he was, I don't want to hang no man, but I feel to know that he never done it." And having come to the corner of the building that was used for the prison he unlocked the door. As they entered the air felt at once close and chilly, and the cell into which they were admitted was rather dark. At the farther end a man sat on a wooden chair before a deal table, his face hidden in his arms.

"Senor, I've fetched some company to see you—ladies," said Mr. Fenn.

The prisoner lifted his head, showing a sad and beautiful face with great dark eyes. He looked from one to the other, and uttered a low cry, and Belle Yolande, stepping before the others, put out her hand. Then the two began to speak rapidly in Spanish, which Genie did not understand.

They talked for half an hour, while the sheriff stood staring at them. Then Miss Yolande offered her hand again, and walked out of the cell.

"I know you don't think he done it. I know that by your shakin' hands," said Mr. Fenn when they had turned the corner.

"I would stake my life on his innocence!" said Belle Yolande, turning a white face toward him. "My life! Yes, my soul! He shall not die!"

"Maybe she kin do suthin, seein' how she feels," the sheriff said, watching the girls out of sight.

CHAPTER II.

The ceremony was performed.

Meanwhile Belle and Genie walked on until a lonely place in the road was reached, when Belle suddenly paused, and sat down upon a rock, leaning heavily against the trunk of a great tree.

"Oh, Genie, Genie!" she cried, "you cannot tell what I suffer! I must be strong! I must not break down! I must do what I can! I need all my strength, but this is almost more than I can bear! The man there in prison! The man they are going to murder—yes, murder! for he is utterly innocent—is the man I love. The man I told you about an hour ago. It is thus I meet him again! The man I love, and who loves me—my Carlos. He told me all. How he had taken the old farmer's watch with him to the village to be repaired on the very day when some wretch murdered the old man. The fiend found the razor on his dressing case. He could prove nothing—circumstantial evidence is against him—oh, what shall I do! What shall I do, Genie?"

"Oh, Belle!" cried Genie, sinking on her knees at her side, "how do you know that he is innocent? There have been wicked men with handsome faces before now, and sometimes such men have great power over women, and can win their hearts. He is only a stranger whom you met on an ocean voyage, after all. Belle, darling, it may be that he is guilty. Your father disapproved of him. Perhaps he had better reason than you know."

"Silence!" said Belle. "You speak of one I love. Surely God will give me the power to save him. In Him I trust." Then they went back home together, and so the weeks that they had fancied would be spent in a sort of perpetual picnic began. So the dreams of happy leisure hours, long rows up the river, long lolls in the hammock ended, but Genie was heart and soul with her friend, and the fear that she was mistaken in Carlos gradually died away. She heard how Belle's father, a rich man at the time, had dismissed the young Spanish artist—how he had led him to believe her betrothed to another. She heard the whole love story now—such a pitiful thing—and she was a daily witness of her friend's fruitless efforts to move those in power. She went to the governor herself to beg a pardon or even a reprieve, but he had proclaimed pardons too carelessly, had been blamed for it, and desired to retrieve his errors. Perhaps he honestly believed Carlos a vile brute whom it was best to banish from the earth.

Isabelle, meanwhile, went to the prison every day. None knew of her visits save Fenn and his wife and Genie More. Before long Genie was as thoroughly convinced that the young artist was innocent as was her friend.

There, within the prison walls, the two once more betrothed themselves, and one day a new surprise awaited Genie More. On their arrival at the prison they found awaiting them a mild old priest, evidently of Spanish birth.

"We are to be married, Genie," Isabelle said. "Carlos and I. However this may end I am his, and his only. I wish to be so in the sight of God. Besides, it will be better, for many reasons."

They entered the cell together, Fenn and his wife accompanying them. The ceremony was performed. "Adieu, my son," said the old priest when he had uttered his blessing. "If you die, men murder an innocent man, and a pure soul takes its flight to heaven. Let this uphold you and your wife in the great trial you may have to endure."

It was on that day that Genie learned that a plan had been devised for the escape of Carlos from the prison. It was carefully arranged, but the very night that it was to be carried into effect a watch was put upon the prisoner. It was plain that the man was suspicious of the sheriff, whose horror of officiating at the execution he openly ridiculed. The plan could not be carried out in consequence of his presence. The doom of Carlos de la Rossa was sealed. But suddenly a strange light began to glow in Isabelle's eye. It almost seemed as though hope had returned to her heart. One day she went down into the village and returned with yards of dark red silesia, with which she veiled every window of the great empty work room. She saw to the fastenings of its doors. She went to the city and came home laden with parcels, which she set carefully aside. She had long conversations with the unhappy sheriff. Carlos she could no longer see. For some reason it was forbidden. The watcher sat at the door of the prison and warned every one away. Genie could not guess what hope was in Isabelle's mind. At last one day this latter said to her:

"Genie, you have been a true friend to me. I shall soon ask you to do more than you have yet done. You and I are not like girls who have been guarded from all unpleasant things; we are women, but we are two young medical students all the same. We should have the trial of the dissecting room as well as male students. For a good object you can be strong and brave, I know. You will do as I tell you and will neither scream nor swoon. You are Dr. More, remember, as I am Dr. Yolande." Genie simply gave her her hand, and so they stood together, hand in hand, and heard the prison bell begin to toll, and knew, as well as all the place for miles about knew at the same moment, that Sheriff Fenn was about to do his duty, that Carlos de la Rosa was about to die upon the scaffold. But Isabelle Yolande uttered no cry, shed no tear. With slow deliberation she removed the dress she wore and substituted her short sleeved roving costume. Genie did the same, and followed Isabelle into the boat. What was to be done Genie did not know, but she vowed, amid the wild throbbings of her heart, to stand by Isabelle to the end, whatever that might be.

Rapidly they rowed down the river, on which there were never many oarsmen, and today none. At last Isabelle turned the boat and sent it flying into a miniature bay formed by a bend of the crooked little stream, almost within call of the prison grounds. This little nook was so shaded by great willows that it was invisible from the river, and near it stood a great, dilapidated barn, roofless and deserted for years, which sheltered the spot from those upon the road. Here for the first time she broke silence. "My good, kind friend," she said, "the time has come when we need all our courage, and more than all our physical strength, I fear. On the night when our attempt to effect an escape for my husband failed, I formed a plan for the success of which I have been working ever since. You remember the lecture we attended on the subject of 'Death Upon the Gallows,' and how we once assisted in the restoration of a man who had committed suicide by hanging? I have forgotten no particular."

"Nor I," said Genie. "I think you guess my plan," said Isabelle. "Unless Abijah Fenn proves false, I swear, God helping me, that my Carlos shall not die. Fenn has promised that life shall not be extinct when the—the"

She paused and turned pale. "I understand," said Genie. "But, my poor Isabelle, you forget; your hopes may mislead you. There must be an examination by a doctor, and the man who has watched the sheriff so closely will still be there."

"All that has been thought of," said Isabelle. "The doctor who will make the examination is the one who sees to the health of the poorhouse and the prison. He is an old man of seventy, deaf, weak of sight and fond of drink. Mr. Fenn has discovered that the bottle is also a temptation to the man on guard."

IT is said that, that climax of idiosyncrasy, the "Farmers' Alliance" has taken root in the Granite State, and it is rumored, is likely to sprout in Massachusetts.

THE RUMORS that were current last week, of the resignation of Secretary Proctor from the cabinet of President Harrison, have been denied in toto. There is said to be no foundation for the concurrent rumors of the retirement of Senator Edmunds either.

THE SUGGESTION has been made so many times it has become threadbare, but now the spring is opening and commercial and manufacturing enterprises are receiving a bit of a stimulus, why not organize a Board of Trade in Peabody, and see if she cannot be given one of those "booms" that are striking other municipalities that have fewer advantages to claim the attention of capital than our town. The results of a Board of Trade in many inferior towns, show what concerted action will do towards increasing populations and valuations.

IT WILL be a matter of some surprise to learn of successful speculations among any of the tribes of North American Indians, and yet such an instance actually exists in the new state of Washington. The Puallup Indians of Puget Sound, sixty-three years ago, ceded a very large tract of land to the United States government, retaining only about 15,000 acres, which was under the special stipulation of ownership in severalty. There are 1800 of these Indians, and the tract of land has so enhanced in value by the settlement of Tacoma, as to make the entire tribe independently rich. Efforts have already been made by their white neighbors, to get possession of their territory, and a Commission will undoubtedly settle the question by paying them a handsome figure. The tribe is said to be more highly civilized than most of the Indian tribes, having courts of judicature and other institutions belonging to civilization.

THE ACTION of the Executive Council on Wednesday, refusing to ratify the order of Governor Russell in removing Commissioner Osborne, was perhaps no more than could be expected under the circumstances. The reasons given by that body, however, that Mr Osborne had been fully exonerated by the committee that investigated the charges preferred by the Mayor of Boston, we believe to be insufficient, for, notwithstanding the report, the governor had a right to use his discretion in the matter, and if he was satisfied that the commissioner had in any way compromised himself, or the dignity of his official position, that was good ground for removal. An official holding a high position like that of Mr. Osborne's should not only comply with the laws, but he should avoid the appearance of wrongdoing. We do not understand the governor to have stigmatized Mr. Osborne as guilty of the charges investigated and reported upon by the committee. That was not necessary as a foundation for the order of removal.

QUITE A breeze of excitement has been raised among shore owners of Wenham Lake, by the action of Beverly in attempting to secure further legislation, providing for taking wider strips of the shore by Beverly and Salem. Salem seems also, to be opposed to the scheme she is to be dragged into. It is nothing that is sought by the city, and it does not appear to be materially beneficial, but is certain to entail enormous expense if the project is ever carried out.

The cry about polluting the water of the lake meets with small degree of credence, and it looks like a mere whim. Mayor Rantoul's address to the city government on the subject is timely and to the point. A committee has been appointed to investigate the matter and if there is any great danger, or any urgent necessity for taken wider strips of shore than the statutes now permit, and thus breaking up the great ice industry at the pond, that committee will be pretty likely to find it out. Whatever is done should be tempered with extreme moderation, for there is not only the present, enormous ice business already established, to be considered, but the large tracts of land about the lake, in future years are likely to be greatly enhanced in value by reason of their proximity to that beautiful sheet of water, if left undisturbed; and any interference with the present situation of affairs would of course forever destroy any such prospective value.

THE RESULTS of the adjourned town meeting last Tuesday evening prove the dangers of town government in communities where the population is large and varied as it is in Peabody. In such communities, a noisy minority often overawes the more decorous and less confident majority, and thus rules the assembly. It is not difficult either, to gather together a sufficient number of unthinking voters in town meeting, to actually out vote the more conservative element who do their own thinking. Empty eloquence passes at too high value, while the contents of the town treasury is held in small esteem. Many voters think because the town is to pay the bills there is no reason for economy. Such people if they ever think at all, are apt to consider the large tax payer as the only sufferer, and him they deem an object to legitimate plunder. A striking instance exists in our own town. We have in mind a venerable gentleman, a large taxpayer, who has years been treated by the class of voters to whom we have referred, as if he had no rights that they were bound to respect. The attitude assumed toward that gentleman has in many instances been shameful and scandalous. But what has occurred in his case would have been repeated in many other instances had gentlemen who bear the burden of the taxes offered any remonstrance against the prodigal waste of the municipal treasury which they are called upon to replenish. But it is not by monetary appropriations alone the public treasury may be depleted. Votes by which the regular revenues of any particular source or department are reduced or diverted necessarily result in high tax rates and are as burdensome to the tax payer as lavish expenditures, and this often without any offset benefits to the non-taxpaying class. The vote of the town, instructing the Water Board to reduce family water rates from five dollars to four dollars per year, falls within our latter observations. In very few instances will any direct saving accrue to the poor and laboring classes.

If our voters have the true interest of the town at heart, and wish to encourage manufacturing and commercial industries to centre here, they should be careful how they exercise their franchises in town meeting. Boards of Trade may be established, railroad facilities may be good, and all the modern municipal improvements may be introduced, but if the town treasury is empty and tax rates consequently high, other towns and cities will continue to attract manufacturers and capitalists who are looking for favorable locations, and we shall be left to bear the burden of taxes as best we may.

ESSEX COUNTY.

Gov. Russell has definitely accepted the invitation of the Winders, and will be at their ball at Lesters' Hall, Lynn, on Monday. This is the first invitation of this character outside of a military or charity ball that he has ever accepted. He will be accompanied as usual by Gen. Dalton and several members of his staff. The Boston & Maine R. R. has placed a special car at his disposal, and he will leave Boston at 2 15 P. M., and reach Lynn at 2 40. Mr. Rohrer, representing the company, and Mr. B. A. Knight, chairman of the reception committee of the Winders, will meet him at the depot and carriages will be taken for the works which will be thoroughly inspected. The Governor desires to meet the working people and a reception may be arranged. In the evening he will attend the ball.

A syndicate which includes the chief owners of the Lynn Belt Line, Thompson-Houston company and the West End Street Railway, held a meeting last week to consider the feasibility of extending the electric street railway service from Lynn to Boston. The plan contemplates the construction of a broad boulevard from Lynn to the Point of Pines. The extension would follow the line of the coast, passing through Oak Island, Winthrop and the various other points contiguous to the bay. The passage from East Boston to Boston would be by ferry boats upon which the cars would be floated across the harbor. The running time suggested, was fifteen minutes between trips, and the rate of fare ten cents. The scheme is considered perfectly feasible, and it is not improbable that it will be inaugurated. The chief obstacle to be overcome are acquisition of franchises. Among the gentlemen present at the conference were ex-Alderman Smith, of Boston, Hon. Roland G. Usher, of Lynn, E. P. Shaw, of Newburyport, Gen. B. F. Peach, of Lynn, Mr. Blake, of Rye, General Manager Crosby, of the street railway department of the Thompson-Houston Electric Co., Boston, W. G. Benedict, of Crescent Beach, W. B. Littlefield, of A. Towns, G. H. Breed, Benjamin Pitman, F. J. Cushing and Stephen F. Breed, of Lynn. These gentlemen generally carry out what they undertake.

The increase in the carriage business at Amesbury is quite perceptible.

The annual Nahant town meeting was held on Saturday. Vote on license—Yes, 55; no, 27.

William J. O'Brien and John J. O'Connor were brought into the Lynn police court Monday morning by continuance, the charge against them being assault on two Armenians. O'Brien was sentenced to one year in the house of correction; he appealed, and was held in $1000 to the superior court. O'Connor was further held until next Saturday under the same sureties.

An institute meeting was held in B.ahan hall, Amesbury, Tuesday, under the auspices of the Amesbury and Salisbury Agricultural society. B. P. Ware of Marblehead spoke in the forenoon on the "New south," and in the afternoon O. S. Butler of Georgetown addressed those present on "Is it profitable for Essex county farmers to breed the general service horse?"

William H. Luby was arraigned in the Lawrence police court Monday for the illegal keeping of liquor. When the prisoner testified in his own defence, the evidence given by him was so glaringly false that Judge Stone directed that he should be pronounced guilty of deliberate and wilful perjury, and an order was issued for his confinement in jail.

It is rumored that the Grange of Ipswich is to form a branch of the Farmer's Alliance.—The follies of man will never cease.

Charles Poor has purchased the Elias Brooker estate at Ipswich.

A relic in the form of a paper weight, formerly owned by Charles Sumner, and used by him in his study in Washington, is in the possession of Miss Sarah E. Hunt of Danvers. The material is a very hard baked pottery. It is about six inches long by four wide and three quarters thick, with beveled edges. The surface is highly ornamented and the upper surface bears an inscription, a quotation from Sidney—"Let us think with consideration, and consider with acknowledgment, and acknowledge with admiration." The article is quite unique in its way and a valuable souvenir.

The work of double-tracking the Eastern division of the Boston & Maine from Ipswich depot to Salisbury is being vigorously pushed by large gangs of men. The rails for the second track have been deposited where they will be needed.

New Easter Gloves
JUST RECEIVED.

"I think the Hats and Bonnets are just lovely this season!" Of course it was a woman who said it, and of course it was Webber's she was talking of.

The Hats and Bonnets are charming. More graceful in design, more dainty in outline and trimming, more altogether lovely than for many a season. You see the saucy beauty of some best in the Untrimmed. A forest of forms, a wilderness of shapes; and a jungle of the trimming things close by.

YOU'LL FIND BRIGHTNESS HERE ALL OVER THE STORE.

Dividing interest with the Millinery are the Jackets and Wraps—and they are worthy comrades, complementary, essential to each other. The best Hat with an indifferent Wrap, or the reverse, always fails of satisfaction. To meet the demands of intelligent taste these two great stocks must be equally perfect—and they are.

Good form in dress does not always imply great cost. Judgment and taste must often go with economy, and that is why this stock is so rich in moderate cost garments. Cheviot Jackets $5 to $20; Covert Cloth Reefers, $8.50 to $20; choice imported models, only one each—Jackets, Capes and Wraps, $20 to $50; Cheviot Long Garments, $14 to $25. Is not the variety sufficient?

Girls' and Infants' Clothing—rich lines of the newest things. In close keeping with the Millinery Opening is the display in our Lace Department.

Airy, beautiful fancies are here shown in the utmost abundance and the very largest variety.

Salem Oratorio Society.

The Salem Oratorio Society have in mind a musical festival to last three evenings, to be given in the hall of the new Cadet Army, April 21, 22, 23. Seats will be placed in the hall which is estimated will seat 1500 people and this will give a capacity fully equal to that of Mechanic Hall. It is fortunate that this new hall can be thus utilized, for the Oratorio Society had fully determined, and with good reason, never to give another performance in Mechanic Hall. The idea of the society is to have a performance of the Ladies' Vocal Club, the first evening, under William J. Finch assisted by Messrs Lang, Foote, Fenollosa and Phippen—all Salem born pianists, who will be heard in some selections arranged for two pianos. The second evening the Harvard Glee, Banjo and Mandolin Club will give one of its characteristic entertainments, and the closing evening, the Oratorio Society, with orchestra and soloists, under the lead of Carl Zerrahn will give selections from Elijah, Judas Maccabaeus and other works.

The tickets for the entire series of concerts will be placed at $1.50 each, and it is necessary that 1000 should be subscribed for to ensure financial success. The subscriptions are coming in very materially, so it is stated, and for this we are glad. The society has done good work in years past, its present chorus is larger than for some time and an excellent presentation of the numbers on the closing evening is assured. We trust the people of this town will aid in making the festival a success.

It is a new venture for the society—not so ambitious as has been attempted in some other places, but all that it was felt was wise at this time. It may lead to a festival in the future where the chorus can be heard every night, and this would be a consummation which every lover of music in the vicinity would be glad to see brought about.

Death of Rev. S. P. Smith.

The friends and former parishoners of Rev. S. P. Smith, who formerly occupied the Universalist pulpit will learn with deep regret of his recent death at his home in Skowhegan, Maine. He had been ill for several weeks. While in Peabody, he was a strong and active worker in the interest of temperance. He had a large circle of warm friends not only in the church, but throughout the town.

LOCAL LINES.

Every house needs a good Dining Table. There is no comfort in the old style oval table. The legs are in the way, the leaves are never level, and the table creaks constantly. Oak and Cherry Pillar Extension Tables can be bought as low as $10 at Paine's Furniture Warerooms, 48 Canal street Boston.

The G-Clef chorus held its final meeting of the season Tuesday evening. The treasurer's report showed that the club came out fifty-three dollars ahead after paying all the expenses of the term. The condition of the G-Clef is very gratifying to its forty-four members. The recent concert in the Institute netted the club $93. The money was banked. The election of officers will be held in October.

THE STANDARD, THE RELIABLE, THE TRUE, THE TRIED, HUNT'S REMEDY

Will Positively Cure

ALL KIDNEY, ALL LIVER, ALL BLADDER, ALL FEMALE TROUBLES.

"I have suffered for years with weak back and swollen limbs. Hunt's Remedy cured me."—MRS. WM. GRAY, Hotel Goldsmith, Boston, Mass.

"It saved me from death by Bright's disease."—JERE SMITH, Kingston, N. Y.

Hunt's Remedy may save you $100 in doctor's bills—may save your life.

You can secure it from your Apothecary.

If you are offered a bottle of Salvation Oil, without wrapper, or mutilated or defaced, don't buy it at any price, you may be sure there is something wrong—it may be a worthless or dangerous counterfeit. Insist upon getting a perfect, unbroken, genuine package, in a yellow wrapper.

The funeral of the late Mrs. Sylvester B. Williams took place from her late residence on Lynnfield street Monday afternoon, and was attended by a large number of the friends of the deceased. Mrs. Williams died of pneumonia Saturday, after a short illness, at the age of 52 years.

The sale of tickets for the "Three On's and a Two" Fast eve ball, has been unusually large this year. A fine musical programme will be rendered by Reinwald's Eighth Regiment Band, before the dancing. Tickets for the concert are 25 cents—ball tickets $1.00. The catering will be done by J. W. Bond of Lynn.

As our readers pass down Essex street, they will be amply repaid for the time taken in examining the special Easter display in the store and windows of Almy, Bigelow & Washburn. A unique and picturesque design has been arranged which ornaments the western window. Large crowds are attracted to view this handiwork, which will be removed after Easter.

The grand spring millinery exhibition of W. G. Webber & Co., Essex and Washington streets, will be continued the coming week. The magnificent display comprises more than 100 choice patterns of hats and bonnets, among them some of the brightest ideas of the foremost Paris artists, as well as those of home product. Noticeable among the very many beautiful styles are pretty toques with crowns of fancy gilt beads, edging of fine laces, trimming of French lace bobs and velvet tie strings, large grey carriage hats trimmed with silver braid and oriental ornaments. One of the odd and stylish conceits to be seen is a small toque of ribbon in the new bluetie with bluetie to match and edged with French straw lace. A carriage hat with chip crown and Swiss lace is stylishly trimmed with ruching of lace and velvet ribbon, confined with soft roses in cameo pink. A jaunty hat for a miss in black Neapolitan trimmed with yellow polka dot ribbon and yellow narcissus, high butterfly bow on crown finishes the pretty effect. In the untrimmings goods the usual large and varied assortment of all the best and latest styles, from the leading manufacturers and importers, are being shown. The line of children's and infants' embroidered silk bonnets is simply superb, and all are marked at prices that have built up Messrs. Webber & Co.'s acknowledged large business.

At the adjourned meeting of the Trustees of Peabody Institute on Monday evening, the following committees were appointed: Finance Committee, H. F. Walker, Rufus H. Brown, O. B. Chadwick, John W. Hudson, J. Howard Fallon, P. H. O'Connor; Building Committee, George F. Barnes, Joseph F. Wiggins, Richard Barry; Burial Lot Committee, H. F. Walker, D. P. Grosvenor, John Shanahan. The following were elected members of the Lyceum and Library Committee, Willard G. Cook, A. H. Merrill, J. K. Cole, P. H. O'Connor, J. Henry Osgood, Thomas Carroll, George F. Barnes, F. E. Hobart, G. Fred Osgood, Frank Taylor, George A. Whitney and George C. Farrington. Messrs G. Fred Osgood, F. E. Hobart, and George F. Barnes are new members. Messrs Lyman P. Osborn, Leverett Poor and Charles F. Bushby retire from the service. The board passed a vote appropriating $3600 for the use of the Lyceum and Library Committee.

DANA'S IS GUARANTEED TO CURE.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL.

Next week, as a fitting celebration of the joyful Easter-tide, bright music and pretty voices, gay dresses and abundance of merriment will hold the Tremont Theatre stage. The well-known and highly popular coterie of artists, the J. C. DUFF OPERA COMPANY, will be here, and its stay is limited to the all too short season of one week. Heading the company is the most accomplished and attractive light opera artiste, Marie Tempest, than whom, no one has made for years in this city, in comic opera, a more enviable or justly high reputation. Her refined method, her eminent culture, both musically and dramatically, quickly won recognition here, and her performances afforded the rarest enjoyment. It is proposed during the week of the stay of the company to produce the well liked and favorite "Dorothy," and also to make a special production for the first time here by this company of "Carmen," either of which will fit charmingly the happy Easter days.

There will be a special matinee on Thursday afternoon, April 2, Fast Day, when the "Red Hussar" will be produced.

At the Grand Opera House, next week, commencing Monday, March 30, 1891, matinees Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday. Every evening at 7.45, and Monday matinee at 2, T. W. Robertson's glorious military drama, "Ours," interpreted by a company of celebrated artists. A full military band. New and elegant scenery and accessories. Magnificent uniforms, accoutrements, etc. Matinees Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday at 2, will be presented the favorite emotional drama, "East Lynne." The above productions will be under the immediate stage direction of Mr. H. M. Pitt. Tickets now on sale. Future attractions: Robert Downing in "The Gladiator." William Redmond and Mrs. Thomas Barry, in repertoire.

"Brass Monkey" has produced lots of fun at the Boston Theatre this week as it always does. Monday, George Thatcher's Minstrels will occupy the stage. The company comprises 45 artists, including the ever popular Charlie Reed, late of the "City Directory." A good entertainment is ensured by this company. Fast day there will be a matinee performance.

The "Aunt Jack" engagement at the Globe closes to-night. There will be three matinees next week. Fast day the "Still Alarm" will be given.

Next Saturday, beginning at 1 o'clock, the second Grand Operatic Festival will be given in Music Hall. It will be the grandest aggregation of artists ever assembled in Boston. Soprano soloists: Mile. Clementina De Vere, Mme. Kathinka Paulsen-White, Miss Laura M. Barnham (her first appearance) and Mrs. Arthur Nikisch. Contralto soloists: Mme. Clara Poole, Mme. Rosa Linde, Miss Minna Van Buren and Miss Gertrude Edmonds. Tenor soloists: Mr. Herbert Johnson, Mr. Wilhelm G. Heinrich and Mr. C. C. Ferguson. Baritone soloists: Sig. Del Puente and Sig. Giuseppe Campanari. Bass soloists: Mr. Myron W. Whitney and Dr. G. Rob Clark. Instrumentalists: Mr. Albert Van Raalte, violinist; Mr. B. L. Whelpley, pianist; Mr. Frank Lynes, organist, and Mr. Arthur Nikisch (accompanist for Mrs. Nikisch). Musical Director, Mr. Frank O. Nash. Grand Orchestra and Operatic Chorus. Conductor, Mr. John C. Mullaly. The program will include selections from "Zampa," "Herodiade," "Melstersinges," "Moses in Egypt," "Dinorah," "Orpheus," "Carmen," "The Prophet," "Traviata," "Il Puritani," "Cosi Fantutte," "Trovatore," "Norma," "Huguenots," "Martha," "Aida," "Rigoletto," "Son and Stranger," "L'Africaine," "Euchantress," "Semiramis," "Lucia." Those attending will receive elegant souvenir programmes. Tickets, with reserved seats, $1.50 and $1.00 each. Box office sale now open.

The Boston Museum curtain fell for the last time on "Sunlight and Shadow" last night. This evening's performance is a benefit for Mr. Charles Birron, "A Celebrated Case." Next week, "New Lamps for Old" will commence a run for which we predict a great success.

Fresh To-Day AND Dry To-Morrow.

A complaint often made about cakes and breads. This "peculiar dryness" is caused by the ammonia or alum in the baking powder.

The leavening power of Cleveland's Baking Powder is produced by cream of tartar and soda only, and food raised with it keeps moist and fresh for days.

Cleveland's is the only baking powder having this quality.

At the Hollis Street Theatre, Monday, Mr. Wm. H. Crane will appear in "The Senator." His engagement is limited.

E. E. Rice, Dixie's supporter, left San Francisco for Australia March 7.

George Washington Lederer's "U and I" appears at the Standard Theatre March 23.

"The Dazzler" is doing a large business on the road.

Sadie Martinot has not gone to Europe after all. She only wanted $800 a week to create a new part in one of the numerous farce-comedies.

Sam Harrison is soon to leave for Europe, where he goes to secure novelties for Russell's "City Directory."

Robert Graham, the bright particular star of "The Sea King," had his picture taken recently in the gorgeous raiment of Don Bimbola. It is said that the photographer has not quite recovered, and that Bob had to pay for a broken camera.

A play called "Gods and Men, or from Mount Olympus to Washington" was tried in Washington, D. C., recently. Its original is "Lumpaci Vagabondus," an old German play, and into this story the author, J. H. Pratt, introduced many well-known United States Senators. It failed to catch on in its present shape, and is to be rewritten and sent on the road.

Henry E. Dixey will play in New York for six weeks, beginning at the Grand Opera House in April. This is the first time in fifteen years that he comes to Gotham without E. E. Rice, and young Warburton will have to prance pretty lively to boom his star in the old fashioned way, which gave to "Adonis" the longest run ever given a play in America.

The rumors that Mrs. Carter will retire from the stage are not true. She closes her present season because she is tired, overworked and ill, but her time for next season is fully booked, and with a good play she is sure to be a money winner. Mr. E. D. Price will continue as her manager, and several of the company have been re-engaged.

"A chance come o'er the spirit of my dream." It is over a year since Henry Dixey smoked a cigar or "cracked a bottle."

Little Minnie Terry is to play Princess Elizabeth in Henry Irving's forthcoming production of "Charles I" in London.

A new comic opera to succeed "The Gondoliers" has been put in rehearsal at the Savoy in London, and, as usual, "it has not been named."

Sara Bernhardt has adopted a young New York girl whom she will send to Paris to be educated. She is said to be a very distant relative of the great tragedienne.

A French version of "The Rivals" is to be seen this year at the Paris Odeon.

The Marquis Giuliano Capranica del Grillo, husband of Adaldis Ristori, died recently in Italy.

The new opera in which De Wolf Hopper will be seen this summer at the Broadway Theatre, is called "Wang." The scene is laid in Siam.

Never have the publishers of the Magazine, the Weekly, the Bazar, or Young People lowered that high standard which was assumed in their first numbers. Modifications and improvements have, of course, followed, and to-day it is difficult to conceive how they could be bettered. The best-known writers at home and abroad contribute to these publications. For the proper presentation of subject, pictorially, leading artists furnish their designs to be translated by wood-cuts, or process, whichever method shows better the illustrative idea. A column enlogistic of these publications might be written, and would barely suffice to specify their many singular merits. It must be at least satisfactory to the publishers to know that where ever English is the language in use there a Magazine, a Weekly, a Bazar, or a Young People, bearing the imprint of Harper & Brothers, is read.

BRIEF NOTES.

Lieut. R. E. Perry, a civil engineer in the United States Navy, will start within a month on a tour of exploration in Greenland. His objective point is the Northeast Cape, the position and some facts about which scientific men and geographers are anxious to learn. The Government has given him eighteen months' leave of absence for the purpose.

Her Majesty's High Court of Justice, Queen's Bench Division, Monday, refused to grant a writ of habeas corpus to compel Mr. E. H. Jackson of Clitheroe to produce his wife in court. The Court held that if the woman was ill-treated she had a remedy in an application for protection, which she could make before a Magistrate. This is the woman who was abducted by her husband.

Representative Breckinridge of Kentucky, who suffered from a slight attack of grippe in Florida, continues to improve rapidly. It appears that the report of his serious illness was an exaggeration of the facts.

Malcom Khan, formerly Persian Ambassador at London, has been deprived of his titles, honors and rank.

Mr. W. Mackay Laffau of the New York Sun bought a jadeite jar for $4400 at the Ives sale. And yet there are people who talk about "the poor newspaper man."

The death of Dr. Windthorst, the Parliamentary leader of the Catholic party in Prussia, removed one of Bismarck's most formidable adversaries, and the great Chancellor, should he return to Parliament, will almost feel lost without the continual interruptions from the fiery little man, who for so many years has opposed him on every possible occasion with the sharp bodkin of his wit.

Geo. W. Smalley has returned to London and resumed his correspondence with the New York Tribune. He has been recovering in the south of France from a severe illness.

The Poundmaster at Oakland sold at auction for $12 an estray horse that proved to be a thoroughbred trotter, valued at $4000.

Recent observations with the Lick telescope of the shadow of one of Jupiter's moons are said to show that the tiny moon itself is double.

Representative Springer of Illinois is seriously ill at his residence in Washington suffering from an attack of nervous prostration, supplemented by a severe case of the grip. He was somewhat stronger last night.

The greatest strike in gold ore which has been made in California in recent years has just occurred in San Bernardino county. The vein of gold is six inches wide, and the rock assay is $20,000 to the ton. If this does not prove to be a pocket, the find will lead into an immense sum.

The Southern Citrus Fair at Los Angeles, in California, brought thousands of visitors to that city last week and proved a great success. One hundred thousand oranges were displayed, most of them of a very fine quality. The entire exhibit is now to be transferred to San Francisco.

Stanley as a Lecturer.

Henry M. Stanley is a failure as a lecturer. This is due entirely to the newspapers, that have long since printed all about his heroic plunge into the heart of Africa, and also all he has said about the plunge. Americans read newspapers, know all he will say, and refuse to give up a hard-earned dollar for a "chestnut." People that go, do so to see, and not to hear, the great explorer.—Indianapolis News.

A Wonderful Memory.

The following anecdote of Mozart shows that he must have been a born musician.

When fourteen years old he heard in Rome the 'Miserere of Allegri,' and knowing that it was forbidden to take or give a copy of this famous piece, he paid such attention to the music that when he reached home he noted down the entire piece. He was enabled a few days afterward to check the copy, when he found he had not made a single mistake. The next day he produced such a sensation in Rome by singing the 'Miserere' at a concert that Pope Clement XIV requested that he should be presented to him. Thus, by his wonderful memory, he was enabled to begin with success his musical career.—New York Ledger.

The Shoe and Leather Market.

From the producers' standpoint the condition of the leather and shoe trade cannot be considered encouraging. The cost of manufacturing in both branches of the industry is increasing rather than diminishing the prices of the product in each are not perceptibly appreciating. While that state of things continues, the profit must at best be light and the traffic languid. The start-off at the beginning of the year was rather propitious. The tanners especially were buying raw material at fairly low rates, and the manufactured article had reached such a stage of decline that it was not only not believed there could be any further descent, but anticipations were indulged in that some little reactions would set in after the shoe manufacturers all got to work making fall goods. But evidently this feeling of hopefulness was entertained more strongly by the tanners than by the shoe manufacturers. The former evinced their faith by extensive purchases of hides; their operations on that line presaged an increased production of leather; consequently, two adverse influences conspired to mar their fortunes—free buying put the prices of hides up; the prospect of excessive supplies tended to keep the prices of leather down, and between this Scylla and Charybdis it has been an exceedingly difficult matter to navigate safely. There is no lack of business; there are larger sales of all sorts of commodities in our line than there ever were before. But there are a great many people competing for the trade, and the supplies are sufficiently abundant to render it necessary for holders to get up early and sit up late to dispose of what they produce with satisfactory dispatch and at remunerative rates.—Shoe and Leather Reporter.

England has more women workers than any other country, in proportion to population; twelve per cent. of the industrial classes are women.

A grain of fine sand would cover one hundred of the minute scales of the human skin, and yet each of these scales in turn covers from 300 to 500 pores.

From 90,000 to 120,000 hairs grow in a human scalp.

Nine hundred and fifty submarine telegraph cables are now in operation, most of them in Europe; their total length is over 90,000.

There are about 105 women to every 100 men; one-quarter of the population of the world die before the age of seventeen years; only one in a thousand lives to be 100 years old, and only six in a thousand reach seventy-five.

A German biologist says that the two sides of a face are never alike; in two cases out of five the eyes are out of line; one eye is stronger than the other in seven persons out of ten, and the right ear is generally higher than the left.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Probate Court.

Wills of the following persons were proved on Monday: William T. Colby of Amesbury; Mary J. Sweetser, Newburyport; Eliza W. Upham, Concord, N. H.; George S. Walker, Newburyport.

There were nine administrations granted.

Inventories of the following estates were filed: Martha A. Bishop, Lynn, $6438 15; Levi Brackett, Gloucester, $6779.51; Daniel Flagg, Lynn, $14,783 39; William Lord, Ipswich, $184.89; Abram S. McIntire, Lynn, $3798.69; Emily F. Raymond, Andover, $2000; David Cummings Richardson, Lawrence, $40,832 15; Daniel Townsend, Lynn, $2539.

The will of Eliza W. Upham of Concord, N. H., contains bequests of $40 to the New Hampshire Female Cent Society, and $20 to the Concord Charitable Society, both to make relatives life members. The oil painting of the father of the testatrix and an oil painting of her husband are left to the New Hampshire Historical Society.

MISERY--HAPPINESS.

A Story Which Will Interest Thousands.

NO APPETITE—DISGUST FOR FOOD. Did you ever know a good natured dyspeptic?

On the contrary, are they not always irritable, cross, blue, discouraged, depressed in mind, always looking on the dark side of everything, and allowing trifles to irritate or annoy them?

For good, wholesome geniality, for good-natured enjoyment of the world, for exalted aims and high ambitions, for all that makes life worth living, look to the person who eats well and has a good digestion and assimilation.

The human body, notwithstanding its intricacy, is a machine, and if any of its organs are out of order the system languishes. Good health means good digestion.

"Good digestion waits on appetite, And health on both."

You, therefore, who suffer from spring debility, loss of appetite, indigestion and dyspepsia, who cannot eat because food distresses you, who have risings of gas, faintness, sinking and gnawing at the pit of the stomach, swelling or bloating, who have malaria and are bilious, with dizzy, dull-feeling head,

Would Eat But Fears The Food Will Distress Him.

bad taste in the mouth mornings, and feel dispirited, lack your old-time energy, are depressed in mind and miserable in body, remember that it is your stomach and weakened nerves which cause all your difficulties. If there is one thing written above another in the world's happiness, if there is one gift without which life is a wretchedness of blackest misery, and with which all the blessings of life teeming with its million joys and pleasures are at command, that gift is good digestion.

How to get it is the great question—so many things have been tried without avail. But there is one remedy which never fails, and that is that greatest of all stomach medicines, Dr. Greene's Nervura. If you have not tried this wonderful remedy which so quickly and completely tones up the condition and regulates the action of the stomach and bowels, assists digestion and aids assimilation, do so at once and good appetite, perfect digestion and sound health will be Perfect Digestion by yours. It is purely Dr. Greene's Nervura vegetable and harmless, and is for sale by all druggists at $1.00 per bottle.

How Any One Can Have Good Digestion.

Close attention to business and excessive use of tobacco made my nerves very weak and badly deranged my stomach. I had an extreme tired feeling and could not eat or sleep naturally. I take pleasure in stating that Dr. Greene's Nervura has completely cured me.

JAMES FOSTER,

15 Dorrance St., Providence, R. I.

Dr. Greene, of 84 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., his discoverer, is the famous specialist in the cure of nervous and chronic diseases. The doctor has devoted special attention to the treatment of all forms of chronic diseases through letter correspondence, and will give by mail his opinion and advice in any case free of charge. The perfection of this system renders a complete cure almost assured as his success in treatment by correspondence was wonderful and unequalled.

N. B. Send for symptom blank to fill out, or write Dr. Greene about your case, and a carefully considered letter, fully explaining your disease and giving you a perfect understanding of all its symptoms will be returned free of charge.

The next time you think of doing a mean trick, think of it in this way:

"While I am doing that fellow a mean trick, I may be able to earn an extra dollar. The mean trick I do will make him hate me, and he will in time get even. Wouldn't it be wiser to attend to my own business? Or, if I have spare time, why not do the fellow a favor? He would no doubt appreciate it, and pay it back some day."

Before doing wrong, remember that it will not be as easy to convince the people that you were justified as it was to convince yourself.

DELICATE LADIES!

Who have that tired and all-gone feeling, and don't like to be disturbed, will continue to be troubled with this complaint until they renew their impure blood. Sulphur Bitters will cause new and pure blood to course through every artery and vein in the human system. See another column.

Descendants of Revolutionary Heroes.

The Massachusetts Society of the American Revolution, which embraces its membership all male descendants, however remote, of soldiers, sailors and recognized patriots who rendered service in the struggle for independence, has enrolled the names of twenty one "own sons" of soldiers who served during 1775 to 1783. The oldest of these, Oliver Lawrence Wheeler, of Ashby, Mass., is 96 years and 7 months old, and the youngest, Elbridge G. Snow, of Fitchburg, is fifty-six. This list of "own sons" is in excess of combined lists from all other States. A society of female descendants will soon be organized in Massachusetts. It is estimated that there are more than one hundred thousand descendants in Massachusetts, and the Registrar of the society, L. L. Tarbell, of 279 Columbus Avenue, Boston, will send an interesting document to all such who will favor him with their address.

Asphalt Substitute.

Germany possesses no quarries or bituminous lime stone suitable for street pavements. The chemists of that country have often tried to find an artificial substitute, but never succeeded. The compositions lacked the necessary strength and elasticity, although every possible combination of lime-stone and bitumen was tried.

Herr Busse, a chemist of Linden, near Hanover, noticed that all artificial asphalts lacked certain gummy oils existing in the natural stone. This led him to experiment on mixtures of finely powdered stone with these oils, with the result of producing a material, said to be very similar to natural asphalt.

The material is claimed to be absolutely impervious to the action of the weather. At the Government testing bureau, at Charlottenburg, the compressive strength was found to be about 2,300 pounds per square inch. In some experiments in Hanover, it was found that a layer of the material, 2 inches thick, would stand a pressure of 5,970 pounds per square inch. The difference between this figure and that just given, is probably due to the fact that the Government tests were made on centimeter cubes. About 500 square yards were laid in Hanover, in the summer of 1887; this surface has worn so well, that 1,670 square yards are now being laid in that city. Berlin, Hamburg and Cologne, have begun series of tests also.

The compound is laid in a similar manner to asphalt. For streets, a concrete foundation, 8 inches thick, is laid, and on this, enough of the hot powder is spread, to leave a 2-inch layer when well rolled.

The cost of this pavement is not given, and, as the Schweizerische Bauzeitung, to which we are indebted for these notes, states, the new invention must not only be serviceable, but also as cheap as the natural asphalts, in order to compete with them.

TID-BITS.

A little more of the old fashioned mixture of sulphur and molasses, and a little less of new fangled medicine with long names, is what the people need at this time of the year.

A man is usually his weakest when he talks of a new baby at his house. It is fortunate that women do not hear the men talk down town about the new babies.

The time is coming, strong minded women say, when every woman will wear a dress on the street that only comes to her knees. The women who are painfully thin will have time to diet themselves and get fat before that dreadful time gets here.

For the girls: the men do not mean half the nice things that they say to you. You laugh when other girls are flattered by them, but you are like other girls if you believe or remember compliments men pay you. There is a sincerity in the compliment of the man who seldom pays them. But remember, the more apt and graceful a man is at saying nice things, the more evident it is that he has been practicing them on other girls.

A woman never makes a greater mistake than when she corrects her husband in the presence of others. He may take it good naturedly, but he resents it in his heart. Men, like babies, should be taken off alone to be "talked" to.

The architecture of churches and public buildings of all kinds, is wrong. A woman has to turn her head around every time any one comes in. She does not look pretty when she does it, and is in danger of dislocating her neck. The doors should be built facing the audience.

It makes no difference how stylish you are in this world, you will have to put up with a very old-fashioned heaven in the next.

Every man has a scheme to work. If a man drops into the scheme you are working, it is done so that he may get you to drop into his.

EGGS BY MACHINERY.

A PLAN TO MAKE THEM BETTER AND CHEAPER THAN HENS CAN.

What the Manufactured Article Contains. How the Ingredients Are Secured—The Making of the Shell Is Really a Delicate Piece of Work.

Patents have been granted to James Storrey, of Kansas City, for the manufacture of eggs.

All the necessary machinery, which is not worth more than $500 at the outset, is in readiness to begin this overwhelming competition with the American men. If as much success attends the new venture as is anticipated by Mr. Storrey, the contest between the machine and the hen for supremacy in the egg producing business will be short, with the victory to the credit of the former.

Mr. Storrey's process is very simple, and yet he is prepared to manufacture an artificial egg that a connoisseur will find it difficult to distinguish either in appearance or taste from the prime product of a Plymouth Rock or Leghorn.

Lime, water, blood, milk, tallow, peas and one or two other vegetables are the ingredients of his compound. The shell and the yolk will not be difficult of manufacture. To make a good imitation of the "white" of the egg is the part that has required the most ingenuity to conquer, but Mr. Storrey has succeeded in solving the problem successfully.

MAKING THE YOLK.

The yolk of an egg is composed of 80 per cent. of yellow fat, 14 per cent. of caseine, about 3 per cent. albumen and water. The fat is common animal fat, and beef fat, which is very cheap, will be the chief ingredient. To this a liberal amount of caseine, which is that portion of the milk which produces butter and cheese, will be added, and albumen mainly from beef blood, together with water, will be mixed in small quantities. The color, already a yellow, will be treated with a chemical which will serve a double purpose of deepening the color and preserving the mixture in a semi-liquid state until it is cooked.

The "white" of the egg is about one-eighth pure albumen, and is a difficult substance to produce chemically. A substance that appears to the eye exactly similar, and which hardens and whitens when cooked, has been produced by a mixture of legumin, or vegetable albumen, extracted from common peas, and which forms one-fourth of the peas, a little albumen from beef blood, a trifle of sulphur, considerable gelatine and a chemical solution to prevent rapid decomposition, and which also whitens the whole bulk when subjected to heat, just as the egg becomes white when boiled.

As beef blood will be utilized in very large quantities in the big egg mill, a few special cars will be fitted up with tanks to bring the blood from the Chicago slaughter houses.

MAKING THE SHELL.

The shell will be perfectly imitated by a simple solution of lime, water and glue. The machinery that is required is needed mainly in putting the egg together. Every yolk will be first run into a mold to be properly shaped, and then dumped into a second mold, where the right quantity of the white is placed previously. This latter substance, being a gelatine like matter, will incase the yolk very readily. By a unique machine the meat is there enveloped in the shell.

The shell is only partially hardened when the egg is put into it, and as there is a liberal amount of glue added to the lime, the edges of the shell soon adhere to each other very tightly, leaving no traceable mark where they were joined. In order to make the imitation more completely successful, molds of several sizes will be introduced, making the eggs vary in bulk as do the products of any respectable flock of hens. The color of the shell will also be of two or three shades, rendering the likeness to the original still more striking.

Tests have been made which show that the artificial egg can be preserved for a month under proper conditions, and still taste as fresh as one laid by an ordinary hen. As all the ingredients of this reform egg are exceedingly cheap, it can be manufactured at the rate of about three cents a dozen. There will be no limit to the capacity of the novel mill, and families and boarding house keepers can be supplied in any quantities at prices so dazzlingly small as to warrant immediate popularity.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Strange Wants.

They must have a strange herd of sheep in New Zealand, where a settler announced that he wanted "an industrious man to take charge of 3,000 sheep who could talk Spanish." He must have been related to the young lady who announced "that she could do all kinds of sewing and embroidery except music." A western "ad." reads: "Wanted an energetic young man for a retail store partly out of doors, partly behind the counters." A contemporary asks what will be the result when the door is shut.—Providence Journal.

A Share in a Jewel.

There is a story told of a French savant who was shown a priceless jewel by a great duke.

"Thank you, my lord duke," said the man of science, "for allowing me to share with you the possession of so great a treasure."

"In what way?" said the duke.

"Why, your grace can do no more than look at it, and you have allowed me to do the same."—All the Year Round.

Miss Passee (playfully)—A gift from my very first sweetheart, Mr. Repplier, when I was only 15.

Mr. Repplier (with polite interest)—Indeed! That is quite the oldest crib board I ever saw—that is—er—I mean.—West Shore.

Spring Carpets.

A house is carpeted to its furniture, papered to its carpets, and furnished with due regard for its carpets and paper.

We are abreast with the highest art in correct house furnishing, in carpets, furniture and (latest departure) wall paper.

But carpets are the subject of today's store news. For our spring stock is complete and magnificent, and is eager to be seen and known.

For the front hall or vestibule:

Neat figured Brussels is best. The Agra carpets, with which we had such excellent success last season, are less costly, and nearly as pretty. Art Kensingtons and ingrains are also capital—and looming has gotten to such a point that they almost equal body Brussels in pattern and durability. Mats of all kinds.

For the drawing room, parlor, library, reception room and dining room:

Axminsters, Moquettes, Brussels, mostly with matching borders. More modest in cost is the tapestry, and a good grade of this is superior to a poor Brussels. All these, together with the less costly sorts, we have in royal abundance, and many an exclusive design. Luxurious rugs of every make, both foreign and domestic.

For the chamber:

Here taste and purse decide. For all are proper. But at this season the correct thing is a straw matting. Our first invoice is already here, and inspection will show them to be prettier than ever, and fully as cheap as last year, when the lowest prices ruled.

Catarrh Cannot be Cured

with local applications, as they cannot reach the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure it you have to take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, and acts on the blood and mucous surfaces. Hall's Catarrh Cure is no quack medicine. It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years, and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surfaces. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing catarrh. Send for testimonials free.

"For God is my King of old, working Salvation in the midst of the earth." — Ps. 74: 12

The Schools of Methods whereby the enforcement of the scientific temperance instruction law is to be aided, have been successfully carried out during the last two weeks at the railroad centres of the different sections of the state. The importance of having the law enforced has been the keynote of the meetings. A large part of each day has been devoted to an imitation school board meeting, every objection ever known to have been made by a school committeeman has been presented and discussed, and the methods which must be taken to secure the enforcement of the law in all sections of the state have been fully considered. Much information has been given and the women of the W. C. T. U. thoroughly enthused to see that school boards do not delay action. A great uplifting of temperance instruction among the young must be the result.

Miss Willard lately prophesied in The Independent concerning the next ten years of temperance effort, "The last decade of 1800 can be confidently expected to put upon the statute book of every State the scientific temperance instruction laws already secured by the W. C. T. U. in all the territories and in every State but ten. This will provide for twelve million of children in our land, of foreign as well as of native parentage, schools in which they will learn a 'Thus saith reason, thus saith nature, thus saith chemistry, physiology, and hygiene in favor of total abstinence from alcohol, tobacco, and all other narcotics.' Besides this laws requiring that physical training be introduced into the public schools may be expected to prevail throughout the nation."

Miss Willard called upon the members of the W. C. T. U. to contribute, during the ten days commencing with Washington's Birthday, a fund to the national treasury which should come from the voluntary sacrifice of some comfort or luxury by each one, the sum raised to be known as the "self denial fund." The members of the Peabody union are requested to send the amount so contributed to Miss Floyd or Miss J. Buxton, treasurer, by next Friday.

The removal by death from earthly scenes, on last Sunday, of Rev. S. P. Smith and Mr. William A. Osborne, two "tried and true" friends of the cause and this organization, has caused a universal pang of sorrow to be felt in the ranks. Their memory will be cherished for many a year.

Down South, since the National Convention, even the birds have taken up the song, "The Saloons must go." A parrot on a veranda near the church where the children rehearsed their "Marching Songs" for the convention, caught the patriotic refrain, and still sings to passersby, "Saloons, saloons, saloons must go-o."

One of the leading questions to be discussed by the order of "The Catholic Knights" at their annual meeting, which convenes in May at Philadelphia, will be, "shall liquor form a link between the church and the saloon." The issue has been already raised by Bishop Ireland, of Minnesota, who discommences the use of wines at Catholic church gatherings.

The W. C. T. U. School of methods, just closed in Atlanta, Ga., was a great success in spite of the pouring rain, which prevented night sessions. The day meetings were well attended, resulting in many accessions to the union. Mrs. Gov. Northern is one of the new members. The Atlanta women are ambitious to send two delegates from the city to the National convention in Boston next fall. To do so, their paid membership must reach one thousand.

WINDSOR, ME., Oct. 1, 1890.

DANA SANSAPARILLA CO.:

Gentlemen: I am now sixty-four years of age, and have been failing rapidly for several years. Disagreeable noises in my head gave me no rest. My memory failed me, until I could not remember the common occurrences about my work for TEN MINUTES AT A TIME. I lost strength very fast, until I seemingly had no strength. I would have to sit down several times while washing my dishes. After reading your strong testimonials I decided to try DANA'S SANSAPARILLA. I have taken three bottles. The noises in my head ceased, before I had taken one bottle. My STRENGTH HAS RETURNED so I do my work without fatigue. I have a good appetite, sleep well nights, and my MEMORY HAS RETURNED, for all of which I am very thankful, and know that the praise belongs to DANA'S SANSAPARILLA.

Yours truly,

MARY A. ALBEE.
